I Ashley Cowper, Clerk of Parliaments, by virtue of the Writ of our said Lord the King of Certiorari to me directed, and to these Presents annexed, do certify, That what is above written is the true Tenor of the Act of Parliament aforesaid in that Writ expressed. In Witness whereof, to this Schedule I have set my Seal, and subscribed my Name. Dated the Ninth Day of February, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, and in the Year of our Lord One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-six.

ASHLEY COWPER,

Plea of } AND now (that is to say) upon Thursday next after the John Murray. } Octave of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, before our said present Sovereign Lord the King at Westminster, cometh the said John Murray in the said Act named, under the Custody of the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, by virtue of his Majesty's Writ of Habeas Corpus ad Subiiciendum, &c. into whose Custody he the said John Murray had been before committed, upon the Account aforesaid, being brought to the Bar here in his own proper Person, who is committed by the Court to the said Lieutenant of the said Tower of London, charged as a Person attainted of High-Treason by virtue of the said Act: And being asked by the Court here, at the Instance of Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney-General of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, who, for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, in this behalf prosecuteth, If he the said John Murray hath, or knoweth of, any thing to say for himself, why the Court here should not proceed to award Execution against him thereupon, he the said John Murray, for Plea, saith, That it is very true, that he is one of the Persons in the said Act named and intended; to wit, The Person therein designed and described by the Name, Title, and Addition, of John Murray of Broughton, Esquire, against whom, with the rest of the Persons therein named, designed, and described, the said Act was made, passed, and intended, for and on account of the High-Treason therein mentioned, and thereby supposed to have been committed against our said present Sovereign Lord the King: But, for further Plea, he saith, That, long before the Twelfth Day of July in the said Act mentioned; to wit, Upon the Twenty-eighth Day of June then last past, he the said John Murray, at the City of Edinburgh, in the Shire of Edinburgh, did, in due Manner, and according to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Sense, Intent, and Meaning of the said Act, render himself to the Right Honourable Andrew Fletcher, Esquire, Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland, being one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace in the said Act mentioned and intended for that Purpose (he the said Andrew Fletcher having then and there full Power and Authority, by virtue of the said Act, to admit him the said John Murray to make such Render of himself to him the said Andrew Fletcher, as aforesaid); and that he the said John Murray was, upon the said Twenty-eighth Day of June, in consequence of such Render, as aforesaid, committed by him the said Andrew Fletcher to Prison, for and on account of the said High-Treason, according to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Sense, Intent, and Meaning, of the said Act; and that he, the said John Murray hath, ever since his said Render and Commitment, as aforesaid, until now, remained and continued, and still doth remain and continue, a close Prisoner, upon the Account aforesaid; and this he is ready to verify and prove, as the Court shall award: With this further, That at the Time of his said Render and Commitment, as aforesaid, he the said John Murray was, and ever since hath been, and yet is, willing and desirous to take his Tryal, and submit himself to Justice, pursuant to the Directions, and agreeable to the true Sense, Intent, and Meaning of the said Act.

Confession of the } AND the said Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney General } General of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, who, for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, in this behalf prosecuteth, having heard and considered the said Plea of him the said John Murray, by him now pleaded in Form aforesaid, he the said Attorney General for our said present Sovereign Lord the King saith, That he doth not in any wise deny any of the Matters in the said Plea alleged; but doth now here in Court, for and on behalf of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and by the special Order and Command of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, admit and confess the same to be in all respects true: Whereupon it is considered and adjudged by the said Court here, That the said Plea of him the said John Murray, for him so above pleaded, as aforesaid, and also the said Confession of the said Attorney General by him so made of the said Plea, as aforesaid, be recorded; and that he the said John Murray be remanded to the said Tower of London, under the Custody of the said Lieutenant, to be by him there kept in safe Custody, until he shall be from thence discharged by due Course of Law.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Murray may now be sworn.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I desire Leave to falsify the Record, and to prove, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, what the noble Lord at the Bar now insists upon, is, that he shall be at Liberty to falsify the Record, by shewing, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself according to the Act of Parliament; but I must submit it to your Lordships, that there is no Ground whatsoever to admit the Prisoner to go into that Kind of Evidence; because this is a Record, which, according to the known Rules of Proceeding, cannot be falsified, since it is a Proof of a Thing transacted in a Court of Justice, before whom it was properly cognizable, and who alone, in this Part of the United Kingdom, could hear it, and had Power to record it; and I therefore must insist, that it is out of the Power of any Person whatsoever to contradict that Record.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, the Managers insist, that it appearing by Matter of Record, that Mr. Murray did surrender himself according to the Act of Parliament, that Matter cannot now be falsified.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I must beg, that, since it is a Point of Law, your Lordships will be pleased to hear my Counsel to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to its being a Question of Law, whether the noble Lord at the Bar shall be at Liberty to produce Witnesses to falsify that Record; to be sure, my Lords, it is a Question of Law, because it cannot be said to be a Question of Fact; but it does not follow as a Consequence, because the noble Lord at the Bar says, that he has a Point of Law to submit to your Lordship, that therefore your Lordships should permit his Counsel to argue it: For it is still in your Lordships Judgment, whether you have any Doubt concerning it; and it is apprehended, that this is too plain a Case to admit of any Doubt with your Lordships; and therefore that you will not permit Counsel to argue it, as the Consequence can only be Delay; and an Indulgence of this Kind, in Matters of no Doubt, would put it in the Power of a Prisoner to protract his Tryal, and keep your Lordships sitting as long as he pleased.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to have it clearly understood, what it is that the noble Lord at the Bar insists upon; whether it be to prove, by Witnesses, that Mr. Murray was not in Custody within the Time prescribed by this Act of Parliament; or that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself, and submit to Justice within that Time.

Lord Lovat. I put it upon that strict Word, that he did not surrender himself.

L. H. S. Lord Lovat, does your Lordship desire to be heard by your Counsel to that Point?

Lord Lovat. Yes.

Mr. Forrester. My Lords, it would ill become me, in the Station of Counsel for the noble Lord at the Bar, to decline arguing any Point which he thinks may be of Service to him. The Question now made by the noble Lord is singly this; Whether he shall be at Liberty to adduce Witnesses, viva voce, to falsify the Contents of this Record? that is, to prove that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by the Act; which being closely connected to the former Objection, I can at present, and until I have Time to consider the Question, do little else but what would be extremely indecent in me, repeat a great Part of what I troubled your Lordships with in the Morning, and which is now over-ruled. But, my Lords, the debating this Point may lead to the Consideration of another, and indeed a very material one; which is, Whether Evidence of his being taken Prisoner by the King's Forces will make it a Surrender within the legal Construction of the Act of Parliament, so as to warrant his Plea, and the Attorney General's Confession contained in the Record? And this I shall, in Point of Law, beg Leave to deny, upon the Authority of Lord Duffus's Case, and several other Cases. Your Lordships are to determine, whether we shall be heard to these Points or not: But, if I am at Liberty to speak to them, as they are both Questions of great Difficulty, I must beg some further Time for preparing myself, and laying my Thoughts together; since, at this Hour of the Night, and unprepared as I am, it is impossible to argue them so fully as my Duty requires, as the noble Lord has a Right to expect from me, and as your Lordships have a Right to expect Matters to be debated at your Bar.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am so very weak and infirm, and have been obliged, in order to attend in Obedience to your Lordships Commands, for two Days together, to be up by Three o'Clock in the Morning; I must therefore beg, that your Lordships will indulge me with a later Hour, and some Respite; otherwise I shall die at your Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I did apprehend, from what the noble Lord at the Bar said, that the Point he wanted to submit to your Lordships was, Whether he should not be at Liberty to bring Witnesses to prove, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Meaning of the Act? But something has dropt since from the Prisoner's Counsel, as if they meant to shew, that Mr. Murray did not, in Fact, surrender, but was taken Prisoner before the Time given by the Act to surrender; and that this would not, in Point of Law, be a Surrender within the Act. My Lords, that is a Question totally different from the former. It is one Question, Whether he may be admitted to prove, that he did not surrender according to the Act of Parliament? and another, What would be the legal Effect of his being apprehended previous to the Time appointed? They are two intirely distinct Questions; and whether they shall be admitted to argue the former, is now for your Lordships Consideration; but as to the latter, it is a Matter subsequent, and not now to be considered.

Then the Duke of Newcastle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lord High Steward went back to his Chair; and the House was adjourned accordingly.

The Lords and others went back in the same Order as before; and the House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament, after Debate,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Tryal of the said Lord Lovat To-morrow at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon: And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Elst and Mr. Thynne, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon To-morrow.

Wednesday, the 11th of March, 1746.

The THIRD DAY.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on Monday last, into Westminster-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Manner as before: and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, your Lordship thought fit Yesterday to insist upon it, that, notwithstanding the Record, produced by the Managers for the House of Commons, of Mr. John Murray of Broughton's having surrendered himself within the Time, and according to the Terms prescribed by an Act of Parliament made in the 19th Year of his Majesty's Reign, your Lordship should be permitted to give Evidence, by Witnesses viva voce, that Mr. Murray did not surrender himself within the Time prescribed by that Act. To this Kind of Evidence the Managers for the House of Commons objected, because, as they alledged, it was giving Evidence to contradict a Fact which was verified by a Record of the highest Nature; and that therefore you should not be permitted to enter into such Proof: Whereupon you desired, that your Counsel might be heard to that Matter, as a Point or Question of Law. Against this the Managers thought fit to object, that it was no Doubt or Question of Law at all; that the Law of the Land was full, and clear, and settled in this Point; and that therefore your Lordship ought not to be heard by your Counsel to it. The House has taken all these Matters into Consideration, in the Chamber of Parliament; and hath come to the following Resolution, with which they have directed me to acquaint you; and it is this, That the Counsel for the Lord Lovat be not permitted to argue, that Parol Evidence should be received to prove, that John Murray of Broughton did not surrender himself according to the Act made in the last Session of Parliament in that behalf, in Contradiction to the Record of the Court of King's-Bench, produced by the Managers for the Commons.

The Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: Which was done.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, we now desire that Mr. Murray of Broughton may be sworn.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I did object against Mr. Murray's being examined as a Witness: Your Lordships have been pleased to over-rule that Objection, and I now submit, that Mr. Murray may be examined, if you please.

John Murray called in, and sworn.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I desire to ask Mr. Murray some Questions for the sake of forming my own Judgment in the Matter; but if it is improper that they should be asked, I submit it to your Lordships.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the ordinary Method of proceeding in these Cases is, that where a Witness is produced, he is to be sworn in Chief, unless there be some Objection to his Competency; and then he is to be sworn upon a Vowre Dire. After he is sworn in Chief, the Party, who produces him, asks him such Questions as he thinks proper; after which the other Party is at Liberty to cross-examine him either to the Matter of Fact concerning which he has been examined, or any other Matter whatsoever, that shall tend to impeach his Credit, or weaken his Testimony; provided the Questions that are asked him, are such as the Law allows: So in this Court, after the Managers have produced any Witness, and have finished their Examination of him, the Prisoner has Liberty to ask him whatever Questions are proper; and it is most regular, that, after both Sides have gone through with their Examinations of the Witness, any of your Lordships should ask him what Questions you shall judge proper.

Mr. Noel. Mr. Murray, you will be pleased to attend to the Questions that shall be asked you. Give your Answers distinctly, and raise your Voice as much as you can, that my Lords may hear you.---My Lords, the first Thing I desire of this Witness is, that he may give your Lordships an Account when was the first Time that he heard of any Invitation to the Son of the Pretender to come into Scotland, and from whom he heard it.

Mr. Murray. My Lords, to the best of my Remembrance, in the Month of February, 1741-2, when I was at Edinburgh, I had there Occasion to see my Lord Traquair, who told me that there were several Gentlemen, to the best of my Memory, the Prisoner at your Lordship's Bar, my Lord Perth, my Lord John Drummond, Sir James Campbell of Achenbrack, and Mr. John Stuart Brother to Lord Traquair, had employed one Drummond of Bochalzie to go from Scotland to Rome, to assure the Pretender of their Zeal for his Service; and that they would be ready and willing, as soon as sufficient Assistance could be had from France, to appear publicly in Arms for him: And, at the same Time, he said, that he had given Drummond a Memorial signed by those Persons, I think

Seven

Seven of them in Number, to Cardinal Fleury, expressing their Attachment to the Pretender, and desiring him to procure Assistance from the Court of France; and at the same Time this Drummond carried with him a List of all the People, that, by those Gentlemen, were supposed to be ready and willing to join in the Pretender's Service.

Lord Lovat, interrupting,

MY Lords, Your Lordships will be pleased to consider, that what this Gentleman says, is only Hearsay Evidence, which should not be admitted before your Lordships, as it gives you a bad Impression of a Man. I am now trying for my Life and Fortune, and hope your Lordships will consider it.

Mr. Neill. My Lords, I am so far from differing from the noble Lord at the Bar in this respect, that I did understand the Witness was speaking only what he had heard from my Lord Traquair.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the Managers do know and desire, that your Lordships will distinguish between Evidence that does, and Evidence that does not affect the Prisoner at the Bar. The Witness was giving an Account by way of Introduction; which will be material for your Lordships Consideration. I beg leave to say, it is impossible for a Witness, in his giving an Account of a Transaction, to speak nothing but Words that alone will affect the Prisoner; and therefore This, though it does not affect the Prisoner, may be proper to introduce That, which he has to say, that may affect him. What he now says, is only giving an Account of a Plot or Conspiracy entered into by several Persons, which did afterwards bring on the Rebellion.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Managers do admit, that what has been hitherto said by the Witness under Examination does not affect you; and they desire now to offer it only as Evidence of a Conspiracy in general, which, if they do not apply to your Lordship by particular Evidence, will not affect you.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, As I said before, it gives a bad Impression.

Lord Coke. My Lords, I apprehend, that we are right in going into this Kind of Evidence; because, in the Preamble to our Articles of Impeachment, we set forth the general Conspiracy.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, What has hitherto been said, is not Evidence against the noble Lord at the Bar; and God forbid that he should be affected by any thing that is not strictly Evidence against him! And therefore it is fit, that the View with which the Evidence is offered should be fully understood. The Preamble to the Articles of Impeachment asserts, That, ever since the Breaking out of the War, and particularly in 1743, many Persons have plotted and conspired with the Enemy, to procure an Invasion of this Kingdom by a Foreign Force, and to raise a Rebellion at Home. The first Article charges Lord Lovat to have been one of those Conspirators. It is necessary, therefore, by general Evidence, to shew, that there have been such Plots and Conspiracies as the Commons assert, and then to affect the noble Lord at the Bar, by proper Evidence, with being concerned in those Plots. This Method of Proceeding is not new, but the established Course. Upon the Impeachment of the Lord Viscount Stafford, a general Evidence was given of the Conspiracy, which was declared not to affect him, but as introductory only. The like was done upon the Trials at Law of the Persons accused of having been in the same Plot. The same Method was allowed as proper, and liable to no just Objection, in many Trials after the Revolution. In the Reign of the late King, upon the Trial of Lyster, the like Method was pursued: General Evidence was given of a Plot which did not directly affect him. I dare answer for the Gentlemen who manage this Prosecution, that no one of us will urge against the noble Lord any thing which is not brought home to him by strict and legal Proof: If we should, he is safe in your Lordships Judgment, which will distinguish general from particular Evidence.

Then the Witness was directed to go on with his Narrative.

Mr. Murray. My Lords, I mentioned to your Lordships, That at the same Time that Drummond went over to Paris, he carried with him a List of all the Gentlemen in Scotland, who, it was supposed by those who signed this Memorial, were ready and willing to join them: But this List I take rather to be a general List of the Highlands of Scotland; nor do I imagine there could be any Reason to think, that the great Number of People there mentioned, could appear in Favour of the Pretender. My Lord Traquair, at the Time of his informing me of this, told me, that Drummond was then in Edinburgh; and proposed, that I should have a Meeting with him. Accordingly, I had a Meeting with him; and he repeated to me much the same thing that I have repeated to your Lordships: Said he had been extremely well received by the Cardinal, to whom he had delivered the Memorial given him at Edinburgh: That he expressed much Satisfaction, and was very sanguine, and had the Pretender's Interest very much at Heart; and that, provided he could get sufficient Assistance and Assurance from those who are called the Pretender's Friends in England, that then he would send over the Troops required; the Number was 3000 Men, to be landed in Scotland; 1500 at or near Inverness, so as immediately to join with the Clan of the Frasers; the other 1500 were to be landed in the West-Coast, near Cameron's of Lochiel, who was to take the Command of them upon him, and to raise the People of Argyleshire: At the same Time, a Body of Ten or Twelve Thousand Men were to be landed as near London as they possibly could.---That at the same Time Drummond was in Edinburgh, he sent for Cameron; and when they met, he repeated what had past, and the Success he had at Rome and Paris; and assured them, that provided he could have Assistance in England, the Scheme might be put in Execution in Autumn following. After a Week's Stay in Edinburgh, Drummond went to London. I do not remember to have heard any thing more concerning this Matter till the August following. This was, to the best of my Memory, the End of March, or Beginning of April, that he left Edinburgh.

Lord High Steward. What Year was it in?

J. Murray. 1742. We call it so in Edinburgh.

Lord High Steward. You begin the Year in Scotland on the 1st of January?

J. Murray. Yes.

My Lords, in the Autumn following, when I was at my Lord Traquair's House in the Country, he told me he understood by Drummond, that Cardinal Fleury proposed sending a Body of Swedish Troops into Scotland, thinking they might be more agreeable to the People there, as they were Protestants, than French or Irish Brigades would be: But, at the same Time, said, he thought it would be necessary that a Person should be sent from Scotland, to be deputed to solicit those Troops from Sweden, in Conjunction with the Person whom the Cardinal should employ. My Lord Traquair thought that I should go on that Account: But I think it was rather Drummond's than my Lord Traquair's Proposition.

Lord High Steward. When was this?

J. Murray. In August 1742. I refused to comply with this. From which Time I do not remember to have heard any thing for Six Months; and, about that Time, my Lord Traquair and Cameron of Lochiel, at Cameron's House, did shew me a Letter written by Drummond from Paris; wherein he said, That upon his Return to France, he had represented the thing to the Cardinal in such a Light as engaged him to promise, that in a short Time he would land the Troops in Scotland, as proposed. There were several other Circumstances in the Letter, which I cannot now remember: So far I can say, that Letter, in general, when it was read to me, seemed very extraordinary, to think, that an Affair of such Consequence as the invading these Kingdoms, and raising a Civil War in the Country, was to be undertaken by a few People, and by such kind of Management. I said, I apprehended it was a Scheme of Drummond's, to keep up a Spirit of Party in this Country, and to make himself useful to the Gentlemen who employed him; and that there was no such thing intended by Cardinal Fleury. My Lord Traquair determined, that it was then necessary to know the real State of the Case; and he desired I would go to Paris for that Purpose. I at first did not comply with it; I did not care to execute it; nor did I agree to it till several Weeks afterwards: I was then coming to London; and in January I came up; but, upon the Road, I understood that Cardinal Fleury was dead.

Lord High Steward. When was this?

J. Murray. In January 1743, by the Scotch Stile: I staid some short Time in London; and from thence I went over privately to Paris; and, by means of one Mac Donald the Banker, I found out Drummond: He carried me that Evening to one Mr. Semple, who is there called my Lord Semple; and was the Person employed by the Pretender to manage his Affairs in France: They both joined in lamenting the Death of the Cardinal; and said, That, had he lived, in all Probability the Scheme would have been executed that Spring; that the Reason why it was not, was owing to the Marshal Mallebois having Orders from France to march his Army towards Hanover, instead of the Coast of Flanders, as the Cardinal intended; but that the Cardinal had been so extremely sanguine in the Pretender's Interest, that he had given all his Papers, Memorials, and the like, to M. Amelot, the then Secretary for Foreign Affairs. I proposed to see M. Amelot; and accordingly I went to Versailles, where I staid Two or Three Weeks. I was first presented by Drummond to Semple; and had an Audience of M. Amelot, whom I told I had been sent from Scotland, by the Persons who had signed the Memorial which I mentioned to your Lordships, and who were concerned in it, to know whether the King of France, his Master, was willing to put the Scheme in Execution. He told me, that Mr. Semple had acquainted him with the Reason of my coming: And thereupon he went to the King of France, and told him of it; and upon that I desired to know what Answer he had from the King of France. The Answer he gave me was, That the King told him, that I might assure those Gentlemen, that he had the Interest of their Master as much at Heart as they; and that, as soon as he had an Opportunity, he would put the Scheme they proposed in Execution. With this Answer I returned to Paris, where I only staid Two Nights. At first, I observed, that M. Amelot seemed very desirous to have such Assurances from England as the Cardinal had required; and he applied to Drummond and Semple on that Head. When I left Paris, Mr. Drummond determined to come over. I set out from Paris, and came privately to London. The Reason of Mr. Drummond's coming over, was to collect those Assurances which had been expected from England.

Lord High Steward. What Time was this?

J. Murray. It must have been the End of March, or Beginning of April.

L. H. S. In what Year was it?

J. Murray. In 1743.

I staid but a few Days in London after my Return; and Mr. Drummond desired me, that as soon as I arrived in Scotland, I would acquaint my Lord Traquair of his being come to London, and the Reason of it; and desired, that he would come and assist in procuring the Assurances from the Pretender's Friends. Upon my Return to Edinburgh, I stopt at York, where I met with the late Lord Perth, who then was at York; and I acquainted him with what had been done; who seemed extremely dissatisfied at it. I soon afterwards came to Edinburgh; and soon after my Arrival there, I met Lord Traquair, whom I acquainted with Drummond's being come over; and that he desired his Lordship to go to London to assist him in his intended Purpose. His Lordship went with that Intent (as he said) in about two Weeks after, about the Beginning of April, to the best of my Remembrance. On Lord Traquair's Return to Scotland, in Autumn, he acquainted me, That he had several Meetings with Drummond; and that he had endeavoured to get as many Assurances as he could from the Pretender's Friends, at least such as he thought so: The Persons he named were Lord Barrymore, Sir John Hinde Cotton, and Sir Watkin Williams Wynne: That he had several Meetings with these several Persons; and that Sir John Hinde Cotton seemed extremely shy, and unwilling to converse or meet on the Pretender's Affairs; and none of them were willing to give any such Assurances under their Hands and Seals as were given by the Seven in Scotland. The same Summer one Butler was sent from France, to know the State of the Jacobite Party in England.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I object to the Witness's proceeding to give Evidence Evidence which does not relate to the Point in Question: He has mentioned the Names of several Honourable Gentlemen, on a very extraordinary Occasion, which does not at all relate to the Trial of the Noble Lord at the Bar: He is calumniating the Characters of several Gentlemen, who are my worthy Friends: And therefore, if it is insisted that he should proceed, I think it will be worth our while to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to consider how far it shall be permitted.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you hear what is said by the Noble Lord. It is objected, that the Witness is going on to give Evidence of a Fact not relating to the Noble Lord at the Bar, but to other Persons; and that this is an improper Kind of Evidence, and ought not to be given.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, we did not examine the Witness to those particular Facts which he has mentioned, that do not relate to the Noble Lord at the Bar; but in giving an Account of the Facts inquired into, he has himself entered into that Kind of Narrative; but as it is only what he heard my Lord Traquair say concerning other particular Persons, we do not insist on his proceeding in his Hearsay Account of what concerns those Gentlemen.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, what the Witness has dropt in respect of the Honourable Gentlemen he has named, does not affect them at all. It is nothing more than a Relation which he had from my Lord Traquair, and not from any Matter arising within his own Knowledge. And, my Lords, I may venture to assure your Lordships, for myself and all the Gentlemen concerned in this Prosecution, that we will not ask the Name of one Person immaterial to the present Trial: And therefore I must submit it to your Lordships, whether the Witness should not be suffered now to go on; and that for the future, when he comes to any Transaction of that Kind, he should not name any Persons till he comes to the Noble Lord at the Bar.

L. H. S. Your Lordships hear what is mentioned by the Managers, that they agree that the Witness, in mentioning these Transactions in general, should not name any Persons, till he comes to the Noble Lord at the Bar.

J. Murray. I was directed, that when I came to be examined here, I was to give a Narrative of the Springs, the Rise and Progress of the late Rebellion, as well as what related to the Noble Lord at the Bar; but if I have committed an Error, I readily submit to your Lordships Correction.

Earl of Cholmondeley. As the Witness says he was directed to give a Narrative, with regard to the whole Rise and Progress of the Rebellion, I beg he may be asked by whom he was directed?

L. H. S. My Lords, I did not at this Distance hear the Witness use the Word directed; but understood him only, that he was brought here to give an Account of the Rise and Progress of the Rebellion. Possibly it might escape me.

Earl of Chesterfield. I did not hear the Word directed; but I should be glad to have it cleared up.

L. H. S. Mr. Murray, when you spoke last of your giving a Narrative of the Rise and Progress of the Rebellion, did you make Use of the Word directed, or not?

J. Murray. My Lords, this is the first Time I ever spoke in Publick; I may have committed an Error; I cannot say whether I made use of the Word directed, or no.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I had no other Intention in the Question, but to know the Meaning of the Person who spoke the Words; whether he apprehended that the general Question, asked him by the Managers, was a Direction to him, and whether that was what he meant?

J. Murray. My Lords, some Days after my Examination in the Tower, by the Honourable Committee of the House of Commons, a Gentleman, who I believed was their Secretary, came to me to take a further Examination; and to ask me as to any other Matter that had occurred since my last Examination: Some Days after that, he told me, that I should be called here before your Lordships, upon the Trial of my Lord Lovat; and that at the same time, it would be expected that I should give an Account of the Rise and Progress of the Rebellion in general.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, now the Witness at the Bar has explained what he meant by the Word directed, I hope your Lordships will have no ill Impression of the Managers, from any thing that may have dropped from the Evidence. And, my Lords, I beg Leave to assert, that no Direction has been given to Mr. Murray by the Managers; and that they neither have given, or will give, any Direction to any Witness whatsoever. My Lords, we well know, that it does not become us to do any thing of that Kind; nor have we done it: So far from it, that when we first examined the Witness at the Bar, we examined him solely to the Point of the Conduct of the Noble Lord at the Bar. My Lords, we did afterwards determine among ourselves, that as it was our Duty to lay before your Lordships that Conspiracy wherein the Noble Lord at the Bar appeared to have acted a Part; we did therefore give Mr. Murray Notice, that he would be examined before your Lordships to that Point. My Lords, we never had any Information from him on that Subject; and this is the first Time I ever heard him give an Account of this general Conspiracy. My Lords, we were so careful in our Examination of the Witness in the Committee, that I well remember the Question's being asked him by the worthy Manager who sits near me; and it was in the most general Terms that we could conceive, in order to let your Lordships into the Knowledge of this Matter. And your Lordships will observe, through the whole Course of this Proceeding, that the utmost Candour will be made use of by the Managers, in their Examination of the Witnesses; and that they will put no leading Questions to them but general Questions, and such as they are to answer upon Oath, and according to the Truth.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I beg Leave to say, that I did not conceive that the Managers, in their Examination of Witnesses, made use of the least Direction or Authority whatsoever. I have the greatest Sense of their Candour and Fairness; it is my Opinion of them, and of the whole Body by whom they are deputed; and it was upon that Principle I proposed my Question to the Witness.

Vol. IX.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I pray that the Witness may be asked, Whether he is, upon this Occasion, a voluntary or an involuntary Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, the Managers are now prosecuting for the whole Commons of Great-Britain; they are prosecuting upon the Foundation of Evidence, for a Treason of the greatest Magnitude; there is now a Witness at your Lordships Bar, whom they are examining to prove that Treason; and, while they are so, I hope they shall not be interrupted. There is no Doubt, but when they have done with the Examination of the Witness, if any Lord thinks proper to ask him any Questions, your Lordships have a Right to do it: But we are now examining the Witness on behalf of the Prosecution; and we hope we shall have Liberty to go through with it; and then your Lordships will permit him to be examined by any body else: But, my Lords, at present we are in Possession of the Witness; and we beg we may have Liberty to go on.

Earl Stanhope. My Lords, I beg the Question proposed may be asked; or that we may adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. My Lords, the Rule for the Examination of Witnesses in this Court, in either House of Parliament, and every where else, is, that if a Witness is produced by a Prosecutor, or Plaintiff, they have a Right to examine him first: But if any Objection is made to the Questions asked by the Prosecutors, whether they are Managers of the House of Commons upon an Impeachment, or Counsel upon an Indictment, the Objection is first to be considered; and if the Objection prevails, and is allowed, then the Question is not to be asked: But all Questions that are asked, whether touching the Matter of Fact to be tried, or the Credibility of the Witness, are to be asked at the proper Time. The Party who produces the Witness has a Right to go through the Examination first; and then the other Side cross-examines him; and after that is over, the Judge asks him such Questions as he thinks proper, unless, as I said before, there be any Objection to the Questions, or any doubtful Matter arises that wants immediately to be cleared up. The same Method is to be observed here; and the Reason of it, my Lords, is, that unless your Lordships observe this Method, you will be in perpetual Confusion.

Earl Stanhope. My Lords, the Question now proposed, arose from an Expression that just now dropped from the Witness.

The Witness proceeded in his Evidence.

J. Murray. My Lords, this Butler, whom I mentioned to your Lordships, was for some time in England during that Summer that my Lord Traquair was in London; when, to cover his Intention, he bought up a Number of Horses for the King of France's Use; and expressed himself so well pleased with the Encouragement he had from the Pretender's Friends in England, that he said, that, as soon as he went over, he would represent it in such a Light to the King of France, his Master, as he imagined, would induce him to send the Succours desired. Upon his Return to Versailles, where Drummond went with him, Drummond went to Rome, as he said, at the Desire of the French Court, to persuade the Pretender to send his Son to France. Accordingly he did persuade him to do it; but Drummond returned to France, before the Pretender's Son left Rome. After Drummond went to Paris, he came to London, to acquaint the Friends of the Pretender in England, that the King of France was determined to send over a Body of Troops in the Spring. This came to my Knowledge by two Letters from Drummond; the one written from Paris in December, and the other written from London. The first Letter he sent over, was not forwarded in time to my Lord Traquair; but when Drummond returned, he found it lying here: He inclosed it in another Letter; and they both came to my Lord Traquair's Hands at Edinburgh. In the first Letter, he mentioned his intended Journey to Rome: In the second, he mentioned his Return to Paris, and the Reason of his coming to London; and that he found the Pretender's Friends there very backward: That with Difficulty he had persuaded them to agree to the French's Landing. In this Letter, there were a great many Contradictions and Absurdities, in regard to the landing a Body of Troops in Scotland and England at the same Time. It particularly mentioned, that Earl Marshall was to command the 3000 Men that were to come from Dunkirk to Scotland; and at the End of the same Letter he says, "But I do not know how my Lord Marshall is to be equipped; which, with other Circumstances, determined us to write a Letter to Drummond, to desire him to explain himself." My Lord Perth, and my Lord Traquair, shewed me the Letter, and desired I would prepare a Letter to Drummond, desiring him to explain himself. Accordingly I wrote a Letter in their Presence, which they both signed; and I believe, I cannot say positively, that I signed it myself. This Letter, as my Lord Traquair said, was sent to London, to be forwarded to Drummond at Paris; but the Person to whom the Letter was delivered in London, wrote to Drummond, and told him, That such a Letter was in his Hands; and desiring to know, whether he should send it to him at Paris, or not; Drummond said in Answer, That he should not send the Letter, lest it should be intercepted; but desired he would burn it.

Mr. Noel. What Time was this?

J. Murray. In the Month of January 1743.

Mr. Noel. According to what Style?

J. Murray. It was in the Year 1743, not long before the intended Imbarcation at Dunkirk.

Mr. Noel. When was that?

J. Murray. To the best of my Memory, in 1743.

Mr. Noel. Be pleased to recollect the Time; because it is very material.

J. Murray. It was about two Months before the intended Invasion.

L. H. S. You may possibly recollect the Time from the other Circumstances. Do you remember the Year of the Battle of Dettingen?

J. Murray. I believe it was in the Year 1743.

Mr. Noel. How long was this after the Battle of Dettingen that you speak of? Or was it in the January before, or after the Battle?

J. Murray. I believe it was the January following.

Mr. Noel. It would be proper for you to recollect from these Circumstances, if you can, whether it was in January 1743, or 1744, according to the Scotch Style?

J. Murray.

(*87) Murray. January 1744, by the Scotch Stile.

In Two Weeks after, there was another Letter came from Drummond, consisting of a few Lines only, wherein he said, That, in all Probability, before that Letter came to hand, the Pretender's Son would be landed in England, with the Troops under the Command of Marshall Saxe. From this time, to July following, so far as came to my Knowledge, there were no Accounts from Abroad. It was proposed to me, as I had then an Intention that Summer of going to Flanders to see the Army, that I should go the Length of Paris, to know in what Situation their Affairs then stood. The First time I declined it; but was afterwards brought to agree to it, upon being shewed a Letter of Mr. Semple, wherein he made a Number of Excuses for the intended Invasion's not taking Effect; and desired fresh Assurances from Scotland, and that Endeavours should be used in England. Upon which I was pressed to go. We then thought it extremely necessary that we should know upon what Footing Things really were. I accordingly came to London, and from thence I went to the Army in Flanders; staid only a few Days there, and then I went to Holland, and from thence, in a private Manner, to Paris. When I went to Paris, I was introduced to the Pretender's Son by Drummond and Semple. The First time I saw him, so far as I can remember, there was nothing essential passed. I desired to see him in private; which I accordingly did the next Day. My Design was to represent to him, that I thought the Persons employed by him at Paris were imposing upon him; and that they had no other Intention but to serve themselves, to keep up the Spirits of the Party in Britain, and thereby make themselves necessary to the Party. With this Intent, I explained the Letter wrote by Drummond, endeavoured to shew the Contradictions in it, and that Drummond endeavoured to serve himself, and not him. He said at that time, he was determined to come to Scotland.

Mr. Noel. Who are you speaking of?

J. Murray. The Pretender's Son. He mentioned the Association; and said, He was determined to come into Scotland, and did not doubt but the King of France intended an Invasion in the Spring; but that he was then preparing for it, and intended to execute it as soon as the Campaign was over; and that, if he did not do it before, he was determined to come into Scotland. I endeavoured to shew him, that the Undertaking was desperate; and that he could not propose having above 4 or 5000 Men, supposing all the Friends he could expect, should be ready to join him: And it was seen afterwards, that he had not so many. Notwithstanding which, he insisted upon coming. I was so much against it, that I spoke to Sir Thomas Sheridan, a Person who lived with him for many Years, and told him of the Danger of such an Attempt; and that it would be the Ruin of many Families, and the Destruction of the Country. Sir Thomas Sheridan said, he would endeavour to persuade him against it; and, upon his Arrival in Scotland, told me he had; but to no Purpose. After staying a few Days in Paris, I returned to Scotland, where I gave an Account, not to all, but to some of the Persons concerned in the Memorial, of what had passed; and every body, but my Lord Perth, declared against the Pretender's Son coming into Scotland. Upon which I wrote a Letter to him, representing the Opinion of his Friends in Scotland, and setting forth the bad Consequences of such an Undertaking. This Letter I committed to the Care of a Gentleman who was going to London, in the Month of January 1745, Scotch Stile. This was neglected to be forwarded, and was returned to me in the Month of April following. I, notwithstanding, endeavoured to forward that Letter several times; and there having been Occasion to send from the West of Scotland, by my Lord Perth's Means, the Packet was sent to France; but could not arrive in time, before the Young Pretender set out. In June, I received a Letter from the Young Pretender, wherein he said, he was fully resolved and determined to come into Scotland; and that he was to set out in June, and proposed to come to the West of Scotland; and appointed Signals for his Landing. Upon the Receipt of this, I sent it, by an Express, to my Lord Perth; desiring him to forward the Letter, or the Contents of it, to Cameron of Lochiel's House, because I began to reflect, that it would be necessary some Methods should be taken to inform the Gentlemen in the Highlands, who were supposed to be ready, and to see if they approved of it. Upon that, I went to Cameron's House of Lochiel; who told me, That he had sent his Brother Doctor Cameron, with a Copy of that Letter, to the noble Lord at the Bar; Doctor Cameron returned the next Day, and said he had accordingly gone to the noble Lord's House; that he had told him he had Business of Consequence to impart to him; and that he had taken his Promise to mention nothing of what was to pass between them: Upon which, he shewed my Lord Lovat a Copy of the Letter. I cannot say these were the very express Words; but it was to this Effect: Upon which, the noble Lord at the Bar declared, That it was a foolish and rash Undertaking; and that he should not land; and, if he did, that none of the Men would join him. And this is what Dr. Cameron told me. And it was the Opinion of all those of the Highlands, that he should not land, but return. They desired I would write a Letter of the Opinion of these Gentlemen to the Pretender, and of the bad Situation the Country lay under; and to desire, as their utmost Wishes, that he would return to France; which Letter I did write: I wrote Two of them, and committed them to the Care of a Gentleman; and which Letters he received upon the Island.

Mr. Noel. Who received them?

J. Murray. The Pretender's Son. The First Notice I had of his Landing was by an anonymous Letter that I received about a Week after. It did not say expressly, that the Pretender was landed; but, by the Words of it, I judged it was so. I was desired to come to the House of Lord John Drummond: There I understood that he was landed; and, in a little Time after, joined him, at the House of Mac Donald of upon the West Coast. About Ten Days after that, he erected a Standard in a Place called Glenгарie; where he was joined by the Camerons, the Mac Donalds of Keppoch, and a few of the Mac Donalds of With those, he marched to the House of Mac Donald of Glenгарie. There was a Gentleman of the Name of Frazer of Gortuleg, whom he there applied to, and the Laird of Lochiel, as being Persons acquainted with the noble Lord at the Bar. Lochiel told me there was such a Person there; that there were Two Commissions granted by the Old Pretender in favour of the noble Prisoner, which he desired the Young Pretender to send. Accordingly, I asked him for those Commissions. He said they were in a Trunk, with other Papers, which he had left up the Country, by reason of the Approach of General Cope, who was then expected in the Country; but desired, at the same time, that Mr. Kelly might write a Commission; whether it was of Lieutenant-General, or no, I cannot say; but I saw the Commission written by Mr. Kelly. I was also to make an Apology to my Lord Lovat, why the original Commissions had not been sent. Whether I made the Apology verbally to Mr. Frazer of Gortuleg, or whether I did it by Letter, I cannot say. I did not see it put into the Packet, or sent; and I did not inquire whether he had received it, because I did not doubt of the thing. After the Arrival of the Pretender's Son at Edinburgh, nothing material relating to the noble Lord at the Bar happened between the last Time I spoke of, and the Time of his Arrival there. Some time after the Battle of Prifton-Pans, Cameron of Lochiel came to me, and told me, That one Hugh Frazer, who had been Clerk, or Servant in some Capacity, to my Lord at the Bar, but was then an Attorney at Edinburgh, he was a fit Person to send to my Lord Lovat, to desire him to send out his Clan, and agreed that he should go; and he had Instructions to do so. Whether I wrote to my Lord Lovat by Hugh Frazer, or no, I cannot recollect; very probably I did; but cannot say positively I did. The next thing, in regard to the noble Lord at the Bar, that happened, was upon the Return of the Highland Army from Derby to Glasgow. There this Hugh Frazer came to Glasgow; and this was the First time I ever saw him after he left Edinburgh. He came at that time, as he said, from Perth, and was sent, by the Master of Lovat, to procure Arms for a few Men which he had under his Command, and to know where he should join the Army. It was then proposed to write to my Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, to endeavour to persuade him to appear publicly in favour of the Pretender. This was agreed to, and the Letter was wrote by Cameron of Lochiel, and signed by him, Clunie Mac Pherson, and myself. This Letter was delivered to Hugh Frazer, with one that was wrote by the Pretender's Son himself, a Letter of Compliment. I do not remember that there was any Commission, or any thing sent, save these Two Letters, and a Letter which I wrote to the Master of Lovat, which was sent by Hugh Frazer. If there were any more sent, it is more than I can remember. Hugh Frazer at the same time asked, if there had not been a Patent granted by the Old Pretender to create my Lord Lovat a Duke: To which Lochiel answered, That if there had been any such granted, it was in the Hands of his Father John Cameron, who was then at Dumblain. It was for this Reason that I did not address this Letter of Packet to my Lord Lovat; but left that to the Management of Hugh Frazer, if he should find the Patent creating my Lord Lovat a Duke, when he should come to Dumblain. Hugh Frazer, at the same time, answered, That my Lord Lovat had made a Proposal, that Lord John Drummond (it was either he, or my Lord Strathbally, who then commanded at Perth, or perhaps both of them) should march, with the Troops under his Command, to Inverness, and bring with him some more People of his own. The Proposal, if it came from my Lord Lovat, as Hugh Frazer said it did, was a very judicious one; and my Lord Lovat must have desired it to cover his Country from the Troops then under Lord Louden's Command, as my Lord Lovat had left Inverness some little Time before that. And the next thing that occurs to me, with respect to the noble Lord at the Bar, is, that while I was at Inverness, I received a Letter from the Hands of Frazer of Gortuleg. This, he said, came from my Lord Lovat; but wrote to me seemingly in some Clerk's Hand. This Letter was produced; but, one Paragraph of it being very remarkable, I asked Gortuleg the Meaning of it; and he said, That my Lord Lovat was desirous of having that Patent creating him a Duke, which he expected some time before. I said, That I had no such Patent; and told him, That he ought to put my Lord Lovat off from any such Expectation.

Mr. Noel. You said, That this Letter came to you at Inverness; pray when did it come to you?

J. Murray. It was in the End of February, or Beginning of March.

Mr. Noel. In what Year?

J. Murray. In the Year 1746.

Mr. Noel. According to the Scotch Stile?

J. Murray. Yes.

I had no Occasion either to see or hear from the Lord at the Bar, from that time for some Weeks after the Battle of Culloden; and, when in Company with Lochiel, I was informed, that my Lord Lovat was in that Country, and that he lay at the Place called Glenmely; and there was a Boat sent to bring Lord Lovat to the other Side of the Lake, where a Meeting had been proposed by Lochiel. I believe that Meeting was accidental in regard to the noble Lord at the Bar, because Lochiel expressed great Satisfaction, that they should have Lord Lovat's Advice and Assistance. Another Reason which induced me to think so was, that Cameron sent a Servant, with Two Horses, to procure Wine and Spirits from Beaufort, Lord Lovat's Seat, there being neither in that Part of the Country. Cameron of Lochiel, with some others, and I, came to the Place where Lord Lovat was: He was then upon the Side of a Lake.

Mr. Noel. What is the Name of that Place?

J. Murray. I heard it is called Morell, or Morlaig; but whether that is the real Place, I cannot say.

The First Night we were together, or rather the only Night that I was there, I do not remember that any thing material passed; but, in general, we told my Lord Lovat, that there was a Meeting to be the next Day; and that we should be very proud of his Advice. Accordingly, the next Day there was a Meeting of about Twelve or Thirteen Gentlemen, where we did desire the noble Prisoner at the Bar to give his Opinion. There were present Cameron of Lochiel, Barisdale, John Roy Stewart, old Glenbuckett, Dr. Cameron, and a Nephew of Keppoch's, and some few others. I cannot particularly remember them all.

Mr. Noel. You have not said whether the noble Lord at the Bar was there?

J. Murray. Yes: He was at that Meeting.

Mr. Noel. Did you see him there?

J. Murray.

Mr. Murray. Yes, I proposed in that Meeting, that my Lord Lovat should give his Opinion. My Lord Lovat said, That, in his Opinion, the only thing for the Gentlemen there to do, was, to raise a competent Number of Men to protect their Country, Families, and Cattle, and endeavour to defend themselves.

Mr. Noel. To protect their Country, from what?

Mr. Mur. To protect or defend their Country from the King's Forces, who were then at Inverness. There were no other Forces. The Number of Men then proposed to be raised was 3000, or 3500, a compact Body, whom it was easy to find Provisions for. This Proposal was agreed upon, and the particular Number of Men that each Gentleman should bring was agreed upon. Among the others, the Clan of the Frasers was named for 400, to be commanded by the Master of Lovat. But my Lord Lovat himself would not answer for his Son; but required Lochiel to answer for him. My Lord Lovat said, That he was an old Man, and not able to do any thing himself; and that he would not answer for his Son's Abilities; but desired they would let Lochiel answer for him; and that he did not doubt but he would do it. Lochiel accordingly answered for him.

There was a Sum of Money distributed there, and, I think, about Seventy Loudors given to the Servant of my Lord Lovat, to carry to his Son, as Ten Days Pay for the 400 Men which he was to bring out.

Mr. Noel. Was my Lord Lovat present, or not, at the Time you speak of, when that Money was given to his Servant?

Mr. Mur. I cannot say positively whether my Lord Lovat saw the Servant get the Money; but it was distributed by a Person who was my Clerk; and my Lord Lovat was at the other End of the Room.

Mr. Noel. Was it in the same Room?

Mr. Mur. Yes: My Lord Lovat was in the same Room that the Money was distributed in. There were several Persons there, to whom Money was paid.

Mr. Noel. Can you name the Servant who received it for Lord Lovat?

Mr. Mur. No: I think he was called the Steward of my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Noel. From whence came the Money?

Mr. Mur. From France.

Mr. Noel. What was the Sum that came from France?

Mr. Mur. Thirty-five thousand Loudors at that time.

Proclamation was made for Silence.

After this Meeting was over, so far as I can remember, I, with Lochiel, crossed over to the opposite Side of the Lake; and my Lord Lovat, as I understood, and he himself proposed, remained there all that Night. Four or Five Days after, I had Occasion to be at a Place called Glen-duffrie, when my Lord Lovat was on the opposite Side, at a House formerly belonging to the Brother of Lochiel. I went there to my Lord Lovat the next Day, with no Intention to speak to him of Business; but upon seeing his Servant, to whom the Money was given, I asked him, when he intended to send the Servant away with it? He said, he should go that Day, or the next; and then called a Person who was called his Secretary; and desired him to write a Letter to the Master of Lovat, in my Name: But what were the Contents of the Letter, or that I saw it, I cannot remember; but I took it in general, that the Contents of the Letter were to give the Master of Lovat the Reason why the Money was sent. I did not then stay above an Hour or Two with my Lord Lovat, but returned to Lochiel. What was agreed upon at the Meeting, and proposed to be done, did not take Effect so soon as was expected; neither indeed was there above Four or Five hundred Men in the Whole, that met, about Ten Days after the Time first proposed; that Handful of Men were Two Days at Lochiel's House before the King's Troops marched Northwards, in Pursuit of them: Upon Intelligence that the King's Troops were on their March, Two Men were ordered out, to see what Number of Men there were; and if we could make any Head: They saw a great Number of Men; upon which we retired to the Head of the Lake; when it was determined, that we should disperse, and every one do the best he could for himself. From thence I went into the Country that belongs to the Clan Ronald, where I received a few Lines by a young Man, who said he was Servant to my Lord at the Bar; wherein he said, It was necessary for him to have a Watch or Guard to attend him, of Twenty-two Men, and a Lieutenant; and desired, that I might send him Money, to pay those Men Twenty Days Pay, I think it was. I do not remember, that I wrote any Answer to this Letter, because I had no Pen, Ink, or Paper; but I gave the Servant Fifteen Loudors, having then not much Money; and desired him to give it to my Lord Lovat. After that I had a Message from the noble Lord at the Bar, by one Bishop Mac Donald, desiring, that I would see him before I left the Country; but so far as I remember, it was nothing farther than Compliments. Since that Time till Yesterday, I never had the Honour to see the noble Lord at the Bar, nor had any Letters from him, nor corresponded with him.

Mr. Noel. Were the Fifteen Loudors that you sent to my Lord Lovat, part of the French Money that was landed there?

Mr. Mur. Yes, it was Part of the French Money.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, He has told your Lordships already, that the Men that were to be raised were to defend the Country against the King's Forces: Now I beg to know, whether it was mentioned at that Meeting, where these Men were to march, or where to rendezvous?

Mr. Mur. It was proposed, that the general Rendezvous should be near the House of Keppoch. Lochiel's People, Barisdale, and Clanronald's, were to have rendezvoused upon the Lake, about two Miles above Lochiel's House, and then to proceed to the general Rendezvous, by Lochiel's.

Mr. Attorney General. Pray, had you any blank Letters from the Young Pretender, after he came to England; or that were sent to you?

Mr. Mur. I had Letters that were sent to me, and were not directed, but with me, to deliver to such Persons as I thought willing to support the Cause.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, what those Letters were, and the Import of them.

Mr. Mur. I do not remember the exact Number of Letters, but I did receive a Number of Letters; they were not directed, but left to be directed to such People in Scotland as were thought the best Friends to the Pretender, and proper to cultivate a Party for him in the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, at what Time these Letters were delivered to you, and by whom.

Mr. Mur. There were some of the Letters, either Two or Three of them, that I brought with me from Paris; and the others were sent to me; but who delivered them to me, I cannot particularly remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to mention to my Lords, who delivered you the Letters you received at Paris.

Mr. Mur. The Young Pretender himself.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Directions he gave then?

Mr. Mur. There was a Credential attached to every Letter, and they were to be delivered to such Persons as were disposed to promote his Interest in the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. And what was the Meaning of the Credential? Was it signed by the Young Pretender, or by any body?

Mr. Mur. Yes, by him.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, to whom you delivered those Letters.

Mr. Mur. One of those Letters, together with the Credential, I delivered at Edinburgh, to the Laird of MacLeod.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, to whom you delivered any of those Letters.

Mr. Mur. There was another of those Letters sent to Sir Alexander MacDonald.

Mr. At. Gen. You say it was sent; then you did not deliver it yourself?

Mr. Mur. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know whether it was received or no?

Mr. Mur. No, I never heard it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, of any other of these Letters which you delivered.

Mr. Mur. The other Letters, so far as I can remember, were put into the Custody of Lochiel, who was the proper Person to send them to the People who were to have them: As to those who had them, I cannot distinctly name them all; but my Lord Perth had one, I am sure.

Mr. At. Gen. What Time was it, that those several and respective Letters were delivered?

Mr. Mur. They were delivered in the Months of November and December, 1744.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that after the Time you came from Paris?

Mr. Mur. Yes, it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Were they delivered, in order to forward the intended Invasion from France, which you gave an Account of before?

Mr. Mur. They were designed by the Pretender as Letters to be given to People who were most his Friends, to know whether or no they were ready to join him; and the Credential annexed was for them to forward his Interest in the Country.

Mr. Noel. You have told us, that a Computation was made at that Meeting, of the Number of Men that could be raised; please to give an Account to my Lords, whether any particular Person, and who, mentioned the Number of Troops that might be raised?

Mr. Mur. It was the general Opinion, that 3000 Men should be raised; and my Lord Lovat said, that such a Number would be sufficient.

Mr. Noel. Did he mention any Proportion of Men that were to be raised by the Master of Lovat?

Mr. Mur. He mentioned 400 Frasers, to be raised by the Master of Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Have you done with the Examination of this Witness?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, we have done with this Witness at present.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, The Managers for the House of Commons declare, that they have done with this Witness at present: Will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg Leave to tell your Lordships, that I am the most incapable Man of the three Kingdoms to make my Defence, because, as I mentioned to your Lordships before, I want both my Sight and my Hearing; and I therefore begged of your Lordships to allow my Counsel to examine my own Witnesses, and counter-examine the Witnesses against me; but your Lordships were not pleased to allow that. Your Lordships are much more capable of examining the Witnesses than I am; and therefore I shall refer it to your Lordships; and beg Leave to sit down. I will ask this Witness no Questions now.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask this Question: Did you voluntarily surrender yourself to the King's Forces? or was you taken by the King's Forces?

Mr. Mur. I did not intend, at that particular Time, to surrender myself; and I presume it is not necessary for me to say now, whether I ever did intend it or not: But at the Time that the Party of Dragoons came to the House where I then was, the Doors were shut, and I was in such a Position, as that I could have killed two of them myself; but I rather chose to submit myself, and throw down my Arms.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Question that I ask is, Whether he did, or did not, voluntarily surrender himself; and whether his Intention was then to submit to the King's Forces?

Mr. Mur. I did say, that it was not my Intention then particularly to submit myself; it was not my Intention till I saw the Dragoons.

Lord Talbot. Did you use any Means to make your Escape afterwards?

Mr. Mur. I never did.

Lord Talbot. Have you ever taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Fidelity to the King?

Mr. Mur. I never did.

Lord Talbot. Did you never take those Oaths; or Oaths of the same Nature to any body else?

Mr. Mur. No.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, we hope the Witness shall not be obliged, to answer Questions of this Nature; it is a Question that tends to accuse himself of High-Treason.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I did not ask him any Question to accuse himself of any Crime which he had not himself before confessed; and as he had had before accused himself of that Crime, this may be said to be a Continuation of it, but cannot be said to be a fresh Accusation. I should not have asked him the Question, if he had not before accused himself.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, There is no Reason to spend your Lordships Time upon this Point; for the Gentleman has already answered the Question.

Lord Talbot. Are you at present a Prisoner, or under Confinement?

J. Mur. Yes, I am, and have been ever since I came to the Tower.

Lord Talbot. Are you, upon this Occasion, a voluntary Evidence?

J. Mur. I should be glad to have the Meaning of that Question explained; and to know what is meant by a voluntary Evidence.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Meaning of the Question is, Whether the Witness is not an Evidence in Hopes of a Pardon? and whether, if he himself was pardoned, he would be an Evidence at all?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, On behalf of this Prosecution, I must oppose that Question's being asked. The Question, as I understand it, is, Whether the Gentleman under Examination is a Witness in Hopes of a Pardon? and whether he would be a Witness, if his Pardon had been obtained? My Lords, This is a Question, as I apprehend, not proper to be asked, because it is no Question as to any Matter of Fact at all, but only a Question concerning what the Witness would do, upon Supposition of a Fact which has not happened. I do not apprehend, that any Question can be asked of a Witness, but what concerns a Matter of Fact; not what a Witness would, or would not do, upon a future Contingency. The Question must tend to a Fact, and the Witness either is, or is not capable of giving Evidence; but, my Lords, to ask Questions of this Kind, is entering into the Recesses of a Man's Heart, which Nobody has a Right to enquire into; and it is such a Sort of Question as I do not remember ever to have heard asked in a Court of Justice; and, perhaps, it is what the Witness is incapable of answering; for, till the Event happens, he cannot say what he would, or would not do. We therefore hope your Lordships will think, that this is an improper Question; and that the Thoughts, Inclinations, or Wishes of a Witness ought not to be enquired into here, where Matters of Fact only are to be tried.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I asked the Question for this Reason, that I might know with what View his Evidence was given; and so judge of the Credibility of it. Do you believe your Life depends upon the Conformity of the Evidence that you shall give on this Trial, to former Examinations which you have undergone?

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I presume, without troubling your Lordships with any Argument, that all that has been said by the worthy Manager who spoke last to oppose the former Question, is much more applicable to the Question now proposed to be asked; and, therefore, without adding any thing more why this Question should not be asked, I shall submit it to your Lordships; and humbly apprehend, it is our Duty to oppose the asking of this Question.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Do you oppose this last Question being asked?

Mr. At. Gen. I should beg that the Question might be a little more fully explained; I do not remember to have ever heard the like.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Question to me seems extremely clear and plain; and I beg Leave to repeat it to your Lordships; and if you have any Difficulty about it, I will readily submit. My Lords, The Question is, Whether you (the Witness under Examination) believe your Life depends upon the Conformity of the Evidence you shall give upon this Trial, to your former Examinations? I suppose the Gentleman was examined as well by the Managers for the House of Commons, as their Clerk.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, All that the Noble Lord, who asked this Question, means by it, is comprehended in the former Question that he asked; and that is, Whether the Witness is a voluntary Witness, or not?

L. H. S. The Witness said, He did not know what was meant by the Word voluntary; and desired it might be explained.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I urged the other Question only as explanatory to that; and all that I meant by it was to know, whether the Witness at the Bar is governed by Hope or Fear?

J. Mur. My Lords, If your Lordships please, I will answer the Question: I am upon my Oath, and obliged to tell the Truth; and I say, that possibly, and very probably, had I been in another Situation of Life, I should not have appeared before your Lordships as a Witness against the Noble Lord at the Bar.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I am extremely well satisfied with the Gentleman's Answer to the Question; and it gives me a much better Opinion of his Evidence than I had before.

Lord Barrington. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask this Witness a Question explanatory to the last Question. If you had a full Pardon, and was at this Bar, and was obliged to answer upon Oath, would you not have given the same Evidence that you now have given?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I apprehend that is only asking the Witness, whether he would come here voluntarily, and perjure himself?

Lord Barrington. My Lords, The Question I proposed is not, Whether the Witness would come voluntarily to this Bar? but whether, if he had a full Pardon, and was brought to this Bar (as every Man may, whether free or not free), if he had a free Pardon, and was compelled to give Evidence, whether he would give the same Evidence upon Oath as he has now given?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, This is a Question that no Man alive, in this Gentleman's Circumstances, can possibly answer.

J. Mur. My Lords, I beg Leave to answer the Question. If I was in such a Situation as has been now stated to your Lordships, and brought here with a Pardon in my Pocket, but brought here to give Evidence against the Noble Lord at the Bar, I would not add to, or impair a Syllable of, or vary in the least from, what I have now said.

L. H. S. Is the Evidence you have here given upon your Oath true?

J. Mur. Yes, it is.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask this Gentleman a Question, relating to a Transaction which has been lately mentioned. He was asked, Whether he did, or did not, surrender himself voluntarily to the King's Forces? His Answer was, That he could, he believed, have dispatched two of the Dragoons, but that he did not make any Resistance. Now I desire he may acquaint your Lordships, whether that was, or was not, before the 12th Day of July last?

J. Mur. It was upon the 28th of June last.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I desire to know, Whether or not, from that Time till now, he has not been in Custody, and amenable to Justice?

J. Mur. I have been in Custody ever since that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, I desire to know, Whether he was then brought before any Judge or Justice of the Peace, and whom?

J. Mur. I was carried to my Lord Justice Clerk in Edinburgh, the Day I was taken into Custody.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you then committed, or no, by the Justice Clerk?

J. Mur. I was that Night committed, by the Justice Clerk, to the Castle of Edinburgh.

Mr. At. Gen. On the 28th of June?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you continue in the Castle of Edinburgh from that Time till you was sent from thence to London?

J. Mur. I did continue there till I came to London.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever make, or endeavour to make, any Escape all that Time?

J. Mur. I never did.

A Lord. Did you at any Time since you have been in Custody, receive any Hopes or Promise of a Pardon?

J. Mur. I have never, since I have been in Custody, been promised a Pardon, nor have heard a Word of Pardon mentioned to me since I was in Custody.

[Then the Witness, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir Richard Lloyd. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce, is Hugh Fraser of Dumballoch: Who was called in, and sworn.

Proclamation for Silence.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know the Noble Lord at the Bar?

Hugh Fraser. Yes, I do.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How long have you known him?

H. Fras. I have known him many Years ago.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember whether you was sent for at any Time, and when, to the House of my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I got a Message from Peter Fraser of Belladrum: It was he that brought me the Message.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Message brought?

H. Fras. From Lord Lovat, as he told me.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When was that?

H. Fras. I think it was about the End of September 1745.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was you sent for at any other Time about this Part of the Year?

H. Fras. I did not go upon the first Message.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you go upon the second?

H. Fras. Yes, I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Distance of Time was there between the First and Second Message?

H. Fras. I believe there might be a Day or two: Thereabouts, to the best of my Memory.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When you came to my Lord Lovat's House, pray what passed between my Lord Lovat and you?

H. Fras. Upon my Word, I cannot remember particularly.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember whether any particular Paper was shewn you at that Time, and what it was?

H. Fras. No, I don't remember seeing any particular Paper at that Time?

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was there any Paper read, or talked of, by any body at that Time relating to the Pretender's Son?

H. Fras. There was a Conversation there about that Time, and, to the best of my Remembrance, it was about the Troubles in the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you ever see or read a Paper said to be a Manifesto from the Pretender's Son? Or did you ever hear it read?

H. Fras. Yes, I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Where did you hear it read?

H. Fras. I read that Paper in a back Room at my Lord Lovat's.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who gave it you to read?

H. Fras. I cannot remember who gave it me to read.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember who first shewed it you?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat directed some Person in the Room to give it me: Whether it was Robert Fraser, or not, I cannot say.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember to have heard my Lord Lovat say any thing of that Paper?

H. Fras. I have heard him say it was a pretty well wrote Paper.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. I beg you'll inform their Lordships, whether at that Time you heard any Conversation about the Clan of the Fraser's?

H. Fras. Upon my Word, I cannot remember whether I did or not, at that particular Time.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you about that Time hear any Thing about the Clan of the Fraser's?

H. Fras. I heard them spoken of several Times.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear it spoken of, at any of those Times, who was to command them?

H. Fras. Yes; I heard that the Master of Lovat was to command them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who did you hear say that?

H. Fras. I heard my Lord Lovat say it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To what Purpose did my Lord Lovat say he was to command them?

H. Fras. It was to go South.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To join whom?

H. Fras. To join the Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What did he call the Pretender? by what Name?

H. Fras. He called him the Prince.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Were there any other of the Clans expected at that Time to join the Frasers to march Southwards?

H. Fras. I heard my Lord Lovat say, That he was uneasy about an Answer to a Letter, which he or his Son had wrote to the Isle of Skye.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Answer expected?

H. Fras. From the Laird of MacLeod.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say what sort of Answer he expected, or hoped for?

H. Fras. By all that I could learn of the Letter, it was a Letter desiring that Laird MacLeod's Men should come and join them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. A Letter from whom, desiring that MacLeod's Men might come and join them?

H. Fras. I cannot be positive, whether it was from my Lord Lovat, or his Son.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom did you learn the Contents of the Letter?

H. Fras. I heard my Lord Lovat speak of it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any Application made to you concerning the Raising of the Men, or their joining?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat asked me what Number of Men I could raise.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Of what Clan were you to raise them?

Sir William Yenge desired, that the last Question might be repeated: Which was done; and he made the same Answer as before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Men did he speak of, and what Clan?

H. Fras. The Frasers: There are no other Men in that Part of the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. With what View were these Men to be raised?

H. Fras. To join the rest of the Clan of the Frasers, which were to be commanded by the Master.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you tell my Lord Lovat what Number of Men you thought you could raise?

H. Fras. No; upon my Word, I did not.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing about the raising his Clan, and who was to raise them, or did raise them?

H. Fras. I heard my Lord Lovat say, That the Master was the Man that was to raise the Clan, and to head them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was he to do that by his own Power or Inclination, or by Advice from any body else?

H. Fras. That is a Thing I can give but an Opinion upon.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What is your Opinion upon it?

H. Fras. That the Master could not have raised the Men, except my Lord Lovat had countenanced the Thing, and it had been done by his Permission.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Have you heard my Lord Lovat say any Thing in regard to his Son's being active; or not, in raising the Men?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat say more than once, That his Son was very slow in raising of the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. And did he say so as praising him for his Slowness in raising the Men, or as in dispraising him?

H. Fras. I thought it was to dispraise it.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any Thing of his own Abilities or Inabilities to raise Men, and head them?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat say, That he was a tender, infirm Man, and not able to go about those Things himself.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Have you heard him with himself younger?

H. Fras. I have heard him say, He wished himself younger, that he might go and command the Men himself.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Command them in whose Service?

H. Fras. In the Pretender's Service, that he was talking of.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know what they mean by the Firy Crosses in that Country?

H. Fras. I remember the Firy Crosses when it went about my Father's Ground. It was a long Pole, with two crosses Sticks burnt at the Fore-end; and the Design of it was to raise the Men, and to threaten them with Fire and Sword; that their Houses should be burnt, if they did not rise.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was the Firy Crosses carried through the Clan, that you know of, or have heard?

H. Fras. I have heard, that it was carried through the Clan: I did not go about all the Country.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. You say you saw it at your Father's?

H. Fras. Yes; I did.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. By whose Order is it that those Crosses are usually carried about to raise Men in the several Clans?

H. Fras. Order is given by the Person that wants the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Is it not always ordered by the Chief of the Clan? Does any body but the Chief of the Clan take upon them to order it?

H. Fras. I am an intire Stranger to that: I never saw the Thing before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. When you were at Lord Lovat's House at the Time you speak of, did you observe any Tents there?

H. Fras. Yes; I observed some Bell-Tents there.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Number of them?

H. Fras. I cannot be positive, whether Two or Three.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Were they new or old Ones?

H. Fras. They were new: They seemed to me to be new.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Arms were upon them?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat's Crest was upon them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you see any Colours?

H. Fras. I saw Colours at the House of Castle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Arms were upon them?

H. Fras. There was upon one large Pair of Colours my Lord Lovat's Arms, to the best of my Memory.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know if my Lord Lovat saw them?

H. Fras. I cannot tell.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any thing said to you, and by whom, to induce you to join the Pretender, more than you have given an Account of already?

H. Fras. There were several Things dropped in Conversation; but it is such a Distance of Time, that I cannot remember what they were.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was any Person present there, besides yourself and my Lord Lovat, when you was at his House?

H. Fras. There were several Persons there.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did any Conversation then pass or not about throwing off the Mask?

H. Fras. Yes; Mr. Alexander MacLeod, and several others of the Country there, were speaking about the Pretender; and Mr. Alexander MacLeod said, That much depended upon my Lord Lovat's throwing off the Mask, or Words to that Purpose.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. To whom did he say these Words?

H. Fras. To my Lord Lovat.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Answer did my Lord Lovat make to that?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat I saw take off his Hat, and put it upon the Ground, and heard him say, There it is then.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you remember any particular Healths that were drank then?

H. Fras. I have heard the Prince's Health drank several Times there at the Table at Castle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was my Lord Lovat present, or not? Or did he drink it?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat was present at the Table.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Force that was made use of in that Clan to make them rise?

H. Fras. I know there went Parties about.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing about his Expectation which Side would prevail?

H. Fras. I heard my Lord Lovat say, He was sure the Prince would prevail.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who did he mean? Who did he call the Prince? Who was he speaking of?

H. Fras. Of the Young Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Subsistence that was given by Lord Lovat to any body?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat say, That he had ordered his Factor to give an Allowance monthly or weekly to the Wives and Children of the Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Of whom?

H. Fras. Of those that went with his Clan.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Upon what Occasion did they go?

H. Fras. Those Men that were to go South with the Young Pretender.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was it all, or only those that were to be in his Clan?

H. Fras. There were a great many in the Country, that perhaps had nothing to support their Families in their Absence, when they were gone South.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know of any Letter that was shewn you from the Young Pretender, dispensing with my Lord Lovat's personal Presence?

H. Fras. Yes; I remember to have read the Letter.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Who gave it you to read?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. From whom was that Letter?

H. Fras. He said it was from the Marquis of Tullibardin.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How was the Letter signed?

H. Fras. The Letter was signed Athal, in large Letters.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. I don't remember the particular Contents of it. To the best of my Memory, it appeared to be in Return to another Letter, which had been sent by my Lord Lovat; and it was to excuse his personal Attendance.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Whose personal Attendance?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat's.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. His Attendance where?

H. Fras. To go South in the Pretender's Service.

L. H. S. Where is that Letter?

H. Fras. I don't know.

L. H. S. You say my Lord Lovat gave it you?

H. Fras. Yes.

L. H. S. What did you do with it?

H. Fras. I returned it again.

L. H. S. To whom did you return it?

H. Fras. To my Lord Lovat, or his Secretary; I don't know which.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you know whether there was any Reward given to the Clans, when they were raised, for their Subsistence?

H. Fras. I know there was Meal, Cows, and Mutton given them.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. For what was it given them?

H. Fras. To maintain those Men.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Where were they then?

H. Fras. There were several of them about Castle-Downey.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. By whose Order were those Things given?

H. Fras. That I don't know, indeed.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat say any thing about their being maintained by his, or any body else's Order?

H. Fras. I don't remember, indeed.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, the Witness has already told your Lordships what the Noble Prisoner at the Bar declared about the Person's Success, whom he called the Prince: I beg he may inform your Lordships, whether my Lord Lovat, when he spoke about that Success, did, or did not, say any thing about his sending for Men, and for what Purpose?

H. Fras. I don't remember what he said at that particular Time.

Mr. Noel. Do you at any other Time?

H. Fras. Yes, indeed: I heard my Lord Lovat say, He would send his Son and Men.

Mr. Noel. For what?

H. Fras. To serve the Prince.

Mr. Noel. Who did you understand he meant by the Prince?

H. Frazer. The Pretender's Son.

Mr. Noel. You mentioned the Particulars about pulling off the Mask: You said, that Mr. Alexander MacLeod said, That much depended on Lord Lovat's throwing off the Mask; that my Lord Lovat, upon that, threw his Hat upon the Floor, and said, Then there it is: Pray what was the Subject-Matter of the Conversation when that was done?

H. Frazer. The Subject-Matter of the Conversation was the Young Pretender's Cause; and it was about that they were speaking at that Time.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, the Managers have done with their Examination of this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, has your Lordship any Questions to ask this Witness?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, there have been such Proceedings against me since I was ordered to be tried, as never were heard of in Scotland or England.

L. H. S. In what respect does your Lordship mean?

Lord Lovat. I mean, that after I was brought up to be tried before your Lordships, the Impeachment had been read against me, my Answer put in to it, and the Commons had replied to it, and after I had Leave to summon Witnesses in my Defence, I had summoned a great many Witnesses out of Scotland to come here in my Defence, I did not imagine there would be the least Difficulty in their coming up: But, my Lords, I find there was a Person there, who was a kind of a Deputy-Sheriff, but never was known as an Officer of Justice, went to several private Meetings, and endeavoured to prevent my Witnesses coming up.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, I would not interrupt you, if it were not for your own Sake. If your Lordship has any Matter of Complaint, my Lords will be ready to hear you at a proper Time, upon a proper Application; but this is not a proper Time for such an Application. You have Counsel to advise you as to the proper Method and Time of doing it, with whom you must advise.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I was going to object to this Witness before he was sworn, because he had been called in by that Deputy-Sheriff, who threatened the Men, if they offered to come up to give Evidence for me; and some were put in Prison, and driven from their Houses, particularly those they thought would favour me; after I had your Lordships Order to summon my Witnesses: And therefore, I shall object to any Witness that shall come from that Little Court. I beg this Witness may be asked, whether he was examined at Inverness before he came here?

H. Frazer. Yes, I was.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I thought, as I was to be judged in a Court of the Supreme Judicature, and was innocent, that I was safe in such Hands; but I cannot think myself safe, when such Officers as those shall manage the Witnesses, and threaten those who will not say as they say.

L. H. S. I have already told your Lordship, that if you have any Complaint to make, you must make it at a proper Time, and in a proper Manner; and my Lords will hear it. You may go on to ask this Witness any Questions concerning any Practices that he knows of.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, if he was examined upon Oath, in December or January last, and by whom?

H. Frazer. Yes, I was examined at Inverness by one Killravock.

Lord Lovat. What is Killravock?

H. Frazer. He is a Gentleman that lives about four Miles from Inverness.

Lord Lovat. What is he?

H. Frazer. He had Substitution from the Sheriff-Depute.

Lord Lovat. Did you see Chevis of Murtoun? What Part did he act there?

H. Frazer. This Gentleman had got a Copy of the Charge sent into the Country; and he came in Obedience to that Charge, among the rest.

Lord Lovat. What is a Charge?

H. Frazer. A Kind of Summons.

Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any Person, to give Evidence against me? and by whom?—H. Frazer. I was not, indeed.

Lord Lovat. Was you promised any Favour, or Reward, for being Evidence against me?—H. Frazer. No, indeed.

Lord Lovat. By whom have you been maintained since you came to London?

H. Frazer. I have been, since I came to London, in the Custody of a Messenger.

Lord Lovat. By whom was you maintained?

H. Frazer. I do not know at whose Expence it was: I have had Victuals and Drink, and a Bed; and never was asked for any thing.

Lord Lovat. Have you been in Custody by any Order, Force, or Compulsion?

H. Frazer. No, not at all: I have not been under any Order, Force, or Compulsion.

Lord Lovat. Since you have been at the House of the Messenger, have you been at Liberty to go where you pleased?

H. Frazer. I have gone abroad, walked in the Park, and about Kensington; and I go out at Night to take a Glass.

Lord Lovat. When you went out, did not a Messenger attend you?

H. Frazer. Yes, he went to take a Walk with me.

A Lord. When was it that you were at Lord Lovat's House, that he said he would send his Son and Clan into the Pretender's Service?

H. Frazer. I think it was the Beginning of October 1745; it was after the Rebellion broke out.

A Lord. Where was it? and what Persons were then present?

H. Frazer. It was in my Lord Lovat's Room, at Castle-Downey.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I would beg leave to ask this Witness one Question for Form-sake: Pray what County is Castle-Downey in?

H. Frazer. It is in the County of Inverness.

A Lord. Pray, which of the Prisoner's Servants was present then?

H. Frazer. Upon my Word, I can't remember that.

Lord Lovat. Did you receive any Money, or were you promised any Money, for your Expences in coming to London, to be a Witness against me?—H. Frazer. There was Money given to bear our Expences.

A Lord. Pray, Who was present, when my Lord Lovat said, that he would send his Son, with his Men, into the Pretender's Service?

H. Frazer. I think there were several present; but I cannot condescend upon whom they were.

A Lord. Name any one of them: Was Alexander MacGloed there?

Hugh Frazer. I don't remember.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any more Questions to ask this Witness?

Lord Lovat. Not till I make my Defence; and then I hope your Lordships will give me Liberty.

L. H. S. Does your Lordship mean, that when you come to your Defence, you would ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. No, I don't mean that.

L. H. S. Your Lordship will be at Liberty to ask any other Witness what Questions you please.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Proposal of my Lord Lovat, to send his Son and Clan into the Pretender's Service, as you have mentioned, before or after the News of the Battle of Preston-Pans came into that Country?

H. Frazer. It was after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe any Difference in the Behaviour of my Lord Lovat, in regard to his raising his Clan, or taking any Steps towards it, after the News of that Battle, from what his Behaviour was before?

H. Frazer. I did not see my Lord Lovat before the Battle of Preston-Pans.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was it after the Battle of Preston-Pans that you saw him?

H. Frazer. I don't remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it before the News came to Castle-Downey, of the Troops from France being landed?

H. Frazer. Upon my Word, I don't remember.

[Then the Witness, by Order of the Lord High-Steward, withdrew.]

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg your Lordships Leave to withdraw for a little Time.

The Prisoner was carried from the Bar accordingly.

Serj. at Arms. Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all Manner of Persons to be uncovered, on Pain of Imprisonment.

In about a Quarter of an Hour, the Prisoner was again brought to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, The next Witness we shall beg Leave to produce, is John Riddell: Who was called in, and sworn.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objections against this Witness John Riddell?—Lord Lovat. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I beg this Witness may give your Lordships an Account, whether he knows the noble Lord at the Bar?

Riddell. Yes, I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember if you were at Castle-Downey soon after the Battle of Preston-Pans?

Riddell. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you before that Time see Barisdale, or any other Person, there?—Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he come there first by himself, or not?

Rid. I saw Kinloch Moidart there.

Mr. Att. Gen. At that Time?

Rid. I cannot remember whether it was the same Time, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was Barisdale there?

Rid. Two Nights.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he bring any Horses with him?

Rid. Four Dragoon Horses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Arms were upon the Furniture?

Rid. The King's Arms were upon them, and R and G, or a G and an R.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any of the Clan of the Frasers there?

Rid. At the same time some of them were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there at that Time?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever see any of the Chiefs of the Clans dine at my Lord Lovat's Table?—Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any Healths drank there?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Health did you hear drank?

Rid. Prince Charles's Health.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat present at the Time, or not?

Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat drink any of those Healths?

Rid. I cannot say that; I'm not sure, 'tis so long since.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat drink any other Healths relating to the Rebel Army?

Rid. Never, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear him say any thing, relating to his countenancing the Rebel Army?

Rid. No, I do not remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an Account, whether you ever saw any Meal delivered out at my Lord Lovat's.

Rid. My Lord Lovat has given Precepts for Meal several times.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you mean by Precepts?

Rid. Precepts for so much Oats for the Horses, or Meal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you mean by that an Order?—Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was done with the Meal that was ordered to you?

Rid. I got a Precept for Two Bolls of Meal, in Part of my Wages.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Precept that was given to Thomas Frazer?

Rid. Yes, for Four Bolls.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what?—Rid. It is more than I can tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of Bell-Tents being made?

Rid. Yes, I saw them made.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they made?
 Rid. At Castle-Downey.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What were they made for?—Rid. I can't tell.
 Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Order were they made?
 Rid. I can't tell.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What became of them?
 Rid. I heard they were sent to Perth.
 Mr. Att. Gen. For whose Use? for what Purpose were they sent there?
 Rid. They went there with a Company of Men; I don't know for whose Use they were.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Who were the Company of Men?
 Rid. They were the Frasers.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What were they collected together for?
 Rid. They marched Southward, with a Design to go to Perth, as I heard.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Whose People were at Perth then?
 Rid. The Rebel Army.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did they march to join them?
 Rid. 'Tis more than I can tell.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders from my Lord Lovat, concerning the preparing yourself, and Horses, to go with my Lord Lovat, or his Son?
 Rid. Yes; he ordered me to get myself ready to go.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where was you to go to?
 Rid. With the Master.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did not my Lord Lovat tell you where he was to go to?
 Rid. No, he did not, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you understand he was to go to?
 Rid. To Perth.
 Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpose?—Rid. To join that Army.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Army do you mean; the King's Army, or the Rebel Army?—Rid. I can't tell that.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How did you understand it? As you was to go to Perth, don't you know what Army you was to join?
 Rid. There was no Army at Perth but the Rebel Army.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any Number of Men passing by Lord Lovat's House?—Rid. Yes, very well.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see my Lord Cromartie, or his Officers, there?
 Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they continue there?—Rid. One Night.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of the Year was it?
 Rid. Hallowmass, or thereabouts.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing to these Gentlemen, concerning his Men being, or not being ready?
 Rid. I did not hear from my Lord Lovat; I heard it from some of his Servants.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear?
 Rid. I heard the Servants say, that my Lord Lovat mentioned something about the Men's not being ready.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing about it in the Chamber?
 Rid. No; if it was spoken, it was in the Erse Language; and I did not understand it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat present in the House when Lord Cromartie was there?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see them together at Table?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any of the Conversation that passed betwixt them?—Rid. No.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear nothing concerning the drinking of any Healths?—Rid. No, not at that Time I did not.
 Mr. Att. Gen. At what Time did you hear it?
 Rid. A good while before.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Healths were drank? and by whom?
 Rid. The Chieftains of the Clans drank Prince Charles's Health.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat present?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did he contradict the Health?
 Rid. I did not hear he did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was you present, or near, when a Number of Frasers were drawn up?
 Rid. I saw 700 Men together once.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they?—Rid. In the Aird.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Place near my Lord Lovat's House?
 Rid. It is within half a Mile.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there at that Time?
 Rid. No, I never saw my Lord Lovat there.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was he at home then?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. By whom were they drawn up?
 Rid. By my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Officers among them?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where did the Officers lodge?
 Rid. They went through into the Country, to Farmers Houses, Change-Houses, and Ale-Houses.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did any of them ever dine at my Lord Lovat's House?
 Rid. Sometimes they did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did they dine with my Lord Lovat himself?—Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did he know, that there were 700 Men drawn up there, or near that Place?
 Rid. I cannot tell, whether he knew, that there were 700 of them; but believe he knew they were there.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what Kind of Mark they had upon their Bonnets?—Rid. They had a Cockade, and Sprigs of Yew.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Kind of Cockades had they?
 Rid. White Cockades.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was not that the distinguishing Mark of the Rebel Army?
 Rid. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did they make use of the Sprigs of Yew as a distinguishing Mark?—Rid. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Companies of those Men there?
 Rid. Yes, Three or Four Companies.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where did they march to?—Rid. To the Southward.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, at any time, see any of the Officers take Leave of my Lord Lovat?—Rid. Yes, I did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What passed upon that Occasion? Which way did they take Leave of one another?
 Rid. My Lord Lovat shook Hands with them, kissed them; and bid them Farewell.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat wish them any thing?
 Rid. I cannot say I heard that.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember, that, at any time after, one Fraser of Byerly was with my Lord Lovat?
 Rid. Yes, that Man was always with my Lord Lovat.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat ask him any Questions about the Pretender's Son?—Rid. No, I never did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Recollect yourself, whether you did, or no?
 Rid. I cannot mind, indeed; if I did, it is out of my Memory.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat ask any other Person concerning the Pretender's Son?
 Rid. I heard my Lord Lovat once ask what sort of a Man he was.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Of whom did he ask that Question?
 Rid. Some of the Chieftains, some of them that had been at Falkirk; I do not know who they were.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember what Answer was given my Lord Lovat to that Question?—Rid. I do not.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember, whether my Lord Lovat mentioned any thing to him concerning the Pretender's Son's Preservation?
 Rid. I do not.
 Duke of Bedford. You say, that my Lord Cromartie's Men were at Castle-Downey, my Lord Lovat's House: Pray were they received there as Friends; or did they come there by Force?
 Rid. The Men did not come to Castle-Downey; only Lord Cromartie, his Son, and the Officers.
 Duke of Bedford. Did they come there by Force; or were they received as Friends?—Rid. They were in the House all Night.
 Duke of Bedford. Were they entertained as Friends?
 Rid. I did not hear any thing to the contrary; they were lodged there all Night.
 Mr. Att. Gen. You say you heard my Lord Lovat ask, what sort of a Man the Pretender's Son was? Pray, when was it that he asked that?
 Rid. I cannot name the Time certainly.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we have done with this Witness.
 Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons have done with this Witness; will you ask him any Questions?
 Lord Lovat. When was you brought to Town; and by whose Order was you sent to Town?
 Rid. I have been brought to Town since the 24th of August; and was sent up by the Judge-Advocate.
 Lord Lovat. What is the Judge Advocate's Name?
 Rid. David Bruce.
 Lord Lovat. Was you examined at Inverness, after the Battle of Culloden? and by whom?
 Rid. I was examined by the Judge-Advocate, in the Duke of Cumberland's Lodgings.
 Lord Lovat. When was you so examined?
 Rid. It was the 24th of April last.
 Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any Person to give Evidence against me? and by whom? And what was the Expression used on that Occasion?
 Rid. I was threatened to deliver up my Money, but not about my being an Evidence.
 Lord Lovat. What were the Threatenings?
 Rid. That they would put me in Prison, and hang me next Morning.
 Sir John Strange. My Lords, I would not interrupt the noble Lord at the Bar; but I would be glad to know who the Witness speaks of.
 Rid. After I was examined, they heard I had some Money: Brigadier Mordaunt demanded the Money: and Mr. Bruce threatened, that if I did not give up the Money to the Brigadier, I must go to Prison.
 Lord Lovat. Was you a Servant of mine?
 Rid. I served you for five Years.
 Lord Lovat. In what Capacity?—Rid. As a Groom.
 Lord Lovat. Was you taken Prisoner?
 Rid. I delivered myself up to the Duke of Cumberland, at Inverness, Eight Days after the Battle of Culloden.
 Lord Lovat. Who was it that threatened to hang you?
 Rid. The Judge-Advocate.
 Lord Lovat. Did any Person come to you, since you came to London, with a pretended Letter, said to be signed by me?
 Rid. Yes; there was a Man, whose Name is Lesly, who came to see if I knew my Lord Lovat's Hand.
 Lord Lovat. What was desired of you by that Person? And what Answer did you give him?
 Rid. I said, that I did not know, whether it was my Lord Lovat's Hand, or not; but that it did not look like it.
 Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I beg to know of this Witness, whether he did, or did not, surrender himself a Prisoner to the Duke, at Inverness?
 Rid. Yes; I did: I delivered up myself to the Duke, to get a Pass to go to Edinburgh; but never was in the Rebellion in my Life.
 Sir W. Yonge. Did you come to Inverness on Horseback?
 Rid. Yes: There were Two of us.
 Sir W. Yonge. Whose Horses had you?—Rid. My Lord Lovat's.
 Sir W. Yonge. You say there were Two of you; and that you were both on my Lord Lovat's Horses: and that you were threatened to have your Money taken from you?
 Rid. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge.

Sir W. Yonge. Pray how came you by that Money?
 Rid. By selling the Horses.
 Sir W. Yonge. Do you know, or was you informed of, the Contents of the Letter, which Mr. Lefly asked you, whether it was Lord Lovat's Hand?

Rid. I never saw the Letter, but the Subscription; and he shewed me that, to see if I knew it.

Sir W. Yonge. Did not Lefly inform you what were the Contents of the Letter?

Rid. No: To the best of my Remembrance, he said it was signed by my Lord Lovat in 1738.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce is William Walker: Who was called in, and sworn.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordship any Objection to this Witness?

Lord Lovat. No; I have none.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I beg leave to ask this Witness, If he lived in my Lord Lovat's Family? and how long?

Walker. Yes; for three Years and an half.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Persons coming to him after the Battle of Preston-Pans? and who were they?

Walker. Yes: There was Alexander MacLeod, and Mac Donald of Barisdale.

Sir W. Yonge. Was Kinloch Moidart there?—Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was young Glengary there?

Walker. Yes; He was there one Day; I think on a Sunday.

Sir W. Yonge. Did they dine at my Lord Lovat's Table?

Walker. Yes; all except Glengary.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Healths that were drank?

Walker. Yes: I heard Barisdale drink the young Pretender's Health.

Sir W. Yonge. By what Name?—Walker. By the Name of the Prince.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat present then?—Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know one Thomas Fraser, a Baker?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. During the Time that those Persons were at my Lord Lovat's House, did he give them any Advice? and what was it?

Walker. I never heard it: It was always in my Lord's Room; and I never went in, but at Dinner.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear them say any thing about the Young Pretender, and the Clan of the Frasers?

Walker. I heard my Lord Lovat say, That they must take care not to let the Young Pretender run into an Engagement.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know Thomas Fraser the Baker?—Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was he at my Lord Lovat's then?

Walker. He came to Castle-Downey, with some Colours they were to make at Inverness.

Sir W. Yonge. What Colours were they?

Walker. Two Standard Colours, four Bell-Tents, and two painted Flags.

Sir W. Yonge. What were they painted with?

Walker. My Lord Lovat's Arms were upon the Flags.

Sir W. Yonge. What became of those Things?

Walker. Cameron sent them away, after my Lord Lovat was taken.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember the Marching of Two Companies to Perth?—Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember soon after the Master of Lovat's coming into the Room where you was?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat there?—Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What passed there between them?

Walker. When the Master came into the Room, my Lord Lovat was speaking to him: I don't know what it was about.

Sir W. Yonge. What did the Master do then?

Walker. The Master rose up, and took his Bonnet, and threw it upon the Floor, and threw the White Cockade in the Fire, and damned the Cockade.

Sir W. Yonge. What did the Father do upon that Occasion?

Walker. He rose up in a Passion, and said, What could he do! and was forcing his Son out.

Sir W. Yonge. I beg you'll inform their Lordships, upon what Occasion it was that the Master of Lovat threw his Cockade into the Fire; and what his Father had said to him to occasion it?

Walker. I don't know that, indeed.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear his Father say any thing to him?

Walker. His Father spoke to him in Erse.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you understand Erse?

Walker. No; I do not. The Master of Lovat went to the Door; and Mr. Fraser the Minister stood up in the Master of Lovat's Behalf: Upon which, Mr. Fraser of Byersfield rose up, and said, What have you to do with it? You have no Estate to forfeit.

Sir W. Yonge. What said my Lord Lovat upon that?

Walker. I do not know what he said upon that.

Sir W. Yonge. Did they say nothing in English after that?

Walker. They spoke in a Language I did not understand.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat say nothing in English?

Walker. Not that I know of: Only he said, What could he do more! He was forcing his Son out, the very Life of him.

Sir W. Yonge. Pray do you know upon what Account that was said?

Walker. It was an Answer he gave to Byersfield.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom did Byersfield speak, when he said, He had no Estate to forfeit?

Walker. To Donald Fraser the Minister.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember any Thing about a Smith and a Tinker repairing any Arms?

Walker. Yes; There was one Hugh Menno, and another.

Sir W. Yonge. How long was it that they were at Castle-Downey?

Walker. About a Fortnight, I think.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there any Arms where they were?

Walker. Yes; in the Ward-Room.

Sir W. Yonge. Where was the Key kept of that Room?

Walker. The Key was very often in my Lord Lovat's Room, in his Custody.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat usually give out that Key to any body that went into the Ward-Room? Or did he use to go there himself?

Walker. My Lord always gave the Key out to any body that wanted it, to get Shoes for the Horses, or the like: My Lord never went there himself.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know any thing of the Smith and the Tinker's going into my Lord's Room?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What passed there? Did my Lord give them any thing?

Walker. A Dram.

Sir W. Yonge. Have you ever been in the Ward-Room?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What was usually kept there?

Walker. Several Sorts of Things; 'tis more than I can tell how many.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you see any Number of Men rendezvoused in that Neighbourhood?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What Number? How many Companies did you see?

Walker. I don't know how many Companies; the First of the Rendezvous, we reckoned there were 7 or 800 Men.

Sir W. Yonge. Were they armed?

Walker. Some of them were armed, and some not.

Sir W. Yonge. How far from Castle-Downey did you see those Men?

Walker. About a Mile from it.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you ever see them afterwards?

Walker. Yes; I saw a Company of them drawn up on the Green.

Sir W. Yonge. Was my Lord Lovat at home then? Did he see them drawn up?

Walker. He was at home; but I believe did not see them.

Sir W. Yonge. How near is that Green to my Lord Lovat's House?

Walker. About 100 or 200 Yards.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you know of any Violence or Force that was used to make the Men rise?

Walker. The Chamberlain forced them, and young Inverallachy.

Sir W. Yonge. In what Manner did they force them?

Walker. They threatened to burn their Houses, after the Battle of Culloden, if they did not rise.

Sir W. Yonge. But, before that, how did they threaten them?

Walker. That they would take their Cattle and Plaids from them, if they did not rise. Lord Lovat was then a Prisoner to my Lord Loudon, and was then in his Custody.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you remember when my Lord Cromartie marched by my Lord Lovat's?

Walker. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was Lord Cromartie, or his Son, or any of the Officers, at my Lord Lovat's?

Walker. Yes; my Lord Cromartie and Lord MacLeod were there all Night.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you hear my Lord Lovat make use of any Expressions, or Excuse, that his Men were not ready?

Walker. My Lord Lovat said, It was a Shame to see Lord Cromartie's Men go by his Nose: But what it was for, I can't tell.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We have done with our Examination of this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. Was you threatened by any one to give Evidence against me? and by whom? And what were the Expressions used on that Occasion?

Walker. No, I was not.

Lord Lovat. Was you examined at Inverness? and by whom?

Walker. I was examined at Inverness by Mr. Bruce and Brigadier Menzies.

Lord Lovat. What passed between you and Mr. Bruce?

Walker. I was examined: Nothing passed between me and Mr. Bruce at that time.

Lord Lovat. Or at any time afterwards?

Walker. Nor afterwards.

Lord Lovat. Was any Force used to get out the Men, while I was a Prisoner, or while I was at home, or after my Return from Inverness?

Lord High Steward. First, Was there any Force used to get out the Men, while my Lord Lovat was at home?

Walker. I cannot truly tell that: It is more than I can tell.

Lord High Steward. Was any such Force used while he was a Prisoner at Inverness?

Walker. Lord Lovat was with Lord Loudon when the Force was used to raise the Men.

Lord High Steward. Did you say, that the Dispute between Lord Lovat and his Son happened after the Frasers had marched Southwards, or not?

Walker. It was the Frasers of Stratharick that had marched; there was not a Man marched out of the Aird at that time.

Lord Lovat. Did I know of the Marching of the Men?

Walker. My Lord Lovat knew nothing of it: It was Fraser of Byersfield that took as many of the Frasers as he could get to the Castle of Culloden, in order to take the Lord President Prisoner: But my Lord Lovat knew nothing of that; for when he heard of it, he was like to go mad.

Lord Lovat. Was that the Occasion of my Quarrel with my Son?

Walker. No; my Lord Lovat, nor the Master of Lovat, knew nothing of it; for this Byersfield, as I heard, was designed to raise the Men without my Lord Lovat's Authority; and, if he had got the Command of the House of Culloden, he would have kept them there: It was he that marched with the Stratbarick Men to Pentb.

A Lord. Did my Lord Lovat, or his Son, know nothing of this?

Walker. No; they were Twenty-four Miles off.

A Lord. What was the Occasion of the Quarrel between Lord Lovat and his Son?

Walker. I cannot tell.

A Lord. Was you present in the Room, when the Dispute began between my Lord Lovat and his Son?

Walker. No; I was not in the Room: I came in with a Dish in the mean time; and there was this little John Fraser of Byersfield speaking to my Lord: My Lord Lovat fell foul of the Master, who rose up, and took his Cockade off the 'Scriptore, and threw the Cockade into the Fire, and damned it.

A Lord. What Language did they talk in?

Walker. They talked in Erse, when I heard it first.

A Lord. You say, that Fraser the Minister took part with the Master?

Walker. Yes.

A Lord. Did he talk in Erse?

Walker. Yes.

A Lord. Then how do you know he spoke in favour of the Master?

Walker. The Reason why I knew it was, that little John Fraser flew up to Donald Fraser, and said, He had no Estate to forfeit; and that, if he had got a Stipend, it was all he had to take care of.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether I used my Endeavours to get my Men home after they were taken out by Fraser of Byersfield, or any other Person?

Walker. Mac Donald of Barisdale would have my Lord Lovat's Men out, and was never away from the House; and there came on a great Snow, that my Lord Lovat's Men did not go out at that time; but about Two Days after that, some of them went up to a Hill with Barisdale's Men; and they would take Cattle, to maintain them upon the Road: When my Lord Lovat sent for them from Urquhart, and brought them all back again. When there was any of them risen at all, then my Lord was Prisoner with Lord Loudon.

A Lord. Pray what kind of Servant is a Chamberlain?

Walker. The Steward, who gathers in the Rents.

A Lord. Did you ever hear of the Crofs being carried about the Country?

Walker. I never either saw it, or heard of it.

Lord Lovat. Do you know, whether Fraser of Dumballock, that was here To-day, went out in Arms, at the Head of a Company, to Urquhart, till I brought him home?

Walker. I saw him that Day at Lord Lovat's Table; but whether he got to Urquhart, or no, I cannot tell.

A Lord. Did the Men that went to Urquhart dine with my Lord Lovat?

Walker. Yes.

[Then the Witnesses, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, The next Witness we shall produce, is Hugh Monro.

Hugh Monro called in.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordship any Objection against Hugh Monro's being examined as a Witness?

Lord Lovat. Yes; he is my Tenant.

Lord High Steward. Would your Lordship have him examined upon that Point?

Lord Lovat. Yes.

The Witness was sworn upon a Voire dire.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, What Questions would you ask him?

Lord Lovat. Have you any Lands, Houses, or Yard, that you hold of me?—Monro. Yes.

L. H. S. What Lands do you hold of my Lord Lovat?

Monro. Six Bolls a Year.

L. H. S. How do you hold it of my Lord Lovat, as Vassal, or by Lease or Tack?

Monro. While I was a Servant, I had it from him.

L. H. S. Do you hold it of my Lord Lovat now?

Monro. Another Man hath taken Possession there.

L. H. S. Have you the same Tenure under my Lord Lovat as you had before?

Monro. Yes.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, If he holds any Lands of my Lord Lovat at this time.

Monro. I have the same Land that I had before; but another Man hath it in Possession ever since Whitsunday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that other Man's Name?

Monro. Kilbocky.

Mr. Att. Gen. How does he hold it of my Lord?

Monro. I don't know.

Lord Lovat. Do you think you have any Right to hold this Land, though another Man is in Possession of it?

Monro. No, I have no Right to hold it.

Lord Sandys. Why do you say you have no Right to hold it?

Monro. Because the Superior Lord may turn me out of the Land at any time.

Lord Sandys. Has the Superior Lord turned you out of the Land?

Monro. No.

L. H. S. Who do you take to be your Superior Lord?

Monro. My Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Had you any Wages from my Lord Lovat, while you was his Servant?

Monro. Yes; I had.

Sir W. Yonge. What were the Wages you had?

Monro. Five Pounds a Year.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it paid in Money, or in Lands of any Rent?

Monro. It was paid in Land.

VOL. IX.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that the Land you now speak of which you hold of my Lord Lovat?

Monro. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Have you any Title to that Land, now you are not his Servant?

Monro. I don't know what Way it is.

Sir W. Yonge. Do you think you have any Claim to the Land, now you are not his Servant?

Monro. No; I have none.

Sir W. Yonge. How long have you left my Lord Lovat's Service?

Monro. I was always his Servant: I did not leave his Service.

Lord Lovat. The Person that now is in Possession of that Land, has he it by my Consent?

Monro. I don't know: The Man that is in Possession says he must have the Rent this Year.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hold this Land by any Writing?

Monro. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever hold it by any Contract for any certain Term?

Monro. I had the Land from my Lord Lovat, for what I worked for him in the Year.

Lord Lovat. Was you turned out of this Land by Force, or against your Will?

Monro. No; I was not.

A Lord. By what Means was you dispossessed of this Land?

Monro. I have the same Land yet.

Mr. Grenville. In what Capacity was you a Servant to my Lord Lovat?

Monro. I was his Blacksmith.

Mr. Grenville. Do you know the Person, who, you say, is now in Possession of that Land?

Monro. Indeed do I.

Mr. Grenville. What is he? Is he a Servant to my Lord Lovat?

Monro. No; He is a Gentleman.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, I submit it to your Lordships, as this Witness has already contradicted himself several times, whether he should not be ordered to withdraw.

Sir J. Strange. I stood up to acquaint your Lordships, that we should not insist on the Examination of this Witness; but desire it may be understood, that we only do that from the Manner of his answering the Questions which have been asked him; and do not thereby submit to the Objection that has been made against him by the noble Lord at the Bar.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

The Duke of Newcastle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have most humbly represented to your Lordships every Day of my Trial, that I am so weak and feeble, that I am not able to attend your Lordships. I fainted away thrice this Morning, before I came up to your Lordships Bar; but yet was determined to shew my Respect to your Lordships, or die upon the Road. My Lords, it is impossible for me to come up in the Manner I have done for these Three Days past. I am every Day obliged to get up by Three or Four o'Clock in the Morning; and therefore I beg your Lordships to have Compassion on me, and to give me a later Hour, and a Day's Respite, that I may try to recover myself.

The Lord High Steward went back to his Chair: And then the House adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords, and others, returned in the same Order as before.

The House being there resumed,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Trial of Simon Lord Lovat in Westminster-Hall, on Friday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Friday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Friday the 13th Day of March, 1746,

The Fourth Day.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, the Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on Monday last, into Westminster-Hall: Where the Commons and their Managers were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court; and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

L. H. S. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serj. at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, Bring forth your Prisoner, Simon Lord Lovat, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before. And then he kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordship may rise.

The Lord High Steward desired Leave to go down to the Table: And went down accordingly.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You may proceed.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, the next Witness we shall produce to your Lordships is Thomas Fraser.

THOMAS FRASER called into Court.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, We desire this Witness Thomas Fraser may be sworn.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, has your Lordship any Objection against Thomas Frazer being sworn as a Witness?
 Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have no Objection to him; but, my Lords, I am not able to rise up, and sit down, having been ill all Night, and am very ill now. I hope your Lordships will excuse my rising up and down.
 Thomas Frazer sworn.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, I would ask this Witness, If he knows my Lord Lovat? And I desire he would speak out.

T. Fras. Yes, my Lords, as well as I do myself.

Mr. Yorke. How long have you known him?

T. Fras. Ever since I was a Child.

Mr. Yorke. Have you been employed to work for my Lord Lovat at any time about September 1745; and upon what Occasion was you so employed? Answer the Question distinctly.

T. Fras. No; I never was employed by him.

Mr. Yorke. Was you employed at Castle-Downey about that Time?

T. Fras. Yes, I was at Castle-Downey, and was employ'd by my Lord's Chamberlain.

Mr. Yorke. About what Business?

T. Fras. About mending some old Colours.

Mr. Yorke. And what else was you employed in?

T. Fras. About some Camp-Colours.

Mr. Yorke. Was you employed in any thing else?

T. Fras. Yes: There were some Bells for Arms that I was employed about.

Mr. Yorke. Who gave you Directions about making these Things?

T. Fras. John Frazer, my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain or Steward; and he paid me for my Pains when I had done.

Mr. Yorke. At what House was this Work done?

T. Fras. Most of it was done at my own House at Inverness.

Mr. Yorke. Was none of the Work done at Castle-Downey?

T. Fras. There was a Camp-Colour, and some other Things, done at Castle-Downey.

Mr. Yorke. Whose Arms were put upon these Colours, or Bells for Arms?

T. Fras. There was no Arms upon them, but the Crest of Lord Lovat's Family, the Deer's Head.

Mr. Yorke. Was that Crest put both upon the Bell-Tents and Colours?

T. Fras. It was upon the Camp-Colours, and Bells of Arms.

Mr. Yorke. Were the Arms upon the Colours?

T. Fras. They were a Stand of old Colours that were done by Frazer.

Mr. Yorke. Where were these Colours set up afterwards? Or, were they set up at all?

T. Fras. Yes, I stuck them up on the Green of Castle-Downey.

Mr. Yorke. Did my Lord Lovat ever see them there?

T. Fras. To my Knowledge, he never did.

Mr. Yorke. What were those Bell-Tents and Colours, which you painted, intended for? What was to be the Use of them?

T. Fras. I cannot tell that, upon my Faith.

Mr. Yorke. Did my Lord Lovat know of your being employed about these Things?

T. Fras. No; he did not, to my Knowledge, as I shall answer.

Mr. Yorke. Who paid you for them?

T. Fras. The Chamberlain, or Steward.

Mr. Yorke. Do you think the Chamberlain would have paid you for them, without my Lord Lovat's Order?

T. Fras. I can't tell that: Let the Judges determine that.

Mr. Yorke. Pray who used to pay you for Work that you had done for my Lord Lovat before that? ---T. Fras. The Chamberlain.

Mr. Yorke. Was my Lord Lovat in the House at the same Time?

T. Fras. Yes; he was in the House: He was very sick.

Mr. Yorke. Did you observe my Lord Lovat ever look at these Colours that you set up?

T. Fras. I saw him one fair Morning take a Walk upon the Green, and take an old Colour in his Hand.

Mr. Yorke. Did he see there the Colours which you set up?

T. Fras. Yes, the Bells of Arms and Colours.

Mr. Yorke. Did he say any thing to you about them?

T. Fras. Yes: He seemed to be very ill pleased.

Mr. Yorke. What was he ill pleased with?

T. Fras. I don't know whether it was with the Manner of doing the Work, or because it was done at all.

Mr. Yorke. When his Lordship expressed himself ill pleased, did he direct you to take them away, or not?

T. Fras. No: They were to stay there till they were dried by the Wind.

Mr. Yorke. When he expressed himself to be ill pleased, did he order them to be taken away?

T. Fras. He did not speak a Word to me afterwards about them.

Mr. Yorke. Do you know what became of those Colours?

T. Fras. No: I went home to Inverness, which is the Place of my Residence: But, when I am employed by any Man, I must answer and obey.

Mr. Yorke. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?---Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the next Witness we shall produce is Hugh Frazer, who was Secretary to my Lord Lovat from 1741 to 1744, when Robert Frazer, who was before examined, became Secretary in his Room.

Hugh Frazer was called in.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to this Witness?

Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, As the noble Lord at the Bar has complained, that he is sick and faint, I move, That your Lordships may dispense with his rising up.---Lords. Ay, ay.

Hugh Frazer sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the noble Lord at the Bar?

Hugh Frazer. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him? and raise your Voice.

H. Fras. I've known my Lord Lovat for about Five Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever serve my Lord Lovat, and in what Capacity?

L. H. S. Raise your Voice, Mr. Frazer.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Capacity did you serve Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I served my Lord Lovat in the Capacity of a Secretary.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you first come into his Service? and when did you quit it?

H. Fras. I came into Lord Lovat's Service in April or May 1741, and left it towards the End of December 1744.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account to my Lords, whether you was at Edinburgh in the Month of September 1745?---H. Fras. I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know one William Frazer of Beluain? Was he then at Edinburgh?

H. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you and he any, and what, Conversation together? And did you come to any Resolution upon it, in order to your going to my Lord Lovat's?

H. Fras. I had a Conversation with Mr. Frazer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you Two come to any Resolution together concerning your going to my Lord Lovat's, in relation to his Son the Master of Lovat?---H. Fras. We did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to tell my Lords what that Resolution or Agreement between you was.

H. Fras. The Resolution between Mr. Frazer and me was this, That as there had, at that Time, a Rebellion broke out in the North of Scotland, it was agreed between us to be proper, that I should go into the North Country, in order to converse with my Lord Lovat upon the Subject of his Son's going out of Scotland, to avoid any Censure, or wrong Interpretation that might be put upon his Conduct, as he was then in that Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you and this Frazer, at that Time, any Apprehensions that he might be prevailed upon to go into the Rebellion?

H. Fras. We had no Grounds for any Apprehensions, further than the spreading Contagion there was at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Proposals made by William Frazer, or you, to prevent his being infected with that Contagion?

H. Fras. The Proposal made by Mr. Frazer, and agreed to by me, was, that he should be removed, and go abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, or did you not, propose that he should go abroad?

H. Fras. The Thing was unanimous: I don't know which of us proposed it.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Place was he to go?

H. Fras. We intended that he should go to Liden.

Mr. Att. Gen. At whose Expence was he to go to Liden?

H. Fras. The Expence in the End was to fall on my Lord Lovat; but it was to be defrayed by Mr. Frazer for a Year, to be advanced by him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was agreed upon, with respect to making any Proposals of this Kind to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. It was agreed, That it should be proposed to my Lord Lovat, and his Son; and was not to be done without my Lord's Consent.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it agreed upon, that you should go to my Lord Lovat upon this Proposal?

H. Fras. Yes; it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. And did you go to him?---H. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And did you deliver the Message to him?

H. Fras. I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what Answer did he give you?

H. Fras. He approved very much of the Proposal, and agreed to the Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did he continue in that Agreement to this Proposal?

H. Fras. Some Days after, he said, He did not think it quite so convenient a Thing; and that he had altered his Mind in regard to That.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did he say any thing concerning his Intention about the Master his Son's going into the Rebellion?

H. Fras. He communicated his Design to me, when he talked to me on the Subject; which was, that the Master should.

Mr. Att. Gen. Should do what?

H. Fras. Should go into the Rebellion; that is, to head the Clan of the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing, or no, concerning his own Intentions originally to head the Clan in the Rebellion?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat told me then, That he had intended to head them himself; but that he had altered his Resolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpose, or with what View, did he alter his Resolution?

H. Fras. In order to stay himself at home, I suppose.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who was intended to go in his room?

H. Fras. I said before, That the Master was to head the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you mean, by saying he altered his Resolution, that he had resolved the Master should go?

H. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing concerning the Number of Men that he had thought might have been raised, or that would rise?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat did talk to me of a greater Number of Men he thought might be raised, than was likely to rise.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Number did he mention?

H. Fras. If I remember right, he talked of Four or Five thousand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give any Reason, in relation to his Resolution, concerning the Master's going out, instead of himself?

H. Fras. He told me, That he had once intended to have headed them himself, in Expectation that there would be a Rising of Four or Five thousand Men; but, as that was not then likely to happen, he intended that the Master of Lovat should go with the Clan, to head them.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, If he, at that Time, told you of any Disappointment he met with from other People?

H. Fras. He talked in general, That some People had not acted up to their Engagements, or to that Purpose.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, If you remember the Time when the Battle of Preston-Pans happened?

H. Fras. Yes: I remember the Time very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you at Castle-Downey after, or before that?

H. Fras. After that Battle.

Mr. At. Gen. How long were you there after that Battle?

H. Fras. It may be about Eight Days after.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any body come to Castle-Downey when you was there, and give an Account to my Lord Lovat of that Battle; and who was it?

H. Fras. There were several Gentlemen came to Castle-Downey while I was there; who said they had been in that Action.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they say concerning it?

H. Fras. What they said of it was, giving a History of the Matter of Fact.

Mr. At. Gen. Who did they give the History to?

H. Fras. To the Company, where I was present: I don't know to whom in particular.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Lord Lovat present at any Conversation of that Kind?—H. Fras. I do not doubt but he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember whether he was, or not?

H. Fras. I believe he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you hear Lord Lovat say any Thing, and what, concerning that Battle?

H. Fras. I remember to have heard my Lord Lovat say, That it was a Victory obtained, not to be paralleled in History.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg you will give an Account to their Lordships, Who the Persons were that came to my Lord Lovat's with this Account of the Battle? Please to name them.

H. Fras. That they came with an Account of the Battle, is more than I can say.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were the Persons that told it? and who were there?

H. Fras. Mac Donald of Barisdale was there,

Mr. At. Gen. Was any other Person there?

H. Fras. There were with him Servants, and one Gentleman, I think, that was in Company.

Mr. At. Gen. Was young Glengarie there?

H. Fras. Yes: The Son of Glengarie was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Were Barisdale and Glengarie in the Rebellion, or no?

H. Fras. So they said themselves.

Mr. At. Gen. Are these the Persons that said they had been in the Battle?

H. Fras. They said they had been there; and gave an Account of their own Conduct in it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they say they came Northward for?

H. Fras. That they told their real Business, I cannot affirm. What they gave out was, That they intended to levy more Men, in order to prosecute the Affair they had undertaken.

Mr. At. Gen. What Affair do you understand that to have been?

H. Fras. The Rebellion, sure enough.

Mr. At. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat present, or no, at the Time when they declared what they came into the North for?

H. Fras. He must have been present; because, where I heard them speak of it, was in his Room.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember my Lord Lovat said any Thing, and what, upon his being told of the Views of Barisdale and Glengarie's coming into the North?

H. Fras. He said, They might raise Five thousand Men: And I don't remember I heard him say any more upon this Subject.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did you continue at Castle-Downey this Time that you went there?

H. Fras. For a matter of Twelve or Fourteen Days, I believe, at first.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did you go to when you went from Castle-Downey?—H. Fras. I returned to Edinburgh.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat charge you with any Thing to be communicated at Edinburgh, as from him?

H. Fras. I am sorry to say he did.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Charge my Lord Lovat gave you to communicate? and to whom was you to communicate it?

H. Fras. What my Lord Lovat gave me in Charge to communicate, was in Import, the Conversation I before mentioned to have passed at Castle-Downey, That he had once intended to have raised and headed such a Number of Men as I mentioned.

Mr. At. Gen. What Number was that?

H. Fras. Four or Five thousand, the Number I have mentioned already.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an Account to my Lords, of the Remainder of the Messages which my Lord Lovat sent by you to Edinburgh.

H. Fras. It was this: That he intended to have headed such a Number of Men; but that his Age and Infirmities would not allow him to do that; and that he had resolved his Son should head the Frasers, and go into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat add any Thing to what you have now mentioned? Did he give any Reason why he chose to send his Son rather than go himself?

H. Fras. I have given the Reason already: To the best of my Remembrance, that was the principal Reason.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give any other? Did he mention any Thing relating to his Marks of Affection for the Cause?

H. Fras. He said, the Master of Lovat's going, for whom he had such Regard, was a greater Mark of his Attachment and Affection, than if he had gone himself.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he, at that Time, mention any Thing of the Danger there might be of his going himself personally? and what Danger was it?

H. Fras. He talked much of the Inconvenience and Danger that would attend it; and mentioned the Inconvenience of crossing the Forth; and that it could be done no other Way than by the Bridge of Stirling.

A Lord. I desire to know to whom the Message was sent?

Mr. At. Gen. I intended to ask the Question the noble Lord mentions. You were giving an Account of some Inconveniences that Lord Lovat had mentioned; go on with it.

H. Fras. I have given the Reason why he did not go himself; I mentioned Stirling Bridge; and that he said it was impossible for him to cross the Forth elsewhere; and that might be very dangerous to him.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did he charge you with that Message? or to whom was it to be delivered?—H. Fras. To the Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, deliver that Message to the Pretender's Son?—H. Fras. I did deliver it to him.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did the Pretender's Son give you to it?

H. Fras. The Answer he gave, was no more than that it was very well, or to that Purpose.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was it gave that Answer to you?

H. Fras. The Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did you continue at Edinburgh after this, before you went from thence?

H. Fras. I continued at Edinburgh from that Time, which was the Time of my Arrival from the North, in the Beginning of October, till the Beginning of November after.

Mr. At. Gen. Before you left Edinburgh, did any Person, in Behalf of the Pretender's Son, come to you, and who, in order to employ you upon any Message to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I left Edinburgh twice; which of the Times is meant?

Mr. At. Gen. When you left Edinburgh at the Beginning of November.

H. Fras. Before I left Edinburgh in November, I was called upon by one who appeared to me to be in the Service of the Pretender, and by him carried to Holyrood-House.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was at Holyrood-House then?

H. Fras. The Pretender's Son was the principal Tenant.

Mr. At. Gen. When you came to Holyrood-House, who was the Person you was brought before? and what Conversation passed between you?

H. Fras. I was brought before Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Who is he?

H. Fras. John Murray of Broughton, who then took upon him the Name of Secretary to the Pretender's Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Was any body with Mr. Murray at the Time you had this Meeting with him, when you went to Holyrood-House?

H. Fras. There were two or three Gentlemen in the House.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you name them?—H. Fras. Some of them I can.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were they?—H. Fras. Cameron of Lochiel was one.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there else?

H. Fras. Mac Donald, and Stuart of Ardshields; these Three were in the Room with Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mac Donald of Keppoch there?—H. Fras. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What did Mr. Murray say to you upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. He told me, that there had been a Letter intercepted from the North, which was directed to me; and that he understood, from that Letter, that it was owing to me that the Frasers had not already marched.

Mr. At. Gen. Marched whither?

H. Fras. Marched, and gone into the Rebellion; and that the Letter bore, that none of them would march till I should go into the North Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Was any Thing said concerning my Lord Lovat upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. I believe Mr. Murray told me, that he had heard from a Gentleman who was one of their own Party, that my Lord Lovat was very well disposed towards supporting the Cause.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he say any Thing concerning my Lord Lovat's Intention to raise Men, or no?—H. Fras. I can't tell.

Mr. At. Gen. In the Letter was any Thing of it mentioned?

H. Fras. The Letter I never saw: it was not given to me: I asked for a Sight of the Letter, and asked from whom it was written; and they told me it was from one of the Frasers.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you give any Answer to this, or no?

H. Fras. The Answer I gave was, That it was a Misrepresentation of me, and a Falshood.

Mr. At. Gen. In what respect was it a Misrepresentation?

H. Fras. Because the moving, or not moving, of the Frasers, no way depended on me.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to give an Account, and go on with what passed between Mr. Murray and you.

H. Fras. Mr. Murray said, That it was possible it might be so; but that it was necessary for the Vindication of my Character, that I should go into the North Country.

Mr. At. Gen. Go on.

H. Fras. I told him, that my Business would not allow me to do it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was agreed upon then?

H. Fras. That I should write such an Account of the Situation of the Rebel Army at Edinburgh, as he then gave me; and they would be satisfied with such Account.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, agree to this?

H. Fras. I did agree to it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Consequence of that Agreement?

H. Fras. I agreed to it, and obtained a Pass for the Bearer of it; and, in Consequence of that Pass, I meant to send what I took to be the real State of the Matter on both Sides.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not write, according to this Proposal?

H. Fras. I went to write, and was about doing it, when I was called upon a second Time by the same Person who had called upon me before, and was brought by him to the same Place.

Mr. At. Gen. What passed when you was thus brought back to the same Place?

H. Fras. I was told that Writing would not do, but I must go myself.

L. H. S. Who told you so?—H. Fras. Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Be pleased to inform their Lordships, what was done upon that. Did you, or did you not agree to go?

H. Fras. In the End, I did agree to it, because I understood, if I had not, I must have expected a worse Service.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Message you was to go upon?

H. Fras. The Message I was charged with was to give such an Account of their own Situation as they had given me.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you charged with any Letter for my Lord Lovat? and from whom?

H. Fras. There was a Letter from Mr. John Murray delivered to me, and directed to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it delivered to you open or sealed?

H. Fras. The Letter was open when it was delivered to me.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you or did you not read it?

H. Fras. I did read it.

Mr. At. Gen. Who delivered it to you?

H. Fras. Mr. Murray.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, give an Account to my Lords of the Contents of that Letter that was thus delivered to you by Mr. Murray.

H. Fras. The Import, or Contents of the Letter, was, to the best of my Remembrance, that Mr. Murray was extremely glad of the Accounts he had received, with respect to my Lord Lovat's Intentions; and that he begged of him to persevere in them; and that he earnestly desired, that the Frasers should march forthwith: And I think, to the best of my Remembrance, there was a Route directed for them.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Place mentioned where they were to meet the Army?

H. Fras. The Place where it was intended, according to that Route, they should join the Rebel Army, was about Moffat or Carlisle.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you go with that Letter or not to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I went into the North Country; and some time after my Arrival at that Place, I delivered that Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did you deliver that Letter?

H. Fras. To my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. When you delivered Lord Lovat that Letter, did you give him any Account of the Situation either of the Rebels, or the King's Army, or of the Affairs relating to the Rebellion?

H. Fras. I gave him the Account, which I intended to have wrote, of the Situation on both Sides of the Question, so far as I knew of it.

Mr. At. Gen. What was that Representation that you made, and did, in Fact, deliver or give to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. The Representation I delivered to my Lord Lovat at that time was this, That with respect to the Government, there were above 21 Battalions of Forces arrived from Flanders: That there were two Regiments arrived from Ireland: That the Dutch Auxiliaries were expected: And that the Rebels did not seem to be a Party sufficient, according to their Number, to engage with such a Number of regular and well-disciplined Forces.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat say to this Representation of yours, that you thus made to him?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat said, that he conceived what I had said, with respect to the Situation of Affairs on both Sides of the Question, to be very true.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he say, as the Consequence of that Belief of his?

H. Fras. He further said,—But that he thought himself too far engaged to look back.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he say any thing else relating to that Matter?

H. Fras. Yes, I believe it was Part of the Conversation, that he forbid me to mention or intimate any thing of the Conversation that had thus passed between us to his Son.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you tell the Reason why he was unwilling that his Son should know of it?

H. Fras. As for the Reason, that must depend upon my own Conjecture, since Lord Lovat expressed none.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you continue at my Lord Lovat's House after this for any, and what Time?

H. Fras. I continued from my Arrival there, which was the Beginning of November, till the Middle or towards the End of December.

Mr. At. Gen. You had by that an Opportunity of seeing some of my Lord Lovat's Conduct, and hearing his Conversation: Please to give an Account to my Lords, whether there was any Rendezvous of the Frasers, my Lord Lovat's Clan, during the Time you were there?

H. Fras. I heard there was a Rendezvous before I came into the Country, but I was present at none, nor saw any while I was there. I suppose by the Word Rendezvous, you mean a Gathering of Men.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ever seen any of them?

H. Fras. I never saw an universal one, or general one: Perhaps I might see forty or fifty Men together at a Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you seen forty or fifty Men at a Time gathered together there, as a Body of Men in Arms?

H. Fras. No, I cannot say I did see, or was present at any Gathering of Men in Arms.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever see a List of the Officers appointed out of my Lord Lovat's Clan?

H. Fras. I have seen such a List.

Mr. At. Gen. By whom was that List shewn to you?

H. Fras. It was shewn to me by the Master of Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know, whether my Lord Lovat saw that List?

H. Fras. I do not know that, indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you yourself appointed or named as one of the Officers in that List?

H. Fras. I was.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Office or Post you had there?

H. Fras. I was named there a Captain-Lieutenant.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat call you by that Name or Title, or by any other, after this Time?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat has called me by that Name after this.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it or was it not the usual Name he called you by?

H. Fras. Yes, very often.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ever call you by the Name of Captain before that Time?

H. Fras. No.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you understand by your being called by that Name by my Lord Lovat? Did you understand by that, that he looked upon you as a Captain or Officer in his Son's Regiment?

H. Fras. I understood by that, that my Lord Lovat apprehended it was so wrote in that List.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat understand by it, and so express himself, that you were actually a Captain, as well as wrote so in that List?

H. Fras. Actually a Captain I was not; he could not understand what was not, because as I had not undertaken or done any thing, all the Foundation he had for calling me Captain, was owing to my Name being in that List.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you had any Conversation with my Lord Lovat concerning his Dissatisfaction at his Son's Backwardness in raising the Frasers?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat complain sometimes of his Son's Backwardness to raise the Clan, and sometimes of his too much Forwardness.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear him say any thing concerning the Consequence of this Engagement of his in the Rebellion, in respect to himself?

H. Fras. I have heard him say, that he apprehended the Conduct of his Clan, upon this Occasion, would be his Ruin, and very probably cost him his Life.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg you will inform their Lordships, whether the Officers of this Clan, or of the Master of Lovat's Regiment, did or did not to live or dine with my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I have dined at my Lord Lovat's Table several Times, with the Officers who were named in that List.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear the Pretender's Son spoken of at Dinner, or at any other Time, in my Lord Lovat's House?

H. Fras. Any particular Conversation, with respect to the Pretender's Son, I cannot recollect; but that he has been spoken of, there is little Reason to doubt, because it was the Topick of Conversation in all the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. By what Name or Title was the Pretender's Son usually called, in the Conversation between my Lord Lovat and those Officers?

H. Fras. To the Conversation between my Lord Lovat and those Officers, I cannot answer; but in the Conversation upon that Subject, in my Lord Lovat's Presence, I can say he was called Prince Charles.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lords, I will beg Leave to ask the Witnesses concerning another Matter of Fact: Did you ever hear my Lord Lovat say any thing concerning a Patent to create him Duke of Fraser, by the Pretender?

H. Fras. I have heard him say there was such a thing in being.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ever say, whether he had or had not seen the original Patent, or any Copy of it?

H. Fras. He did not say that he had seen the Patent; I think he said he had never seen it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever hear him say any Thing concerning any Copy of it which he had?

H. Fras. He shewed me half a Sheet of Paper, whereon was wrote what had been shewn or given to him, as a Copy of such a Patent.

Mr. At. Gen. What Patent do you mean?

H. Fras. The Patent to create him a Duke.

Mr. At. Gen. By whom was that Patent said to be granted?

H. Fras. The Copy that I saw was in the Name of one whom I took to be the Old Pretender, who called himself James the VIIth.

Mr. At. Gen. How was that subscribed, do you recollect?

H. Fras. I don't remember it was subscribed, or superscribed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Name at the Top of it?

H. Fras. I really cannot say.

Mr. At. Gen. That Copy which you saw, by whom was it shewn to you?

H. Fras. It was shewed me by my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. You was saying, that you continued with my Lord Lovat, from the second Time you came to Castle-Downey, to the latter End of December: Please to inform their Lordships, if during that Interval of Time, any of the Men of the Frasers did actually march, in order to go to the Pretender's Army, or to join them?

H. Fras. Yes; there were Men that marched: About six or seven Companies of Men marched about six or seven Miles from their own Country, to an adjacent Country.

Mr. At. Gen. What Place was that they went to?

H. Fras. It was a Place called Urquhart.

Mr. At. Gen. What became of those Men? How far did they march?

H. Fras. I said before, about six or seven Miles.

Mr. At. Gen. Were they afterwards recalled?

H. Fras. They were.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were they recalled by?

H. Fras. They were recalled by a Letter from my Lord Lovat, directed to his Son, the Master of Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Did, or did not, they comply with that Letter which recalled them?

H. Fras. The Son complied; and they, in Consequence, I suppose complied with the Son's Orders.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the whole Clan comply?

H. Fras. All, except about 25 of them.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they return to their own Habitations?

H. Fras. They returned.

Mr. At. Gen. At or about what Time was this?

H. Fras. I believe it was in the Month of November.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Sir, I would ask you, Did you take it, that the Master of Lovat marched with them, by Order of my Lord Lovat; or was it out of his own Head that he thus marched?

H. Fras.

H. Fras. The Men had marched, and were in that Country, before the Master of Lovat went from Castle-Downey: When he went from Castle-Downey, it was not with a View to proceed upon that March, in case he should be able to prevail on the Men to return. I went along with the Master; and after we came where the Men were, we called the Officers together, and proposed to them that they should return: The only Reason we gave them for this Advice was, a Storm of Snow which then fell, and which would probably render their March very troublesome: But, by the Influence of Mac Donald of Barisdale, it was carried against the Master's Sentiments that they should march. Upon that Resolution, I returned to Castle-Downey; and a few Hours after my Return, my Lord Lovat wrote the Letter I mentioned himself; which occasioned their coming back.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to inform their Lordships, whether you was sent at any Time, by my Lord Lovat, to the President of the Session of Scotland: Or mention first, if my Lord President was at Inverness.

H. Fras. He then was at his own House at Culloden.

Mr. At. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there?

H. Fras. He was at Inverness.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you sent by my Lord Lovat to the Lord President, or to my Lord Lovat, with any, and what Message?

H. Fras. I was sent by my Lord Lovat to my Lord President and my Lord Lovat both.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Message that you was sent with?

H. Fras. The Intention of the Message was, to see to discover from those Gentlemen, what would be the Result of the Frasers marching, and going into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that the Intention of the Message?

H. Fras. Yes; it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you carry any Letter or Letters from my Lord Lovat to the Lord President, or my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. There was a Letter I carried from my Lord Lovat to the Lord President.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know what was the Contents of that Letter? Did you read it?

H. Fras. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. The Contents of it were, informing my Lord President, That the Master of Lovat had gone off in a headstrong Way, and carried the Frasers into the Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat mean by the Word headstrong?

H. Fras. I suppose he meant, that it was contrary to his Advice.

Mr. At. Gen. When you came to my Lord President, did you deliver that Letter? — H. Fras. Yes; I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did my Lord President give to it?

H. Fras. He told me by Word of Mouth, That the Consequence that would arise to my Lord Lovat from such a Step taken by his Clan, would in all Probability be the Seizing of his Person, and making an Inquiry into his Conduct.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, return with that Answer of my Lord President, and deliver it to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I returned with that Answer of Lord President, and with an Answer to the same Purpose from my Lord Lovat; and delivered them both to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you likewise charged with a Letter from my Lord President to Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. My Lord President did write to my Lord Lovat, in Return to his Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see that Letter?

H. Fras. I saw it.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you give my Lords an Account of the Contents of it?

H. Fras. The Import of it was what I already told their Lordships.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not, go to my Lord Lovat with those Messages and this Letter? — H. Fras. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Before you delivered this Letter, or these Messages, had you any Meeting with the Master of Lovat?

H. Fras. I had a Meeting with the Master of Lovat upon the Way. It was concerted between him and me before I set out upon that Message, that he should meet me privately by the Way in my Return, in order to know what passed between my Lord President and me, and my Lord Lovat and me.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you that Meeting before your Return?

H. Fras. Yes, I had.

Mr. At. Gen. What passed between you Two at that Meeting?

H. Fras. I made a Report to the Master of Lovat of all the Conversation I had with those two Gentlemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any thing concerted or agreed between you Two upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. The Result of our comparing our Sentiments on that Meeting was, that the Master of Lovat, if it was possible, should be got immediately sent over to Holland; and that the Scheme which he had proposed some Months before, should then be put in Execution, with respect to the Master of Lovat's following his Education at Leiden, or some other University in the Low Countries.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did you return to my Lord Lovat in regard to these Messages?

H. Fras. I reported what was agreed upon between the Master and me, and agreeable to my Lord President's Letter, and to my Lord Lovat's verbal Message by me: I say, we had agreed, that there was a Report to be made agreeable to this Resolution between the Master and me, to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to inform their Lordships, in the first Place, Whether you delivered my Lord President's Letter to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. And did you make a Report to my Lord Lovat, according to what was agreed upon between his Son and you? — H. Fras. I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Please to repeat them again to my Lords; and state what was the Message you delivered to my Lord Lovat, besides the Letter.

VOL. IX.

H. Fras. The Report I delivered to my Lord Lovat, besides delivering the Letter, was this, That it was my Lord President's Belief, that an Order would be immediately sent down from London for the seizing his Person, and inquiring into his Conduct; and that it was my Lord Lovat's Determination to put that Order in Execution, as soon as ever it came into his Hands.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you recollect any thing more concerning it? Do you remember whether it was to be put in Execution, in case the Frasers did, or in case they did not march?

H. Fras. In case the Frasers did march.

Mr. At. Gen. Is this the whole Substance of the Report that you made to Lord Lovat? — H. Fras. Yes, so far as I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did my Lord Lovat make you upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. When I made the Report, I do not remember any particular Conversation that passed upon it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give you any Answer to it at any other Time? and when?

H. Fras. There was a Conversation between us soon after about it: I believe it was the next Day after my Return to Castle-Downey.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat then say to you relating to those Messages, or to that Report which you made?

H. Fras. I believe my Lord Lovat said, That he thought the Report of securing his Person, and inquiring into his Conduct, was to be considered rather as a Bugbear.

Mr. At. Gen. Was the Master of Lovat present at that Time?

H. Fras. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat say to his Son upon that Occasion?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat told his Son what I have already said, That he looked upon it to be rather a Bugbear; And that it was his Opinion, he should proceed in the Undertaking he was engaged in.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he, upon that Occasion, give or make any Orders concerning what was to be done?

H. Fras. Yes, that the Men should march immediately.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he give any Orders for it?

H. Fras. Not in the Way of an Order.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he say upon the Occasion?

H. Fras. That it was his Opinion, That the Men should march immediately.

Mr. At. Gen. What Men did you understand by that, were to march immediately?

H. Fras. The Clan of the Frasers.

Mr. At. Gen. What March did you understand it was to be? Or, whether were they to march?

H. Fras. To join the Rebel Army.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any other Company present at this Conversation, besides my Lord Lovat, and the Master, and you?

H. Fras. Yes, there were two other Gentlemen.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Lord Lovat then say any thing to them concerning it, by way of asking their Opinion, or their Agreement to it?

H. Fras. He asked the Opinion of all the Gentlemen present, after he had given his own, by saying, That it was his Opinion; and that he hoped all the Gentlemen present agreed to it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you understand by that?

H. Fras. That he hoped all present agreed to the Opinion which he had delivered himself.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you give any Answer to that? or any Opinion concerning it? — H. Fras. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it?

H. Fras. So far as I remember, the Answer I made was, That my Opinion had not been asked; but that, notwithstanding that, I thought myself obliged to give it: And it was this, That if the Affair could not be entirely dropped, that it should be put off for some Time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat give any Answer to that?

H. Fras. When I said, That my Opinion had not been asked, he told me, That some People's Opinion might be easily read in their Countenances, or Words to that Purpose.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did you make upon that?

H. Fras. The Answer I have already given.

Mr. At. Gen. What Answer did Lord Lovat give as to the putting off the March for a while?

H. Fras. No Answer at all, so far as I remember. The Master of Lovat, upon that, burst out into Tears; and said, He had been made a Fool of, and a Tool from first to last.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he say any Thing more?

H. Fras. Yes; he said, That he had been one Day doing, and another Day undoing; but that now he was determined, that whatsoever Resolution Lord Lovat should come to, that he would execute it, let the Consequence be what it would with respect to himself, and other People.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Thing more passed? Did Lord Lovat say any Thing upon this Occasion?

H. Fras. My Lord Lovat said, That he had given his Opinion already; and that he would not alter it; or to that Effect.

Mr. At. Gen. You have seen my Lord Lovat and his Son pretty often together, and were at his House for two or three Months together; pray what was your Opinion as to the Backwardness of the Master of Lovat? or as to his Obedience or Disobedience to his Father, in respect to his going into the Rebellion? Do you think that the Master was guilty of Obstinacy and Disobedience to his Father in going into the Rebellion? or that, by so doing, he complied with his Father's Orders and Inclinations?

H. Fras. If I am to form my Opinion, with respect to the Master of Lovat, upon his own good Sense and Understanding, or his avowed Principles, I should apprehend, that he would not have gone into the Rebellion, had he been left to himself: And if I am to form my Opinion upon the private Conversation I had with him, and particularly one, which I remember I had in Urquhart; I say, if I am to form my Opinion upon what he declared with respect to his Intentions and Sentiments declared to me, it is my Belief, that he would not have had any Concern in this Rebellion, had he been entirely left to himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to ask you, Sir, Whether, from your Knowledge of the Situation of the Clan of the Frasers, and of the Power and Influence which either my Lord Lovat or the Master had over them, do you think, that the Master of Lovat could have raised the Clan, without the Concurrence and Order of my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I believe, had the Lord Lovat and the Master acted in direct Opposition the one to the other, that the Clan would have been divided; and Part would have gone with one, and Part with the other; but what Part to either of them, is what I cannot determine.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what Time was it that the News came first to Castle Drunwherry of the Landing of Lord John Drummond with Soldiers from France?

H. Fras. It was about a Day before I went to my Lord President, or that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know, Whether, in your Opinion, that News had any Influence to determine my Lord Lovat's Conduct at that Time?

H. Fras. I cannot take upon me to say what it was that determined my Lord Lovat's Conduct.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any Thing about that particular Event of Lord John Drummond's landing then?

H. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat report what Intelligence had been returned to him on account of that Landing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords when the Master of Lovat and the Frasers did march? and where they marched to?

H. Fras. Some Part of the Frasers marched at one Time, and some at another: Some of them marched a short Time after this Conversation passed between my Lord Lovat and the Master, at which I was present.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did they march first?

H. Fras. They marched first to Perth; but the Master of Lovat did not go along with them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat know, or not know, of their marching? — H. Fras. That I don't know of my own Knowledge; but that my Lord Lovat must have heard of their March, is certain.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they, or did they not, march against his Orders?

H. Fras. Truly that is what I cannot easily answer: He certainly gave Orders for them not to march sometimes, and it was sometimes given out, that he gave Orders for their marching; but I did not see either of these Orders.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give my Lords an Account when the Frasers did march to Perth; and be as correct as you can.

H. Fras. The Times that they marched were different.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they march in large Numbers?

H. Fras. They marched in very small Numbers, not, I believe, above fifty at a Time; and the Number that marched in all was but very small.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Number do you suppose might march?

H. Fras. When they were strongest at Perth, they were between Two and Three Hundred at most.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords, Whether my Lord Lovat was apprehended by Lord London's, or my Lord President's Order? and when?

H. Fras. The next Morning after the Conversation passed between the Lord Lovat and the Master, as I mentioned already, I left Castle Drunwherry.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were the Frasers then gone, or were they going to Perth?

H. Fras. I believe there were none of them gone at that time; but I cannot say that I remember positively; but their March was then resolv'd on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember when it was precisely that you came from my Lord President's to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I do not remember the precise Day of the Month.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what Time of the Month was it?

H. Fras. I dare say it must be about the Beginning of December.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, That you went to Perth with the Master of Lovat; pray who was with you?

H. Fras. The Master and I went to Perth by ourselves alone.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you came there, where was the Body of the Rebel Army?

H. Fras. I believe it was in England.

Mr. Att. Gen. How soon after that did they come into Scotland again?

H. Fras. About Two or Three Weeks at most, after the Master and I had got to Perth, there came an Account, that the Rebel Army had returned to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders from the Pretender's Son about marching?

H. Fras. There were Orders given by Mr. Murray, that the Rebel Forces should march to Stirling, to join those coming from Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Frasers go thither?

H. Fras. They did.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did they go?

H. Fras. To Stirling.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Message sent to Glasgow, or any Place thereabouts, by the Master of Lovat, relating to the Frasers?

H. Fras. Yes, there was: It was sent from Perth to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpose was it sent?

H. Fras. In order to procure Firelocks for the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you yourself go to Glasgow?

H. Fras. I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom did you apply there?

H. Fras. To Mr. John Murray.

Mr. Att. Gen. Please to give an Account to my Lords what was the Effect of that Application of yours?

H. Fras. The Effect of it was, that an Order was sent to Lord John Drummond, in the Name of one that called himself the French Ambassador, that Lord John Drummond should deliver Arms for the Frasers out of the Arms that he had in Charge, that were the King of France's Arms, as he himself said.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did you stay at Glasgow?

H. Fras. About Twenty-four Hours.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before your Return from thence, had you any Conversation or Meeting with Mr. Murray of Broughton, the Pretender's Secretary?

H. Fras. I called upon him there, and saw him in his own Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Import of your Conversation at that Meeting?

H. Fras. The Business that brought me there was, to desire him to send the Arms I mentioned.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the only Subject of your Conversation?

H. Fras. No: We talked with respect to the Situation of Matters in the North Country, and with respect to the Imprisonment of my Lord Lovat, and his Escape from Inverness, which I had then heard of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Proposal then made concerning the Army's going into the North Country to take Inverness?

H. Fras. There was a Proposal then made, that a Detachment should be sent from the Army, in order to make themselves Masters of Inverness.

Mr. Att. Gen. What more passed between you relating to this Proposal?

H. Fras. That Proposal was agreed to, and a Resolution formed upon it, in a Council that was called in the Afternoon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you at that time hear any things, or receive any thing, from my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. No: I had no Charge from my Lord Lovat when I went to Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, when you was there, did you receive any Order from Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. I received no Order or Letter from my Lord Lovat, while I was at Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Orders or Letters from Lord Lovat at all relating to the sending any Men Northward; I do not mean while you was at Glasgow, but in Stratherrick, or any other Place?

H. Fras. Before I went to Perth, there was a Letter delivered to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say it was concerted to send a Detachment to Inverness, or that a Detachment of the Army should go thither: What was done in pursuance of that Resolution?

H. Fras. Nothing at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, that you received a Letter from my Lord Lovat at Stratherrick; pray what were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. I did say so: There was a Letter delivered to me: It was not signed; but it appeared to me to be the Hand-writing of Robert Fraser, who then acted as Secretary to my Lord Lovat; but it had no Name subscribed to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Import of that Letter?

H. Fras. The Request of the Letter was, That I should have gone to Perth, in order to have prevailed with the Gentlemen who commanded at that Place, to send a Number of Forces to Inverness, in order to make themselves Masters of that Place, by dislodging my Lord Louden, and to rescue my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was any thing done upon this?

H. Fras. Nothing: I refused to do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before you went from Glasgow, and returned with the Answer to the Message you had delivered there, did you receive any Message from Mr. Murray the Secretary, or any Packet? and what was it?

H. Fras. Mr. Murray proposed me to carry a Packet from Glasgow to Perth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he deliver you any Packet?

H. Fras. I refused to take it; because, I told him, that very probably his Packet would require Dispatch; and that I rid my own Horses, and did not incline to abuse them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, or did you not, receive the Packet?

H. Fras. When he told me afterwards, That he had no other Person to carry it, and that it did not require Dispatch, I accepted of the Packet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what that Packet contained?

H. Fras. I came to know it afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what were the Contents of it?

H. Fras. There was a separate Letter, directed to the Master of Lovat only, with respect to the Army; and there was a large Packet of Papers, not directed to any Person, but which, Mr. Murray told me, I was to deliver to the Master of Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what that Letter, or Packet, did contain?

H. Fras. Upon my Return to Perth, as the Master of Lovat happened not to be there at that time, another Gentleman and I took the Freedom to open the large Packet.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you find in it?

H. Fras. There was in it a Commission of Lieutenant-General to my Lord Lovat, that is, in my Lord Lovat's Name; and it was granted in the Name of James the VIIIth.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was there in it else?

H. Fras. There was another Commission in it, to my Lord Lovat, of Lieutenant of some Northern County, granted in the same Manner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did that appear to be signed and sealed by the Pretender? — H. Fras. It had a Subscription and Superscription, and a Seal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing else contained in that Packet?

H. Fras. There was another Commission to a Gentleman of the Name of Fraser.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did that Commission import to be?

H. Fras. It was a Colonel's Commission.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you recollect to whom it was made?

H. Fras. The Gentleman was named Fraser: One who was called Inverlacky, and a Gentleman of that Name was then acting in that Capacity among the Frasers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did that Commission appear, upon the Face of it, to be signed and sealed? and by whom?

H. Fras. Yes, it was signed and sealed in the same Manner as the other Commissions were.

Mr. Attorney

Mr. Attorney General. Was there any thing else in the Packet?

H. Fras. There was a Letter under the Hand of the Pretender's Son.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was that directed?

H. Fras. It was directed to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any other Paper there?

H. Fras. Yes; there was a Letter from Mr. Murray, Cameron of Lochiel, and Mac Pherson of Clanric.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom was that Letter directed?

H. Fras. That Letter had no Direction, or Cover; it was in the large Cover.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those all that were in the large Cover?

H. Fras. All that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the large Cover addressed to any body?

H. Fras. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Reason of that?

H. Fras. The Reason given me by Mr. Murray was, That it was intended for my Lord Lovat; but could not be directed, because he could not ascertain by what Title to write it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the doubted Title?

H. Fras. The doubted Title was that of a Duke.

Mr. Att. Gen. Duke of what?

H. Fras. Duke of Fraser, or Beaufort: Fraser, I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Does not my Lord Lovat's House go by Two Names?

H. Fras. Yes, by the Name of Castle-Downey and Beaufort.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know, whether that Letter, that was signed by Clanric Mac Pherson, Lochiel, and Mr. Murray, was referred to in the Letter that was sent by the Pretender's Son?

H. Fras. I don't know that it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you recollect the Substance of the Letter from the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat?

H. Fras. The Substance of the Letter, as far as I can recollect, was requesting my Lord Lovat to come and join with him in Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, These are all the Questions we have to ask of this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons have done with this Witness: Would your Lordship ask him any Questions?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have told your Lordships already, that I am so ill that I am not able to speak, or to get up, or sit down; and therefore hope your Lordships will indulge me to retire a little, and refresh myself.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, my Lord Lovat desires Leave to withdraw for a little while.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Upon which Lord Lovat withdrew for a little while: And being returned,

Lord Lovat. I desire, that your Lordships will indulge me in permitting your Clerk to read the Questions I would ask.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Lord Lovat. Was not you taken Prisoner by the King's Forces, after the Battle of Culloden?—H. Fras. I was.

Lord Lovat. Have you not been in Custody ever since? and are not you so now?—H. Fras. I have been, and I am.

Lord Lovat. Have you as yet obtained any Pardon?

H. Fras. I know of none.

Lord Lovat. Are you in Expectation of a Pardon from what you shall depose against me?

H. Fras. I will answer that Question very readily. I do not expect Punishment will be inflicted; but I assure your Lordship, it is no Condition or Paction made with me.

Lord Lovat. Have you ever had any Offer made to you of a Pardon, upon this or any other Condition? and what was that Condition?

H. Fras. I have had no Offers made to me of a Pardon, upon any Condition whatever.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I have taken a particular Account of the Evidence of this Witness; which I beg Leave to repeat to your Lordships, in the Presence of the Witness, that, in case I misrepresent any Part, he may correct it, I having been already accused of Unfairness, in the Manner of stating my Questions. My Lords, The Witness says, that the Men marched before the Master of Lovat went from Castle-Downey: That he and the Master of Lovat followed the Men, and endeavoured to prevail upon them to return; but that Barisdale prevailed upon them to advance, contrary to the Desire and Advice of the Master of Lovat: That my Lord Lovat afterwards wrote a Letter to them to return, and that they did return: That my Lord Lovat certainly gave Orders sometimes, that they should not march. Am I right in this State of the Evidence?

H. Fras. Yes; my Lord Lovat certainly gave Orders for them sometimes not to march; and, I believe, he gave Orders, at other times, for them to march.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, he says, That he believes that, at other times, my Lord Lovat ordered them to march: But, my Lords, this might be only a general Report, without any Foundation, as it might be the Report of Barisdale, in order to prevail on them to march.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, The noble Lord is in the right, to state the Evidence to the Witness, in order to introduce Questions, by way of Explanation; but to observe upon that Evidence now, is not regular.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, All that I mean is to come at the Truth; which I cannot do from my own Knowledge.

Lord Talbot. You have said, that you have heard my Lord Lovat say, that the Conduct of his Clan might cost him his Life.—H. Fras. I did.

Lord Talbot. Now, my Lords, the Question I would ask him, from all this put together, is, Whether he did understand, by these Expressions of my Lord Lovat, that he disapproved of the Conduct of his Clan?

H. Fras. That my Lord Lovat disapproved to me in private, and that I have heard him disapprove, and condemn in publick, the Conduct of his Clan, is Truth: That I affirm before Almighty God.

Lord Talbot. Have you been examined by any body relating to this Trial, since you was a Prisoner, before you came to this Place?

H. Fras. I have.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I will beg Leave to ask him, Whether the Confessions he made upon that Examination, or the Answers he gave there, proceeded from the Hope of a Pardon?

H. Fras. I cannot say that I would have done it, had I been convinced that I should meet with no Mercy; though, at the same Time, I had no Assurance given me of Mercy; neither had I any Promise of Pardon.

Lord Talbot. Do you believe, that your Pardon may depend upon the Consistency of the Evidence you shall give here, with what you have said upon those former Examinations?

Duke of Bedford. My Lords, I do not think that is a proper Question to be asked of any Witness; and, if it is insisted upon to be asked, I shall beg your Lordships may adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to determine that Question: And I will there give my Reasons against it.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I have no Partiality for the noble Lord at the Bar; but what I have said proceeded from a Principle of Humanity, a Principle of Honour, and a Principle of Justice.

L. H. S. You have spoke of different Orders that were given at different Times: Sometimes my Lord Lovat ordered the Men to march, and, at other Times, not to march. Do you know, of your own Knowledge, of any of these Orders being given?

H. Fras. I have already said, that I saw an Order under his Hand, for the returning of seven Companies of Men, from Urquhart, whither they had marched.

L. H. S. Whither were they to return?

H. Fras. To their own Houses.

L. H. S. When was that Order given?

H. Fras. In the Month of November.

L. H. S. What Orders did you ever see, or hear, from my Lord Lovat, for the Men to march?

H. Fras. I never saw any Order of my Lord Lovat for the Men to march.

L. H. S. Then why did you speak of those Orders?

H. Fras. I have given my Reason for that, That I heard such Orders talked of; but that I heard them given, I never did say, and never will.

Lord Orford. When my Lord Lovat declared himself dissatisfied with the Conduct of his Clan, was it for their being too forward, or too backward, in going into Rebellion?

H. Fras. I have said already, That I have heard him dissatisfied for their too great Forwardness, and I have likewise heard him dissatisfied for their too great Backwardness.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, In consequence of some Questions that have been asked, I beg Leave to know of this Witness, Whether what he has said in Evidence before your Lordships, notwithstanding his having said it under the Circumstances of his being now a Prisoner, is, or is not true?

H. Fras. I say, that what I have said, is literally Fact.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I beg he may inform your Lordships, Whether, supposing he had been called on to be a Witness, and had not been a Prisoner, but had been, by Virtue of your Lordships Summons, obliged to come before you, to give Evidence upon this Trial, would he have given any other Evidence than what he hath given before your Lordships?

H. Fras. If I would give Evidence in any Case, it should be the Truth; and, if the Truth were such as I did not choose to disclose, I would declare positively, that I would give no Evidence at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not you in so dangerous a Condition, in point of Health, when you were at Fort Augustus, that your Life was not expected?

H. Fras. At Fort Augustus I was past all Hopes of Recovery, and at Inverness.

Mr. Att. Gen. During that Time, did not you give, in Substance, the same Account of these Transactions as you have given now?

H. Fras. There were Questions asked me then; and the Answers I gave to them were the real Truth: Matters were not then so fully explicated as they have been since; so that those Declarations were not so complete as the Account I have given now: But the Answers that I made there, were still the real genuine Truth, as to those Questions that I was asked; and so is the Account I have now given.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg he may inform your Lordships, if, so far as his Examination then went, it was not the same as his Examination is now?

H. Fras. So far as the Examination was then extended, it was the same as now: Truth is always the same; it will never vary from itself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not then expect to die?

H. Fras. I expected not to live, sure enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it from the Condition you were in by your Distemper, that you expected not to live?

H. Fras. It was from my Wounds, and the Ailments that I laboured under.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

A Lord. I beg this Witness may inform your Lordships, If the Packet which he carried from Mr. Murray, containing the Papers that he has mentioned, was ever delivered? and to whom?

H. Fras. That Packet was never delivered to my Lord Lovat.

A Lord. I beg he may inform your Lordships, to whom that Packet was delivered?

H. Fras. When I came to Perth, a Gentleman, who then commanded among the Frasers, and I, opened the Packet, to see what it contained; and, while I was intending to shut it up again, and to forward it to the Master of Lovat, the Master himself came into the Room; and I told him the Freedom we had used with those Letters and Packets: He said, that we might always use that Freedom, and were welcome. All those Papers which I have mentioned to have been contained in that Packet, were then lying upon the Table where we stayed: I told the Master, in general, what they were; and he threw them from him; and there they continued to lie till I went from Perth to Stirling: And, as that March was made a little precipitately, those Papers, and every Thing else that belonged to me, that were in the Room, were thrown into my Cloak-Bag, and they and

and my Cloak-Bag continued in my Possession till some few Days before the Battle of Culloden, when I lodged them in a House at Inverness, and went myself to the Field of Battle.

[Then the Witness, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, The next Gentleman we beg Leave to call, is Lieutenant Alexander Campbell.

Lieutenant Campbell called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to Lieutenant Campbell being a Witness?

Lord Lovat. I don't know him: I never heard of him.

Alexander Campbell sworn.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to ask this Witness, Whether, at any Time, in the Year 1745, he went to Castle-Downey?

A. Camp. Yes, I did.

Sir W. Yonge. About what Time was it that you went?

A. Camp. I don't remember particularly: It was some Time in October.

Sir W. Yonge. Upon what Account did you go there?

A. Camp. To require some Cattle that were carried off from some People in the Shire of Ross.

Sir W. Yonge. By whom were these Cattle carried off?

A. Camp. By some of my Lord Lovat's People: I don't know whether it was done by his Orders, or not.

Sir W. Yonge. When you came near Castle-Downey, did you see any Number of armed Men?—A. Camp. Yes, I did.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received by those armed Men? with Acclamations? or in what Manner? and how many were there of them?

A. Camp. I cannot condescend upon the Number of Men.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received by them? with Acclamations? or how?—A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. How was you received? in what Manner?

A. Camp. They were all out with their Arms; some of the MacLeod's Defenders that came from Inverness.

Sir W. Yonge. How were you received there by those Men? in what Manner?—A. Camp. Some of them took off their Bonnets.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there any Shouts, or Huzzas, made use of?

A. Camp. Yes; some of them did.

Sir W. Yonge. Upon what Account?—A. Camp. I can't tell.

Sir W. Yonge. Did not they say any Thing to you of the Reason of it?

A. Camp. No; they spoke nothing to me.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you go to dine with my Lord Lovat, at Castle-Downey?—A. Camp. No; I did not.

Sir W. Yonge. Was you at Castle-Downey with him?—A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Had you any Conversation with my Lord Lovat there?

A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. What Conversation had you with him?

A. Camp. I told him, I came to require the Cattle; and he told me, the Cattle were not brought there by his Order, but his Son's.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The Witness had better go on with the rest of the Conversation: I know he can, without being asked particular Questions; for I would not lead him.

A. Camp. I do not remember what passed.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I must take Notice to your Lordships, that I think it is a very odd Expression to make use of to a Witness, That he had better answer the Questions; for I know he can: It is a kind of threatening the Witness.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I stand here as a Manager, on this Trial, for the Commons of Great-Britain; and I hope I say nothing that is offensive to your Lordships; and that the Manner in which I asked the Witness the Question, shewed that it proceeded from a Fairness in stating of it. My Lords, I think, as a Manager, I ought to know what a Witness can say; and the whole Tendency of what I said, was advising the Witness, without giving your Lordships unnecessary Trouble, to tell all he knew, fairly and impartially, without my being obliged to put any leading Questions to him: And I hope, I shall have your Lordships Liberty to go on.

L. H. S. My Lords, Every body knows, that it is the constant Course and Usage of Parliament, that, when a Committee of Managers is appointed by the House of Commons, upon an Impeachment, it is their Duty to examine, and they always do examine the Witnesses beforehand: And the same Method is used by Prosecutors for the Crown, upon Indictments. If this was not done, it would be impossible to know, whether a Witness could speak materially to the Facts in Question, or not.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, Though they are Managers, I am a Judge. I have as high a Veneration for the Representatives of this Kingdom, as any Man in the World; I sat some Time among them myself: But I am sure, my Lords, the Representatives of England do not desire a Language may be used to a Witness, that may seem threatening. And, my Lords, I took the Expression used by the Manager in this Light. The Expression was, That he had better speak; which, I apprehend, was as much as to say, That, if he hoped for Mercy, he must tell it. My Lords, I desire a fair Examination, that I may form a true Judgment. My Honour depends upon it.

L. H. S. My Lords, I desire this may be forborn. It is my Duty to acquaint your Lordships, that it is irregular, and contrary to all Rules of Proceeding. The Honourable Manager explained his Words in a very proper and candid Manner, that he thought it was fairer in him to ask the Witness general Questions, to declare what he knew of the Fact, than any particular Questions, which might tend to lead him; and he was in the right.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, in order to clear up this Matter, I beg Leave to ask the Witness, Whether he is now a Prisoner?—A. Camp. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you ever a Prisoner?

A. Camp. Yes; I was a Prisoner with the Rebels.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you then the King's Commission?

A. Camp. Yes; when I was a Prisoner.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you engaged in the King's Behalf against the Rebels, when you was taken?—A. Camp. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Your Lordships now see, That the Witness is no Prisoner, nor under any Terror or Apprehension, but has now the King's Commission in his Pocket; and therefore I beg Leave to ask him, What the Conversation was that passed between my Lord Lovat and him about the Cattle?

A. Camp. As I did not expect to be called here as a Witness, so I do not remember what passed upon that Occasion.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat persuade you to join the Rebels, or not?—A. Camp. He did not.

Sir W. Yonge. Did he say nothing to induce you to it?

A. Camp. He said nothing at all to induce me to join them.

Sir W. Yonge. Or his Son?

A. Camp. No.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I don't know whether it be so proper: But have you never said so?

A. Camp. No; I never did say so.

Mr. Neil. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask him, Whether any Discourse passed between my Lord Lovat and him touching the Rebellion?

A. Camp. Yes.

Mr. Neil. Pray tell my Lords what that was?

A. Camp. He said, His Son was engaged in the Rebellion, not him; and that he was a very loyal Person.

Mr. Neil. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. No; I have no Questions, my Lord, to ask this Witness: I never saw him before in my Life.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Lyttelton. My Lords, The next Witness we shall produce, is Peter Frazer, Tutor of Belladrum.

Peter Frazer was called into Court.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have a material Objection to this Witness: He is my Tenant in all that he possesses.

L. H. S. Would your Lordship ask him that Question? Or, would you prove it upon him by Witnesses?

Lord Lovat. I humbly think he will not deny it. If he does, I have Witnesses to prove it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, I beg the noble Lord at the Bar may explain what he means by saying, If he denies it, that he has Witnesses to prove it; for, if the noble Lord puts it to the Oath of the Witness, and he denies it, then he cannot, without the Consent of the Commons, call a Witness to prove it.

L. H. S. My Lords, The Rule is, That, upon an Objection made to the Competency of a Witness, the Party objecting may either put it to the Oath of the Witness produced, or call Witnesses to prove it. If he put it to the Oath of the Witness produced, then he is concluded as to the Point of Competency, by the Answer he gives to it, unless the other Side consents to wave that. My Lord Lovat, Do you choose to put this to the Oath of Peter Frazer, or to call a Witness to prove it?

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I desire to know, if this Witness should deny it, whether my Lord Lovat may not give Evidence of this Man's being his Tenant, when he comes upon his Defence.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You hear what the noble Lord says; what do you say to it?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, To be sure my Lord Lovat may give such Proof by way of Objection to the Credit of the Witness; but not to his Competency.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Do you choose now to put this Question to the Oath of the Witness himself, or to call a Witness to prove it?

Lord Lovat. I will put it to his own Oath.

Then the Witness was sworn upon a Voire Dire.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I desire to ask him, Whether or no the Lands he possesses are not my Lands?

P. Fras. Yes; they are: I possess them in virtue of my Nephew's Right, who hold a Tack under my Lord Lovat.

L. H. S. How do you hold them in virtue of your Nephews? Is it as their Manager, or Tutor?

A. Lord. My Lords, I will beg Leave to ask a Question to explain that; which is, Whether or no the Witness pays the Rents of those Lands to my Lord Lovat's Chamberlain or Steward?

P. Fras. I do.

Lord Lovat. Do you pay any Part of that Rent in your own Right?

P. Fras. No; I do not. I only pay it in virtue of my Nephews, taking Care of them.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, The Question, which the noble Lord at the Bar has now put to the Witness, is that which I intended to have put to him; which is, Whether he holds any Lands in his own Right, or only as Tutor? He has told your Lordships, That he holds none in his own Right, but only as Tutor to his Nephews.

Mr. Lyttelton. My Lords, We pray the Witness may be sworn in Chief.

Peter Frazer sworn in Chief.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg to ask him, Whether he does not hold a Tack of Land within the Lordship of Lovat, of Aird, or Strathaird?

P. Fras. I do not.

Mr. Lyttelton. I beg this Witness may inform your Lordships, Whether, in the Year 1745, he was at my Lord Lovat's House at Castle-Downey?

P. Fras. Yes; I was.

Mr. Lyttel. And whether he remembers to have seen any of my Lord Lovat's Men rendezvous there about that Time?—P. Fras. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyttel. Did you see any of the Officers that headed those Men go to my Lord Lovat's House, and converse with him there?

P. Fras. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyttel. Who did you see there?

P. Fras. Simon Frazer of MacLeod.

Mr. Lyttel. Did he talk to my Lord Lovat about the Regiment? or did any Orders from him?

P. Fras. I never heard him say any Thing; only that my Lord Lovat desired him to go to their Colonel: That is all I heard.

Mr. Lyttel. Who did he call their Colonel?

P. Fras. His Son, the Master of Lovat.

Mr. Lyttel. How came he to be their Colonel? Had not the Lord Lovat the absolute Power over his Clan?

P. Fras. Yes; he had.

Mr. Lyttelton

Mr. Lyttelton. Do you imagine or believe, that the Master of Levat could have carried the Frazer into the Rebellion, if his Father had been against it?

P. Frazer. No; he could not; I am sure he could not.

Mr. Lyt. Had the Master of Levat any Manner of Foundation to think he could raise the Men himself? Or did he, at his own Charge or Cost, pay those Men when they went into the Rebellion? Or, had he Money to do it?

P. Frazer. I suppose he had no Money of his own.

Mr. Lyt. Who do you think furnished him with the Money necessary for that Purpose?

P. Frazer. Really I know nothing of the Money: I saw no Money given.

Mr. Lyt. Do you know any thing of Barisdale's keeping a Party of Men upon my Lord Levat's Ground?—P. Frazer. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. What were they to do?

P. Frazer. To overawe the Country.

Mr. Lyt. To do what?

P. Frazer. To rise in Arms.

Mr. Lyt. In Arms for whom?—P. Frazer. For the Pretender.

Mr. Lyt. Had he got any of them to rise in Arms then?—P. Frazer. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. Did he make any of my Lord Levat's Vassals rise in Arms at that Time?

P. Frazer. They staid in the Country till they saw some of the Men did converse.

Mr. Lyt. Do you know of any body's giving the Men any Cattle or Meal?—P. Frazer. Yes: My Lord Levat gave them some Cows.

Mr. Lyt. To whose Men? To Barisdale's Men?

P. Frazer. No; to my Lord Levat's Men.

Mr. Lyt. Those that join'd with Barisdale?—P. Frazer. Yes.

Mr. Lyt. Did you see Barisdale converse with my Lord Levat then?

P. Frazer. Yes; I did.

Mr. Lyt. Did my Lord Levat know that he was then in the Rebellion?

P. Frazer. No doubt of it.

Mr. Lyt. Did he wear any Mark of Distinction to shew it?

P. Frazer. He wore a white Cockade.

Mr. Lyt. Do you remember any Part of the Conversation between Barisdale, MacLeod, and my Lord Levat, concerning my Lord's declaring openly for the Pretender?

P. Frazer. I remember one Day, that Alexander MacLeod said, That all would be well, if my Lord Levat would pull off the Mask: Upon which my Lord Levat, by way of Reply, pulled off his Hat, and said, There it is then.

Mr. Lyt. What did that Conversation relate to?

P. Frazer. I heard no more of it.

Mr. Lyt. What were they talking about?

P. Frazer. I only heard, that he said, All would be well, if my Lord Levat would pull off the Mask.

Mr. Lyt. What did that Conversation mean? What meant, All would be well?—P. Frazer. I can't tell.

Mr. Lyt. What did my Lord Levat mean by pulling off his Hat?

P. Frazer. All that they said was, That all would be well, if my Lord would pull off the Mask: Upon which my Lord Levat pulled off his Hat, and said, Here it is then.

Mr. Lyt. Did he throw his Hat down?

P. Frazer. I did not see that.

Mr. Lyt. Did my Lord Levat offer you to be an Officer?

P. Frazer. No; he never did.

Mr. Lyt. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Levat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Levat. Was you examined at Inverness? and by whom? and who were the Persons you saw there?

P. Frazer. I was examined at Inverness before one Kilravock: He was a Depute. And I was examined before my Lord Laudon.

Lord Levat. Was you examined upon Oath?

P. Frazer. Yes: I was summoned, and strictly deponed.

Lord Levat. Upon Oath?—P. Frazer. Upon Oath.

Lord Levat. Who were the Persons you saw at Inverness, when you was examined?

P. Frazer. We were examined but one by one: As soon as one was examined, another was called; and no other Person heard what the Examinations were.

Lord Levat. Who were present at the Examinations?

P. Frazer. Lord Laudon, Kilravock, and a Clerk.

Lord Levat. At what Time was you examined at Inverness?

P. Frazer. I don't remember the Day of the Month, indeed.

Lord Levat. What Month was it?

P. Frazer. It was in January; the latter End of January.

Lord Levat. In January last?

P. Frazer. Yes, in January last.

L. H. S. You say you were at Castle-Downey in 1745, and saw all the Men rendezvous there: In what Month was that?

P. Frazer. In November.

Then the Prisoner begged Leave to withdraw a little: Which was granted; and he soon after returned to the Bar again.

Mr. Legge. The next Witness we shall call is John Farquhar.

At the Prisoner's Request, he was sworn upon a Voire Dire.

Lord Levat. Are you Tenant to me?—J. Farquhar. No.

Lord Levat. What is your Name?—J. Farquhar. John Farquhar.

Lord Levat. What Employment are you of?

J. Farquhar. I was Servant to Mr. Murray.

John Farquhar sworn in Chief.

Mr. Legge. My Lords, We propose to examine this Witness to the steps taken by my Lord Levat subsequent to the Battle of Culloden, in order to revive and restore the Pretender's Cause in Scotland.

VOL. IX.

Mr. Legge. Was not you Servant to Mr. Murray of Broughton?

J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. In what Capacity did you serve him?

J. Farquhar. I was his Groom.

Mr. Legge. For what Space of Time did you serve him? From what Time, and to what Time?

J. Farquhar. From Michaelmas till the Ninth of June last.

Mr. Legge. In what Year?—J. Farquhar. In 1745.

Mr. Legge. Was there a Meeting of the Chieftains in the Rebel Army after the Battle of Culloden?

J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. When was that Meeting?

J. Farquhar. On the 10th of May last.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Persons that met on that Occasion?

J. Farquhar. Mr. Murray of Broughton, Lochiel, Young Clanronald, Cameron of Dungallan, Doctor Cameron, and several others that I did not know, and my Lord Levat: They met at the Island of Mortlaig.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear of any French Ships having landed any Money in Scotland then?

J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. Upon what Day did you hear that they landed that Money?

J. Farquhar. Upon the 4th of May.

Mr. Legge. What did you imagine was the Subject-Matter of the Meeting you mentioned?

J. Farquhar. In order to have a Second Gathering of the Rebel Army.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear any, and what Orders given to any body, and to whom, upon that Occasion?

J. Farquhar. There was an Order for the Men to be gathered together at a Place called Glenmany.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Persons that gave those Orders?

J. Farquhar. There was Lochiel, and the several other Persons that were present at the Meeting.

Mr. Legge. How did Lord Levat behave on that Occasion? Did he express any Satisfaction on that Head?

J. Farquhar. He was present during all the Time I was there.

Mr. Legge. Did he say any thing about the Number of Men that were to be raised?

J. Farquhar. The next Morning, when the Parties were going away, my Lord Levat said, They had no need to fear; and he did not doubt raising Eight or Ten thousand Men presently.

Some Lords desired the last Answer to be repeated: Which was accordingly done by the Witness, as follows:

J. Farquhar. The next Morning, when the Parties were going away, Lord Levat said, that there was no Need to fear; for that he did not doubt to raise Eight or Ten thousand Men presently; and that those, with the Highland Men, would be able to fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops. He said this to Lochiel's Officers: When they embraced each other.

Mr. Legge. Had my Lord Levat any of his own Clan there?

J. Farquhar. Yes: He had some of them to wait upon him.

Mr. Legge. Were they armed?

J. Farquhar. Yes, with Swords, Dirks, and Pistols.

Mr. Legge. Did they wear any Mark of Distinction in their Hats?

J. Farquhar. Some of them had Sprigs of Yew, and such-like Things, in their Hats; by which they were known to be of that Party.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear my Lord Levat express any Wishes that he had joined their Army?

J. Farquhar. He said, He wished to God he had joined the Prince, as he called him, at first when he came over.

Mr. Legge. While you was there, did you hear the Pretender's Health drank?—J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. By what Stile or Title?

J. Farquhar. By the Title of Prince Charles, to the Young One.

Mr. Legge. And what Title did they give to the Old One?

J. Farquhar. The Title of James the Eighth.

Mr. Legge. Who were the Persons that drank it? Did you hear my Lord Levat drink it?—J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. Pray how long did this Council last?

J. Farquhar. From Night till next Morning: I was there from Two o'Clock till Ten in the Morning.

Mr. Legge. You mention the French Money's being landed on the 4th of May; do you know any thing of the Disposition of any Part of that Money?—J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. To whom was it given?

J. Farquhar. To the Officers of the Rebel Army.

Mr. Legge. For what Purpose was it given them?

J. Farquhar. For a Second Gathering of the Men.

Mr. Legge. Do you know what was the general Resolution that That Council came to? or what was their Determination?

J. Farquhar. That they would assemble a Body of the several Clans to march South, so far as I could conjecture.

Mr. Legge. Why do you conjecture that?

J. Farquhar. I heard it.

Mr. Legge. Did you hear of any Expectation of further Assistance from France?—J. Farquhar. Yes.

Mr. Legge. What Number of Men did you expect?

J. Farquhar. I did not hear any particular Number mentioned; but we expected a Reinforcement every Day.

Mr. Legge. Where was the Rendezvous to have been?

J. Farquhar. At Glenmany.

Mr. Legge. Did they meet there?—J. Farquhar. Yes; several of them.

Mr. Legge. What do you think prevented the rest of them from meeting there?—J. Farquhar. The King's Troops.

Mr. Legge. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Levat, Will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Levat. Was you taken Prisoner by the King's Forces?

J. Farquhar. No.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether the Money that came over from France in the Ship, was given to Mr. Murray?

J. Farquhar. I cannot tell. Mr. Murray was there when the Money came.

A Lord. Do you know of any more Meetings than one between Lochiel and Lord Lovat?—J. Farquhar. No.

[Then the Witness, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Grenville. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to call, is Charles Stuart.

Charles Stuart called into Court.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to this Witness?—Lord Lovat. No.

Charles Stuart sworn.

Mr. Grenville. My Lords, We beg this Witness may inform your Lordships, whether he remembers the Battle of Culloden?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Did you go with Mr. Murray, the Pretender's Son's Secretary, after that Battle, to Mortlach?—C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Was there a Meeting there of any of the Rebel Officers?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Who were present?

C. Stuart. There were Lochiel, Clanronald, Barisdale, and several others.

Mr. Gren. Was my Lord Lovat there?

C. Stuart. Yes, he was there.

Mr. Gren. Where were they?—C. Stuart. In a little Hut.

Mr. Gren. Was you in the Room with them?

C. Stuart. Yes, I was.

Mr. Gren. Did you hear what passed in the Room? If you did, please to give my Lords an Account of what passed there.

C. Stuart. Lochiel and Mr. Murray of Broughton came there, where they met with my Lord Lovat, and several other of the Highland Chieftains. They wanted to create an Association for re-assembling the Men together, in order to procure a Peace, or Terms of Surrender with the Duke of Cumberland; or to stand it out to the last. Mr. Murray ordered me to draw up the Articles; which I wrote: And it was signed by every Chief that was there.

Mr. Gren. Did my Lord Lovat sign it?

C. Stuart. No; all but he.

Mr. Gren. Was it proposed to him to sign it?

C. Stuart. Yes, it was; and he would not.

Mr. Gren. What was the Purport of it?

C. Stuart. That they were to assemble again in ten Days, in order to procure Terms of Peace from the Duke, or stand it out to the last.

Mr. Gren. What Number of Frasers were proposed to be raised?

C. Stuart. I think Three or Four Hundred.

Mr. Gren. Did any body undertake for the Frasers?

C. Stuart. I think Lochiel did.

Mr. Gren. At whose Request did he undertake for the Frasers?

C. Stuart. When it was proposed to my Lord Lovat to sign the Paper, he said, He would not; and desired Lochiel to answer for his Son.

Mr. Gren. What did he say about Lochiel?

C. Stuart. He desired Lochiel to answer for his Son.

Mr. Gren. Did he, or did he not, answer for him?

C. Stuart. I can't tell.

Mr. Gren. What Reason did my Lord Lovat give why he would not sign the Paper himself?

C. Stuart. I don't remember he gave any Reason.

Mr. Gren. Do you remember any Expressions made use of by my Lord Lovat then?—C. Stuart. No.

Mr. Gren. Was there any Money given then to any of the Chiefs of the Clan?—C. Stuart. Yes, to all of them.

Mr. Gren. Who delivered it to them?—C. Stuart. I did.

Mr. Gren. Was there any delivered to my Lord Lovat?

C. Stuart. No, not to him; but it was given to some of the Persons about him: I don't know whether it was his Servant, or no.

Mr. Gren. Was he my Lord Lovat's Servant?

C. Stuart. I don't know: He was a Person about him.

Mr. Gren. For what was it delivered? For what Purpose?

C. Stuart. For the Master to raise the Men against the Time.

Mr. Gren. You saw the Money given, and was the Person that delivered it?—C. Stuart. I did.

Mr. Gren. How much was there of it?

C. Stuart. Seventy or Eighty Pounds.

Mr. Gren. How came you by the Money?

C. Stuart. I got it from Mr. Murray.

Mr. Gren. What Money was it?

C. Stuart. Part of 35,000 l. that was landed some Days before from France.

Mr. Gren. Was my Lord Lovat present when the Money was delivered?

C. Stuart. Yes, he was.

Mr. Gren. Did he object to any Thing that was done, but to the Signing of the Paper?—C. Stuart. I don't remember he did.

Mr. Gren. Was the Money that was given in Guineas, or in Livers?

C. Stuart. It was all in Livers.

Mr. Gren. Was there any Thing said about a Neutrality then?

C. Stuart. I think my Lord Lovat said, That he was a neutral Person; so would have no Concern in it.

Mr. Gren. Do you remember Mr. Murray's being at Arisaig?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. Did he receive any Letter there from a Captain of any Guard that my Lord Lovat had?

C. Stuart. I saw a Man come from the House where my Lord was, and said, He came from the Captain of my Lord's Guards, with a Letter for Mr. Murray; and asked some Money of him.

Mr. Gren. Did you send any Money to my Lord?

C. Stuart. Yes.

Mr. Gren. How much did you send?

C. Stuart. I believe it was about Fifteen Guineas.

Mr. Gren. By whose Order did you send it?

C. Stuart. It was by Mr. Murray's Orders I delivered the Money.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I will beg Leave to ask this Witness, Whether he was ever abroad on any Occasion?

C. Stuart. I was; but 'tis long ago.

Sir J. Strange. How long is it ago?

C. Stuart. It was in the Year 1736.

Sir J. Strange. Do you remember to have met with a Person called Roy Stuart whilst you was abroad?—C. Stuart. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. Where did you meet with him?

C. Stuart. At Boulogne in France.

Sir J. Strange. Where was he going when you saw him there?

C. Stuart. He said he was going to Rome.

Sir J. Strange. Please to recollect, as near as you can, the Time when it was you saw Roy Stuart at Boulogne, and give my Lords an Account thereof.

C. Stuart. I think it was in 1736, as near as I can remember.

Sir J. Strange. When Roy Stuart told you he was going to Rome, did he say upon what Errand he was going?

C. Stuart. He said he was going with Letters of Recommendation from my Lord Lovat.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I should not trouble your Lordships with asking the Witness any Questions of this Kind, if we had not laid a Foundation for it already, by having proved, that a Message was sent by this Roy Stuart from my Lord Lovat to the Pretender at Rome; and therefore what I now enquire of him is not Matter of Hearsay; but it is in Corroboration of the Circumstance which has been proved to your Lordships, That my Lord Lovat did give such a Message to this Roy Stuart: And therefore I will beg Leave to ask this Witness, What Message did Roy Stuart say he was going upon?

C. Stuart. Nothing else.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I submit it to your Lordships, if this, or any other Witness, shall be examined upon Hearsay Evidence.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, You hear in what manner the Managers offer this Evidence: They say, That they have proved by one Witness, that you sent a Message by Roy Stuart to the Pretender at Rome. Now, to corroborate that Evidence, they offer to prove, that Roy Stuart, about the same time, declared to this Witness, That he had such a Message to carry.

Lord Lovat. What the other Witness said was Hearsay.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I will set the Noble Lord at the Bar right. It was such Hearsay as he had from my Lord Lovat's own Mouth; for Chevis the Witness said, on his Examination, That, after Roy Stuart had made his Escape out of Inverness Gaol, when he was going away to Rome, he heard my Lord Lovat charge him with a Message to the Pretender at Rome, to assure him of his Fidelity, and to prosecute the Affair of his Patent for a Duke: So that was not Hearsay, but positive Evidence.

Lord Lovat. That positive Evidence would say, That I was a natural Idiot.

L. H. S. Chevis did swear, either that he heard my Lord Lovat charge Roy Stuart with a Message to the Pretender, to assure him of his Fidelity, and to expedite his Commission of Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and his Patent of a Duke; or else, that Lord Lovat told him, That he had charged Roy Stuart with such a Message: But I am not certain which it was.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask the Witness, when he met with Roy Stuart, and he said he was going to Rome, What he said he was going upon?

C. Stuart. All that Roy Stuart said was, That he depended on Letters of Recommendation he had from my Lord Lovat; and was in Expectation of getting the Post that Colonel Allan Cameron had.

Sir J. Strange. What Letters were those he mentioned?

C. Stuart. Letters, he said, he had from my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, In order to explain a little more particularly the Affair of the Meeting: As this Witness says, That my Lord Lovat refused to sign the Paper, I desire to ask him, What Part my Lord Lovat took in the Deliberations about raising the Men, before he had an Opportunity of making that Refusal?

C. Stuart. I was busy at that Time in distributing the Money, and do not remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, We have done with our Examination of this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. No.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Lord Coke. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce, is Lieutenant John Dalrymple.

Lieutenant Dalrymple called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objections to Lieutenant Dalrymple?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I do not know him; but have no Objections to any Dalrymple.

Lieutenant Dalrymple sworn.

Lord Coke. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask this Witness, Where he was when my Lord Lovat was taken?

Dalrymple. I was on board the Furnace Sloop.

Lord Coke. Where was she?

Dal. At Loch Morar.

Lord Coke. Had you any Conversation with my Lord Lovat after he was taken Prisoner?

Dal. I had frequent Opportunities of discoursing with him, as I dined and supped with his Lordship on board the Sloop.

Lord Coke. What did he say upon those Discourses? What was the Purport of them?

Dal. On the 8th of June, I heard him say, That, if his Advice had been been taken, the Rebel Army might have laughed at the King's Troops, and tired them out all Summer. He said, It was not their Business to fight the King's Troops; but that, as Summer was coming on, they might have taken themselves to the Mountains, and could have lived on Butter, Cheese, and Milk; for that the Duke of Cumberland's Horse could be of no Service to him in that Country. At another Time, I was asking his Lordship, How he came to be engaged in this Affair, after having received so many Favours from the Government? He said, He did it more in Revenge to the Ministry, for having taken away his Independent Company, than any Thing else. And, in talking of the Pretender's Son, he called him Prince: And, when he came on board, there was one Frazer taken, from whom we took about Twenty-two Guineas; and my Lord Levat complained, that the Money had been taken from his Servant, which he had given him to pay his Men with.

Lord Calk. Had my Lord Levat any Men in Arms with him when he was taken?

Dalrymple. That I am no Judge of, because I was on board.

Lord Calk. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

L. H. S. My Lord Levat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions? Lord Levat. Was you in Captain Fergusson's Ship?

Dal. Yes; your Lordship may remember me very well.

Lord Levat. Then I hope you parted my Money amongst you: Did you see him take my Strong Box, in which were 700 Guineas?

Dal. I did not see him take the Box.

Lord Levat. Did you see it in his Cabin?

Dal. I saw the Outside of it; I never saw the Inside.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, He says he saw the Outside, but did not see the Inside of the Strong Box: he will inform your Lordships whether he was present when the Papers were taken out of that Box afterwards?

Dal. No; I was not present at the Opening of it.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Noel. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to produce, is David Campbell.

He was called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Levat, Have you any Objection to David Campbell?

Lord Levat. No; I have no Objection to any of the Campbells.

David Campbell sworn.

Mr. Noel. Please to tell my Lords, Whether you were with Captain Fergusson upon any Occasion, and in what Capacity?

D. Campbell. I was a Volunteer with General Campbell when we went to search the Islands; our Officers and Forces that served with General Campbell in the Western Highlands were divided; a good many went by Land, and a good many by Sea; and it fell to my Share to go with Captain Fergusson; I was on board, and on Shore with Captain Fergusson for about six Weeks.

Mr. Noel. What Islands did you go to search? and for what Purpose?

D. Campbell. We went into several Islands to search.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember your going into the Island of Morar?

D. Campbell. The Coast of Morar is on the Continent.

Mr. Noel. Where did you search?

D. Campbell. All along the Continent, and in all the Islands that lie there.

Mr. Noel. Who did you find there?

D. Campbell. We found a good many Rebel Gentlemen in the Islands, and upon the Continent.

Mr. Noel. Did you find any of the MacDonalds there?

D. Campbell. We apprehended several of that Name.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember one called the Bishop, or Vicar-General?

D. Campbell. We had Intelligence of his being in Morar; but the Day we expected to have taken him, he escaped with some others.

Mr. Noel. Was you present when my Lord Levat was taken?

D. Campbell. I was not present when he was taken, because it was ashore.

Mr. Noel. Did you see him after he was taken? and where?

D. Campbell. I saw him that Morning when he was taken, and brought on board the Furnace Sloop: I was then on board that Ship.

Mr. Noel. Did you search for any Letters belonging to my Lord Levat, on his being brought on board? and where did you search?

D. Campbell. Captain Duff, who was the Captain of the Terror Man of War, was the oldest Officer, and, as such, was the Commanding Officer of all those Vessels; and when my Lord Levat was brought on board, Captain Duff and Captain Fergusson determined to open his Box, and search it.

Mr. Noel. Did they find any Letters there?

D. Campbell. My Lord Levat, and the Two Captains, desired me to be present at the Opening and Examining the Box; and accordingly I came off the Deck, and was present, and was desired to take down a Particular of every Thing in the Box; which I did write down accordingly: And there was a Bundle of Papers, which seemed to be Letters, and was the last Thing we came to in the Box; and when we came to examine those Letters, I undertook to examine and read them, which I was desired to do; and I read them all.

Mr. Noel. Do you remember any particular Letter that you took notice of to my Lord Levat? If you do, pray tell my Lords what Lord Levat said upon it.

D. Campbell. I remember that the Purport of all the Letters, except the last, or the last but one, was about my Lord Levat's domestic Affairs; I cannot be positive whether it was the last, or the last but one; but that was a Letter directed to my Lord from his Son.

Mr. Noel. Did you say any Thing, and what, to my Lord upon that Letter?

D. Campbell. I read over that Letter; my Lord Levat at first had said to us, that we should not find, among those Papers that we were examining, any Matters of Disloyalty or Correspondence with the Rebels: And I expected it was so; but this Letter seeming to be a Correspondence with the Rebels, I said to my Lord Levat, after I had read the Letter, I think your Lordship had better not have had this Letter here: My Lord said, I was right, and he thought so too; or to that Purpose.

Mr. Noel. Did you say any Thing to my Lord Levat concerning his engaging, or not engaging, in the Rebellion?—D. Campbell. Yes.

Mr. Noel. What did you say to him?

D. Campbell. I cannot be positive whether I said it in the Manner of a Question, or in the Way of Conversation; but I took notice to him the one Way or the other, that I wondered his Lordship should be along with the Rebels, and be concerned in bringing his Country into Confusion. I remember I either asked him, or had Conversation with him, to this Effect.

Mr. Noel. What Answers did you receive from my Lord?

D. Campbell. What I remember of the Purport and Effect of it was, that he had been disobliged by the Government, and angry ever since he had his Independent Company taken from him.

Mr. Noel. Did he give that as an Answer to the Question that you asked him?

D. Campbell. He answered that immediately upon that Question, or this Part of the Conversation, as far as I can recollect.

Mr. Noel. Did you hear my Lord Levat say any Thing about his Opinion of fighting the Battle of Gulloden?

D. Campbell. Yes; I heard my Lord Levat say, That the Rebels and the Pretender's Son did not behave Soldier-like in fighting the Duke of Cumberland at that Time.

Mr. Noel. Did he say that as the Opinion of others, or as his own Opinion?

D. Campbell. To the best of my Remembrance, the Purport of the Conversation seemed to be, that he thought it was an unfoldier-like and a bad Manner of carrying on their Affairs.

Mr. Noel. Did he say any Thing about any Opinion of his having been, or not been, taken?

D. Campbell. I don't remember I heard any Thing of that.

Mr. Noel. Recollect yourself whether he did or no?

D. Campbell. It is so long since that happened, and I never expected to be questioned about that Conversation, that I do not recollect any particular Circumstances about my Lord Levat's giving any particular Reasons.

Mr. Noel. Did he speak any Thing of his own Advice or Opinion not being followed? and what was it? or to what Purport or Effect?

D. Campbell. I cannot recollect whether he did or not.

Mr. Noel. Did he say any Thing about continuing in the Highlands? or for what Purpose?

D. Campbell. I cannot charge my Memory with that Circumstance.

Mr. Noel. Did you hear my Lord Levat say any Thing about his coming to London, after he was taken?—D. Campbell. Yes.

Mr. Noel. What did he say upon that Occasion?

D. Campbell. In the Course of Conversation, sometimes my Lord said, He was in Hopes that he might get Friends that would befriend him; and he observed, that his being dealt mildly with, might be of more Service to the Government than rigorous Methods; and that it would be of more Service if they would spare him, than treating him with Rigour could possibly be.

Mr. Noel. Did he say in what respect it might be of more Service?

D. Campbell. I do not remember that.

Mr. Noel. Did he mention particularly in what he could be of Service, or no?

D. Campbell. I do not remember any Particulars farther, than that the general Tenor of his Conversation seemed to imply, that he could be of Service to the Government, by letting them into the Politicks of the Rebels, or some of their Counsels, or to that Purpose; I cannot be positive to any particular Thing.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, The Witness says, that he was sent for down from the Deck on board the Furnace, as he understood, at the Request of my Lord Levat, to be present when the Box was opened; and that accordingly he went down for that Purpose: Now I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether there were, or were not, many Papers in that Strong Box?

D. Campbell. It seemed to be a Bundle containing from about 25 to 30 Letters.

Mr. Noel. After you had read a Number of them, before you came to the Letter from his Son that you have mentioned, did my Lord Levat say any thing about the Contents of the Papers?

D. Campbell. He said, either before or after I had the Letters, directing his Discourse to the Company, that we should find nothing in those Letters that would shew any Correspondence of his with the Rebels.

Mr. Noel. Did he drop any thing to that Purpose during your reading the Papers?

D. Campbell. I cannot say whether he did, or not.

Mr. Noel. Was the Paper you have spoken of at the Bottom?

D. Campbell. I took them all up in Course as they lay; and that was the last, or last but one.

Mr. Noel. What did you say upon having read that Paper?

D. Campbell. I said, that he had better not have had that Paper there; and he said, I was right.

Mr. Noel. What did my Lord Levat say, or do, upon that Occasion?

D. Campbell. I remember nothing farther than what I have expressed.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, This Witness has told your Lordships, that, among the Letters which were in this Box, there was a Letter found from my Lord Levat's Son to him; which makes me imagine there was some treasonable Correspondence in that Letter: I therefore pray, he may acquaint your Lordships what the Purport and Tenor of that Letter was.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, We shall produce the Letter in the Course of our written Evidence; and therefore we do not ask him any Questions about it now.

Sir J. Strange. When you said, that you believed the Letter had better not have been there, did my Lord Levat say any thing to his Servant how such a Mistake happened?

D. Campbell. I do not recollect any such Circumstance; it might have been, but I do not remember any such thing.

Sir J. Strange. Do you recollect, that he said any thing to his Secretary, or any of his People, about him?

D. Campbell. No.

Sir J. Strange. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

Lord

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Lovat. Was you present when I surrendered my Sword in the Defect of Morar?

D. Campbell. I was not present; I was not ashore all Day, came on board the Night before, and therefore could not see my Lord Lovat surrender his Sword.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether it was to Captain Dugal Campbell, of the Argyllshire Militia, that I surrendered my Sword?

D. Campbell. Captain Campbell was upon the Command; he is a Relation of mine; when he came on board, he said he had taken my Lord Lovat Prisoner. I heard Captain Fergusson's Boatswain mention how they came up with my Lord.

Lord Lovat. Did Captain Fergusson threaten Captain Campbell for not delivering up my Strong Box; and did they not fall to Loggerheads about it?

D. Campbell. Captain Fergusson never said any thing about it; Captain Campbell did; but I do not apprehend they were at Loggerheads. Captain Campbell told me, that when he had got Lord Lovat, and the Box, he did not know where Captain Fergusson was; he went a different Route; and afterwards Captain Campbell's Servant gave Captain Fergusson the Box, and desired him not to part with it.

Lord Lovat. Did you see my Brother-in-Law, Major General Campbell, in Captain Fergusson's Ship, when it lay there?

D. Campbell. I did not see him, because I went just before to another Ship.

Lord Lovat. Do you know that I delivered up my Strong Box to General Campbell, and said it would be as safe as in my own Hands?

D. Campbell. No; I was not there.

Lord Lovat. Do you know whether General Campbell and Captain Fergusson went themselves into the Cabin, to examine my Strong Box, and staid there two Hours?

D. Campbell. I don't know it; but I had an Inventory of the Things in the Box; and whoever had the Box, the Things contained in it were in the Inventory.

Mr. Attorney General. I desire to know, if the Strong Box was not opened by a Key delivered by my Lord Lovat, just at the Time it was opened?

D. Campbell. Yes, it was; and the Things put in the same Order they were before, and the Key delivered back to my Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had it ever been opened before that Time?

D. Campbell. This was the first Opening of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. At the time you took the Inventory, was not that the first Opening of the Box? And was not the Key delivered by my Lord Lovat?—D. Campbell. Yes.

[Then the Witness, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We will now call Sir Everard Fawkenner.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Have you any Objection to Sir Everard Fawkenner?—Lord Lovat. Not any.

Sir Everard Fawkenner sworn.

Mr. Attorney General. I desire, Sir Everard Fawkenner, that you will please to give an Account to my Lords of the Conversation you had with Lord Lovat, after he was taken Prisoner.

Sir Everard Fawkenner. After Lord Lovat was taken and brought Prisoner to Fort Augustus, and lodged in an Apartment of the Fort there, his Royal Highness the Duke ordered me to go and visit him; not with any Design to examine him particularly; for his Highness said, he intended to send him to London, there to receive what the Laws of his Country should order; but that as, in all Appearance, he had been a great Cause of the Mischiefs brought upon his Country, this Visit was designed to see whether he would discover any thing that might tend to bring those Mischiefs to a more speedy End. When I went to him, I thought it would be the most candid Way of Proceeding to inform him who I was; and accordingly I told him, that I had the Honour to be Secretary to his Royal Highness the Duke: My Lord Lovat said, that, notwithstanding the Circumstances he then appeared in, he had formerly rendered great Services to the Government, and the present Royal Family; and that he had received several Marks of the late King's Favour: And my Lord imputed to Marshal Wade the Cause of his present Misfortunes; which was, the taking away his Company; which he expressed his Repentment at, by saying, that if Kouli Kan had landed in Britain, he should have thought that would have justified his Lordship to have joined him with his Clan; and he would have done it. He said further, that he had been in a Condition to render Service to the Government, and that he might be of future Service to the Government; and that Mercy, as well as Justice, belonged to Sovereigns; and that, if his Majesty would extend Mercy towards him, he would shew his Loyalty, and deserve more than Twenty such Heads as his were worth. I would have entered more particularly into the Services that he would render the Government, but that I found, by his own Discourse, that the Service he meant was no more, than to bring his Clan for the future into the Service of the Government, instead of employing them against it. He said, the World allowed him some Abilities, and he would apply them to that Service; and concluded with this, saying, He was — in utrumque paratus

Seu versare dolos, seu certa occumbere morti.

Mr. Attorney General. Can you charge your Memory with any particular Expressions he made use of?

Sir Everard Fawkenner. I cannot say whether what I have said was the Subject of one or two Conversations; but he used to send for me frequently, and I remember there was one thing he would seem to make reconcileable, which was, his Principle of Loyalty to the Family of the Stuarts, and the Services done for the late King and the Royal Family.

Mr. Attorney General. What were the Services he said he could render the Government?

Sir Everard Fawkenner. Only that he would employ the Frasers in the Service of the Government, instead of employing them against it, and employ his Talents in the Support of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat confess or deny that he had been concerned in the Rebellion?

Sir Everard Fawkenner. He did not seem to me to take the Trouble to deny it, but rather acquiesced in it that he had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ever say he was not concerned in it?

Sir Everard Fawkenner. I cannot say he ever did.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask Sir Everard Fawkenner any Questions?

Lord Lovat. No; only that I am Sir Everard's humble Servant, and wish him Joy of his young Lady.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have now done with calling our First Voice Evidence, any further than what will be necessary to prove the written Evidence which we shall produce; and therefore what we propose now, is, to call a Witness, to prove some Letters, some of them of the Signature and Hand-writing, and all of the Dictating, of the noble Lord at the Bar.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, I submit to your Lordships, if it would not be better to have the Whole of the written Evidence together, rather than to go on To-night with Part of it only: We submit it intirely to your Lordships, whether we shall now go on or not.

Lord Lovat. And I hope your Lordships will remember poor Lovat, who cannot stand; and that you will give a little Respite till Monday, or order his Funeral.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Is your written Evidence likely to be long?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, It will be very long.

L. H. S. Will it take up more than one Day?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, It is difficult to say, with Certainty, how long it will take up: There is a great deal of written Evidence to lay before your Lordships; and there must be the Summing up of the whole Evidence by one of the Managers.

Lords. Go on; go on.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, Then we will beg Leave to call Robert Frazer.

He was sworn and examined on this Trial before, and was my Lord Lovat's Secretary.

Robert Frazer called into Court.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Letter (showing the Witness a Letter), and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Frazer. 'Tis my own.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you write that Letter?

R. Frazer. By Order of my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat dictate it to you, or not?

R. Frazer. My Lord Lovat dictated every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon the Signature of the Letter, and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is?

R. Frazer. 'Tis my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you, or did you not, see him sign it?

R. Frazer. I saw him sign it.

Sir W. Yonge. As the Letter is not addressed to any body, please to inform their Lordships to whom it was intended to be sent?

R. Frazer. It was intended to be sent to John Murray of Broughton, the Pretender's Secretary.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it sent from Castle-Downey?

R. Frazer. No; not from Castle-Downey.

L. H. S. How do you know this Letter was intended to be sent to Mr. Murray?

R. Frazer. My Lord Lovat told me so.

Sir W. Yonge. Was the Letter sent at any time?

R. Frazer. Yes; it was sent from Gortuleg.

Sir W. Yonge. When was it sent?

R. Frazer. After my Lord Lovat had made his Escape from Lord London.

Sir W. Yonge. How long was that after the Letter was writ?

R. Frazer. It was writ in December, and sent in January.

Then the Letter (marked No. III.) signed Lovat, was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table, as follows:

No. III.

Honorable and Dear Sir,

I Received, with vast Pleasure, the Honour of your Letter of the 31st October, by the Bearer, who has the Honour to be known to you, He is my Relation, and was my Secretary for several Years; and he is now Captain-Lieutenant in the First Battalion of my Son's Regiment. He gave me great Joy in letting me know at this Time, as well as when he came from Edinburgh some Weeks ago, that you was in perfect Health, notwithstanding of the extreme Fatigue, and constant Hurry, that the essential Affairs of the Royal Prince keeps you in Day and Night.

I do assure you, dear Sir, that no Man in Scotland is better pleased to hear of the Continuation of your Health, and the Prosperity of your Person in every Shape, than I am, as I always found you a worthy Gentleman, full of good Sense and Politeness, full of true Loyalty and Valour, and faithfully zealous for the Interest of the Royal Family, and, in the mean Time, mighty civil and obliging to me, when I had the Honour to see on the Subject of the King's Affairs, which never was so well taken care of, as since they were in your Hands: I would be therefore a most stupid, worthless Animall, if I had not a most grateful Sense of your Goodness and Freindship towards me: So, dear Sir, you my beleive me, when I assure you, that my Heart and Soul is full of Thanks and Gratitude for the great Marks of Freindship, that I had the Honour to receive from you; and I have laid my positive Commands upon my Son to love, honour, and respect you as my best Freind, and to make you his Patron at the Prince's Court, and to do nothing that is essential without your Advice.

Mr. Murray do not call is a Letter itself, gree, m Letter, my Lord Sir W. R. Fr Sir W. R. Fr Sir W. R. Fr

Vo

Advice; and he will find it his own Interest to observe exactly my Instructions on that Head.

I solemnly protest, dear Sir, That it was the greatest Greif of my Life, that my Indisposition and severe Sickness kept me from going South to my dear brave Prince, and never parting with him while I was able to stand, but venture my old Bones, with Pleasure, in his Service, and before his Eyes, while I had the least Breath within me: But, when I found, that by Pains and Weakness in my Knees, I lost the Use of my Limbs, I resolved to give a Proof of my singular Zeal for my dear Master the King, and for my brave glorious Prince, that, I truly believe, few or none in Scotland would do, but myself. I send my eldest Son, the Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Life, a Youth about Nineteen Year old, who was just going abroad to finish his Studys and Education, after having learned, with Applause, what is taught in our Scots Universitys, and was graduate Master of Arts. But, instead of sending him abroad to compleat his Education, I have sent him to venture the last Drop of his Blood in the glorious Prince's Service; and, as he is extremely beloved, and the Darling of the Clan, all the Gentlemen of my Name and Clan (which, I thank God! are numerous, and look well, and always believed to be as stout as their Neighbours) are gone with him.

There is not the Head of an old Family or Trybe of my Name and Clan in this Country, that have staid at home; only a few old Gentlemen, infirm like myself, that were not able to travell: And, as my Son is adored by the common People of my Clan, he has brought along with him a considerable Number of the best of them, in two handsome Battalions; and, if they were as well armed and equipped as I could wish, they would look as well as any Clan that went South this Year; for, as I possess the largest and best Estate in the Shire, I have a great Number of Commons on my Property, about 1500 good and bad; and that which is very singular, is, that, in that 1500, there is not 30 but what are Frasers; which no Chief in the Highlands can say of his Clan, but myself; for most of them are mixed with Men of all the other Clans.

I flatter myself, that my Son will behave well at the Head of my People; and I am sure every one of them will be ready to live and dye with him; and, if he lives, I hope he will be an useful Servant to the King and Prince, and an Honour to his Family; for he has very good Parts and Learning for his Age: And since I am like to make my Exit very soon out of this troublesome World, and that, I thank God! I have served my King faithfully from my Infancy till now; and that it is well known by all the Gentlemen in the King's Interest in the North, that, for many Years past, I was the Life and Spirit of the King's Affairs in these Countries; and as I made it my only Business to encourage and keep up the Hearts of the King's Friends, it was very fatiguing and troublesome to me, and vastly expensive, by my extravagant Housekeeping, and giving away often a little Money to the King's Friends that wanted it much, and from whom I never expect any Payment; and now I give the last Proof of my uncommon and unalterable Zeal for my dear Master the King, in sending what is dearest to me in the World, my eldest Son, and my Clan, to venture their Lives with the glorious Prince Royal, and under his Eyes.

As it would be ill Manners to trouble you in a Letter with some essentiall Things that concerns my own Person and Family, I have entrusted my Cousin, the Bearer, to give you a true Account of what I have to say; which, I hope, you will receive with your ordinary Goodness, and Freindship for me. And I earnestly entreat, after you consider what I have to say, that you represent it to the Prince in the kindly and freindly Manner you always behaved to me: And, as I ask nothing of his Royal Highness, that is either expensive, dishonourable, or disadvantageous, to his Royal Highness, and to his Interest, I am convinced, that his Royal Highness will give me a just and gracious Answer; which will for ever fix me, my Posterity, and all concerned in me, to his Royal Highness's Person and Family: And I can say without Vanity, that there is not one Family in the North of Scotland more capable to serve him, and his Royal Family, than mine, nor non that has deserved it more of the Royal Family of Stuarts, since their Accession to the Throne, than the Frasers, and the Lords of Loval. They likewise signalized themselves with Honour and Valour for King Robert Bruce, and his Offspring: And it is likewise singular, that no Lord Loval of Twenty-four that have been of my Family, ever fought or voted against their King.

I beg you Ten thousand Pardons for this Digression; but, as I look upon you as my best Freind, I thought proper to let you know this under my own Hand; which, I hope, you will forgive, and the Tediousness of this Letter, and believe that I am, as much as any Man alive, with the utmost Esteem and Respect, and with a most sincere and constant Gratitude, while there is Life in me,

Honorable and Dear Sir,

Your most obedient, most obliged, and most affectionate, faithful, humble Servant,

LOVALT.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Letter will be proved to have been received by John Murray of Broughton. My Lords, he is not now here; and therefore we do not call him to that Particular: But the next Letter we shall produce, is a Letter written by my Lord Loval to the Pretender's Son. The Letter itself will appear to be torn in some Parts, which will, in a small Degree, mangle the Sense; but that will be supplied by a Copy of the same Letter, written at the same Time, by the same Hand, and by the Order of my Lord Loval, which we shall produce to your Lordships.

Sir William Yonge, producing the Letter to the Witnesses, asked,

Sir Wm. Yonge. Of whose Hand-writing is that?

R. Fraser. It is mine.

Sir Wm. Yonge. By whose Order did you write it?

R. Fraser. By my Lord Loval's Order.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Was it dictated to you by him?

R. Fraser. Every Word of it.

(a) N. B. The Chasms in this Letter, which were occasioned by tearing off the Signature, are supplied from No. II. the Copy of it.

VOL. IX.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Was the Letter signed by my Lord?

R. Fraser. It was.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Is the Signature there? Or, is it torn off?

R. Fraser. It is torn off.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Look upon that Copy of a Letter, and tell my Lords whom that was written by?—R. Fraser. By me.

Sir Wm. Yonge. By whose Order?

R. Fraser. By my Lord Loval's Order.

Sir Wm. Yonge. For what End or Purpose was it made?

R. Fraser. It was made for a Copy to keep.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Is that a Copy of the other Letter which you were just now shewn?

R. Fraser. That is a Copy that was drawn from the Principal.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Was the Original sent at any Time?

R. Fraser. Yes; it was.

Sir Wm. Yonge. When was it sent?

R. Fraser. It was sent from Gortuleg at the same Time the Letter to Mr. Murray was sent.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Can you give an Account how the Signature of the original Letter came to be torn off?

R. Fraser. I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, There is some Part of the Signature remaining: The Top of the L, and the Top of the t, remain.

My Lords, We desire the Letter may be read.

Sir Wm. Yonge. Deliver both the Letter, and the Copy, to explain it.

L. H. S. Was the Signature originally there?—R. Fraser. Yes.

L. H. S. You say my Lord Loval dictated it?—R. Fraser. Yes.

L. H. S. Did he sign it?—R. Fraser. Yes.

L. H. S. Was the Name intire upon it, when it was sent away from Gortuleg?—R. Fraser. Yes; it was.

L. H. S. When was it sent away from Gortuleg?

R. Fraser. At the same Time with the former Letter, that has been read.

L. H. S. When was that sent?—R. Fraser. In January.

L. H. S. By whom was it sent?

R. Fraser. By a Tenant of my Lord Loval's; one of his Stratharrick Men.

L. H. S. My Lords, As both the Letter and the Copy have been proved, it will be proper for your Lordships first to hear the Original read, imperfect as it is, and then the Copy.

Clerk read the Letter No. I. dated Beaufort, November, 1745, and then read the Copy of the same Letter, No. II.

No. I.

Most Royal Prince,

(a) I Reckon it the greatest Misfortune of my Life, and which has occasioned me more Greif and Sorrow, than any cross Accident that ever happened to me, that my long Indisposition, and severe Pains and Tortures, suffered for a long Time, deprived me of the vast Joy and . . . . Honour I would have had in kissing your nefs Person

Hands, and in venturing my old before your Eyes. And, as my dear

Masters and ereigns, your Royal Father and Grandfather never ha

. . . . d a more faithful and zealous Subject than een to their Royal Persons and Interests, since I . . d the Use of my Reason; so nothing in this World could give me so much Pleasure as to signalize myself, and end my Days, in the Service of your Royal Highness, where I would not be useless, having been bred to the War by the best Masters in Europe these Fifty Years past: But now, finding myself a perfect Invalid, not able to mount a Horseback, nor to walk Half a Mile, and consequently not able to exert myself either as a Soldier, or as a General Officer, which my dear Master, your Royal Father, was pleased to make me above Forty Years ago.

Finding myself in this unhappy, cruell Situation, of not being able to pay my Duty to your Royal Highness in every respect, I did resolve to give your Royal Highness the next Mark of my greatest Zeal that I am capable of, if it was to gain your Royal Highness Ten Kingdoms; and that is, to send my eldest Son, the Bearer of this Letter, and the great Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Soul, to venture his Life, and

. . . his young Person, in your Royal High : And I hope, that his great Zeal and For your Royal Highness, in every Shape y him, will be a Proof, that he is my true Son.

. the principal

I have sent along with him all Gentlemen, and Heads of Families, of my Eight hundred of my common People of s own Choice: Thirteen hi : And it is singular in my Clan, that, of or

Fourteen hundred Men that are on my Proper they are all

Frasers; and there is not Twenty of them of any other Clan. Both

History and Traditions tell us, that the Clan of the Frasers always behaved well; and now, when they have a most glorious and brave Prince at their Head, I truly rather hear of my Son's Death, and of all my Clan that went along with him, than to hear of their Misbehaviour, which would soon put my gray Head with Sorrow to the Grave;

but I do not in the least fear it. I therefore deliver my Son, and my Clan, most heartily and frankly to your Royal Highness, to do with them what in your Royal Highness Goodness and Pleasure you think fit.

I hope there is none of your Royal Highness Friends, or Servants, that has come to this Country, but will do me the Justice to declare, that I am, and always have been, the most zealous and most active Partizan your Royal Highness has in the North of Scotland; and wn I did but my Duty.

Manners,

This Letter is already longer; than, in good, I ought to have troubled your Royal Highness as I have a great many essential Things to lay your Royal Highness, I will make a Memorial and give them in to my good Friend Mr., your Royal Highness Secretary of State, that he . . . y represent to your Royal Highness what is in . . ., when you are at Leisure.

I pray God preserve your Royal Highness Person, and give you Success and Glory in all your Enterprizes, as you have had hitherto; and I am, while I live, ready to lose the last Drop of my Blood, and with as great Zeal as any Man on Earth,

Most Glorious and most Royal Prince,

Your Royal Highness most constant and faithful Slave, Beaufort, Nov.

1745.

Then the Copy of the above Letter was read.

Lord High Steward. By whom was this Letter intended to have been sent to the Young Pretender?

R. Fraser. It was intended to have been sent by the Master of Lovat.

L. H. S. How long had you this Copy in your Hands?

R. Fraser. I had it in my Hands for some time after it was written: It lay in my Desk.

L. H. S. How long had you it in your Hands?

R. Fraser. I cannot be positive.

L. H. S. To whom did you deliver the Copy?

R. Fraser. I do not know to whom I delivered the Copy.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, Though it is impossible for your Lordships to doubt who is meant by the Words Most glorious Prince, and Your Royal Highness, in the Letter, yet, if your Lordships please, this Witness may be asked, as he wrote the Letter by my Lord's dictating, Who was meant by these Words?

R. Fraser. I took it to mean the Pretender's Son.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, The next Letter we beg leave to produce, is another Letter that was intended to be sent to the Master of Lovat.

Look upon that Letter [showing the Letter to the Witness], and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Fraser. It is mine.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you write it?

R. Fraser. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it dictated by Lord Lovat to you?

R. Fraser. Every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it signed by my Lord Lovat, when it was written?

R. Fraser. I cannot be positive whether it was signed, or not.

Sir W. Yonge. Recollect, if you can, whether it was signed, or not.

R. Fraser. To the best of my Remembrance, it was signed. It was intended to be sent, with the other Letters, to the Laird of Lochiel, who was then at Perth. It was written by me, and dictated by my Lord Lovat every Word.

Sir W. Yonge. Can you take upon you to say, that it was signed, or not?

R. Fraser. To the best of my Knowledge, it was.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter sent at the same time with the others?

R. Fraser. Yes; it was.

Sir W. Yonge. At the same time, and by the same Person?—R. Fraser. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Orders were they sent?

R. Fraser. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. What was you ordered to do with these Four Letters?

R. Fraser. To put them up in a Packet; which I did, and directed them to the Master of Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. By whom was you ordered to do it?

R. Fraser. By my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Were there Three or four Letters in all?

R. Fraser. There were Four Letters.

L. H. S. Was this Letter sent in the same Packet with the others?

R. Fraser. Yes; it was.

Then the Letter N^o IV. was delivered in at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. IV.

My Dear Laird of Lochiel,

I Could hardly believe an Angel from Heaven, if he had told me, that Donald Laird of Lochiel would forget Simon Lord Lovat, as you have done: And this is the more surprizing, that you cannot say, nor justly think, that, in one Article of my Life, I fail'd to shew my singular Affection and Respect for my dear Cousin Lochiel; but, on the contrary, gave you all the Marks of Freindship in my Power, or that I was capable off; and yet, my dear Cousin, since ever you join'd the Prince, you never did me the Honour to write me one Scrape of a Pen, notwithstanding of the strict Union and Freindship that we always lived in, and our constant Correspondence. I solemnly protest, that I know not what to attribute this Silence to; since I cannot accuse myself of any thing that deserves it at your Hands: For you never saw me fail in my Loyalty to the King, or in my Affection and Freindship towards you; nor never will, tho' you should continue as unkind as you are. I therefore beg of you, my dear Cousin, to let me hear from you; and be so good as to comfort my languishing Soul, and drooping Spirits, by assuring me that you are the same affectionate Laird of Lochiel to me that ever you was: I truly never had so much Need of your Comfort and Assistance as at this time; for I am in vast Distress of Body and Mind.

The base and treacherous Behaviour of our wretched Cousin the Laird of Mac Leod has almost cost me my Life already: The Night before he took his Journey to the Isle of Skye from this House, sitting by me, he looked up seriously, and swore to me, that as he should answer to God, and wished that God might never have Mercy on him, and that he might never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but that his Bones might rott on Earth, be burnt, and his Ashes blown up in the Air, if he did not come with all Speed imaginable, and with all his Men that was already prepared, and come and join my Son, and the Clan Fraser, and march South with them to the Prince's Service, wherever he was. He swore the same terrible Oaths and Imprecations next Day to my Son, and to your faithful Servant Gortuleg: And if he had kept his Oaths and Word, I had so managed this Part of the North, that about 6000 Men had marched South to the Prince's Assistance; which I thought would much encourage his own Loyal Party, and frighten the English to his Obedience. But when I got Mac Leod's Letter about Twelve Days after, in which he told me, that, after deliberating fully with his Neighbour, Sir Alexander, and weighing the Arguments on both Sides, he, and his Neighbour, had resolved to stay at home, and not to trouble the Government.

In reading this Line, I had almost fainted, and my Body swell'd with Anger and Vexation; so that I could not sleep nor eat for several Days; and I am yet far from being recovered, for I have a severe Stich and Pain in my Left-side, which keeps me from my Night's Rest, and has intirely taken away my Appetite; so that I beleive the Treachery of that unnatural, ungrateful, and wicked Man, will be the Occasion of my Death very soon: But before I die, I resolved, if possible, to give such a Mark of my Zeal for my good Master the King, and for the glorious brave Royal Prince his Son, that I beleive few in Scotland would do but myself.

I send my eldest Son, who is the great Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Life and Soul, to venture his Life and Blood in the brave Royal Prince's Service; and he has all the Gentlemen of my Clan with him, except a few old Gentlemen that are not able to travell. He has Stray, Killbokie, and Religg, the principal Heads of Familys of the Frasers this Side of Lochness; and he has Foyers, Ferraline, and Leale-Garth, as the principal Heads of the Familys in Stratherrick and Aber-torff; and he has certainly taken with him the Flour of my Clan. I pray God preserve him and them, and influence them to fight gallantly before the brave Prince's Eyes; for I had much rather hear of my Son's Death, and of my Clans, than that they should misbehave; since History cannot shew an Occasion in which the Frasers misbehaved; for, I thank God, they were always known to be brave.

Now, my dear Cousin Lochiel, you cannot but think it just and reasonable, that I deliver my Son to your Care, in every respect; and that your Clan, Cluny's, and mine, should be most unite, and live together like Brethren; and that the Quarrell of the one should be the Quarrell of the other, according to our mutual Engagements by Word and Write; in which, I hope, we will never fail. The treacherous Behaviour of the monstrous Laird of Mac Leod should put all Relations and intimate Friends on their Guard not to fail to one another; for he has, by his Treachery and unnatural Behaviour, fixed upon himself the most infamous Character of any Man on Earth: That Traitor, instead of coming to this House, where he was always Mr. to join my Son, according to his Promise, has marched the other Side of Kessock this Day with 400 of his chosen Men and Gentlemen: I beleive that, hearing that my Son's Regiment was in Arms in this Country, he was afraid to pass through it, though it's the best Way to Inverness. His Fears was groundless; for I would not hurt my Mother's Kin, though it was in my Power: But if my Son saw the Laird, I beleive he would shoot him, or bring him Prisoner to the Prince, because of his abominable Breach of Oath and Promises to him.

When he sent a little sneaking Gentleman here with his treacherous Letters, my Son and Gortuleg made two bitter Answers to them. When the little Gentleman sought my Answer, I told him to tell his Chief, that he was a Traitor to the King, and a Murderer of my Son and me, which he might be sure I would resent, if I was able; but that I would never black Paper to a Man that had so basely betray'd me; that since he went to the Devill, I would leave him there, and have no more to do with him.

Honest Gortuleg, who made up a Company to go with my Son, and who would be most usefull to him, fell very ill, Eight Days ago, of his old Distemper, an Inflammation in the Kidneys, of which he had almost dyd some years ago in Lochaber, and many times since. He lies in the next Room to me; we are both much indisposed, and Invalids. He joins me in assuring you, and my dear Cousin the Lady Lochiel, and all your lovely Family, of our most affectionate humble Duty and best Respects.

Since you are justly the Royal Prince's great Favourite, I hope you'll be so kind, dear Cousin, as make my Court to his Royal Highness; for tho' it is my Misfortune not to be able to follow him wherever he goes (which would be the Delight and Honor of my Life), yet you can freely assure his Royal Highness, that he has not a more faithfull and zealous Partizan in Scotland: And tho' I am now able to mount a Horseback, or travell a Foot, yet I have done his Royal Highness more Service than any one of my own Rank in Brittain; for I keep Life and Spirits in his Affairs more than any Man in the North: And tho' the President tells me plainly, that I have forfeit Life and Fortune, and that my Person is not safe in this House; yet I am resolved to live and die with Courage and Resolution in my King and Royal Prince's Service; but no Death that they can invent can lessen my Zeal, or fright me from my Duty.

I beg, my dear Cousin, you may acquaint me what you know of our dear Cousin Mr. William Drummond of Bechaldy; for I can get no certain Accounts of him, which vexes my Soul and Heart; for he was one of the Men in the World that I loved most, and that loved me most.

I beg you ten thousand Pardons for this very long Letter; but it is to punish you for your Silence, and to convince that I am always the same Man towards you and yours.

I intreat

I intreat you make my most affectionate Compliments to my dear Son-in-law Cluny.—I am persuaded he will do Honor to all concerned in him.—I am convinced that you will easily believe, that I am, as much as any Man alive, with unalterable Esteem, Attachment, and Respect,

My dear Laird of Locheil,

Beaufort, Novr

The Signature of this Letter was torn.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, There was another Letter, which we take to be One of the Four which was sent in that Packet; it is not a very material one; and we shall produce it to your Lordships, rather to connect the Evidence of this Witness, than for any thing contained in it. It is a Letter to the late Marquis of Tullibardine, by the Name of Duke of Athol.

Sir William Yonge producing the Letter, the Signature to which, and Part of the Date, is torn off.

Sir W. Yonge. Of whose Hand-writing is that Letter?

R. Fraser. My own.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Directions did you write it?

R. Fras. By my Lord Levat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Did he dictate it to you?

R. Fras. Every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Was the Letter signed by Lord Levat?

R. Fras. Yes, it was.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you see my Lord Levat sign it?

R. Fras. Yes, I did.

Sir W. Yonge. Is the Signature torn off?

R. Fras. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter sent with the others?

R. Fras. It was sent with the former that have been read.

Sir W. Yonge. In the same Packet?

R. Fras. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. Which was directed to the Master of Levat?

R. Fras. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. For whom did my Lord Levat say that Letter was designed?

R. Fras. For the Duke of Athol.

Sir W. Yonge. Who did he mean by that?

R. Fras. The Marquis of Tullibardine, the Duke of Athol that was abroad.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you send that Letter?

R. Fras. By my Lord Levat's Orders.

Then the Letter, N^o V. dated 5th December, 1745, was delivered at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. V.

My good Lord Duke

I HAD the Honour to receive two very ob * from your Grace; for which I give you * . . . nks; and I can freely assure your Grace * . . . nefs and Civilitys towards me, have had * . . . pression upon me, that I will remember * . . . ays of my Life with Gratitude and Thank . . . And your Grace shall always find me most ready to serve your Person and Family.

I had the Honour to return Answers to both your Grace's Letters; one by Mr. Mac Donell, and the other by Mr. Mac Pherjon, both of the Army; but as the Bearer has the Honour to be your Grace and is my Relation, and one whom I trust as much as any of my Family, I have put it upon him to acquaint your Grace of every thing that happens in this Country worth your while to hear, since I had the Honour to receive your Grace's Letters; which I am sure he will do very exactly and very faithfully; for he knows every thing that is done in this Country, and does not want Understanding.

I humbly beg the Continuance of your Grace's Goodness and Civilitys towards me; and be so just as to believe that I will remain, while I live, with the utmost Esteem, Attachment, and Respect,

My good Lord Duke,

Your Grace's most obedient, most obliged, and most affectionate faithful humble Servant,

Beaufort, Dec. 5.
1745.

The Signature of this Letter was torn.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, The next Letter we beg Leave to produce, is a Letter from my Lord Levat to his Son. My Lords, your Lordships have heard already of a Letter which was found in the Box, from the Son to the Father; to which this will appear to be an Answer. The Father's Letter we shall prove in the same Manner as we have done the others; and the Son's will be proved to be of his Hand-writing, and to have been in the Box, at the time it was examined and opened, in the Manner your Lordships have heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Of whose Hand-writing is that Letter? [Shewing the Letter to the Witnesses.]

R. Fras. It is of my own Hand-writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Orders did you write it?

R. Fras. By my Lord Levat's.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it signed by my Lord Levat?

R. Fras. It was not signed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it ever sent by my Lord Levat's Order?

R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whom?

R. Fras. To the Master of Levat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Levat dictate it to you?

R. Fras. Yes, every Word of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he order you to send it to the Master of Levat?

R. Fras. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Lord Levat frequently order Letters to be wrote, and order his Secretary to send them, without signing them?

R. Fras. Yes, my Lords, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not that generally to People the most intimate with him?

R. Fras. Yes, only to his Intimates.

Lord High Steward. Do you know any thing of the sending of this Letter?

R. Fras. Yes.

Lord High Steward. By whom was it sent?

R. Fras. By one of my Lord Levat's Tenants.

L. H. S. Was it sent at the same time with the Packet?

R. Fras. Yes, I believe it was; but I am not positive as to the precise Time it was sent; it was either then, or a little after: If I was to read the Letter, I could tell. [The Witnesses having looked upon the Letter.]

L. H. S. Does that enable you to recollect when the Letter was sent?

R. Fras. Yes, my Lords, it does; it was sent at the same time with the other Letters that I spoke of.

L. H. S. With that Packet which has been mentioned?

R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, This Letter consists of two Pieces; one is a Postscript: Therefore we beg Leave to ask this Witness, Whether the Postscript was wrote by him, and dictated by my Lord, and sent at the same time with the other?

R. Fras. Yes, it was.

Then the Clerk read the Letter, No. X. at the Table: Which is as follows:

No. X.

My Dearest Child,

I Received the Pleasure of your Letter by the two Expresses that I sent to you the first of this Month, which you forgot to mark the Date of. It gave me great Joy, my dear Simon, to know, that you are in perfect Health, and to see such a handsome Letter of your own Write and Diction. But I must tell you, my dear Child, that you advance severall Things in it that are not just, and that you cannot support in Reason. In the first Place, your Reason for your not writing to me before, since I made my Escape (though I accept of your Excuse) was neither just nor relevant; for it was not to be supposed, that either Loudoun or the President would be in Terms with me so soon, after having so signally affronted them: But, in the second Place, it is impossible there could be any Terms 'twixt Lord Loudoun, the President, and me, that should keep you from writing to me; no, if I should be attainted: So your Reason for not writing to me was ill-founded. As to your Advice, that comes immediately after it, in representing to me, That if I could make my Peace with Loudoun and the President, and save my Person and Estate, that you would content yourself with a thin Regiment: This Thought, my dear Child, was not at all digested, and entirely ignorant to my Circumstances: For, in the first Place, Loudoun can no more save my Person and Estate, than any of your subaltern Officers can; nay, they cannot as much engage to make me free from Prison for any Time: So that it would be Madness for me to make any Terms with them, but to speak civilly, and to keep myself out of their Way. But the Fact is, my dear Child, which you forgot, or perhaps that I did not take Pains to inform you of it, That, above seven Years ago, I was one of those that entered into a formal Association to venture our Lives and Fortunes to restore the King, and his Offspring; and we signed our mutual Engagements for this Purpose with our Hands and Seals, and sent it to France to the Cardinal de Fleury, then First Minister of France, by the Hands of Mr. William Drummond of Bochaldy. The Cardinal was so pleased with it, that he shewed our Engagements and Subscriptions to the King his Master, and begged of his Majesty to support us: And the King desired the Cardinal to assure us of his Protection, and that he would give us his Assistance and Succours to restore our King. When Mr. Drummond acquainted my own King of this Proof of my Loyalty, and of my constant Zeal for his Person and Interest, from my younger Years till now, gave me evident Proofs of his Goodness and Favours towards me since, as much as to any Subject. He gave Mr. Drummond a Commission to carry to me of General of the Highlanders, which I have; and severall Letters writ with the King's own Hand, that his Majesty would pay all the Money I paid Frazerdale, and his Creditors, for the Estate of Levat; and, last of all, the King was so good as to give such a singular Mark of his Favour to me, and to my Family, that he created me Duke of Frazer, &c. and sent me that Patent by William Drummond; of which I have an authentick Copy, signed and counter-signed by the King. I would be a Monster of Ingratitude, if this did not attach me to his Majesty more than ever. Bochaldy, not thinking it safe to bring the Patent to Britain, left it with his Uncle, old Locheil, at Bullen in France, who is now come over with Lord John Drummond his Collonell; and I hope he has taken my Patent along with him. I beg you may assure him of my most affectionate Respects. He and I always lived like two Brothers, and loved one another most dearly. I am sure he still retains affectionate Sentiments for me, as I do for him. I hope he will deliver you my Patent, or a good Account of it. So, my dear Child, since that Association, I made it my Business, where-ever I was, to promote the King's Interest, and to gain and engage faithful Subjects to serve him; so that I have done more against this Government than would hang fifty Lords, and forfeit fifty Estates. I have therefore nothing for it now, but to promote every Thing that is for my dear Prince's Honour and Interest: And nothing made me ever speak as much as a fair Word to Lord Loudoun, or the President, but to endeavour to save my Person from Prison, since I was not able to go to the Field, and fight for my King; but, since that is over, and that I have no Safety from Prison, but by being in Hills and Woods, and inaccessible Places, my greatest Desire under the Sun is, that you should make a good and handsome Figure in the Prince's Army; which I wish, and am as anxious to see done as yourself, and would do as much for it as I would do to save my Life, or keep myself from Prison, which would be soon Death for me: And, as Loudoun told me the Day before I made my Escape, That he had as much to say against me as would hang all the Frasers of my Clan, I have no Reason to hedge or dissemble with any Man of the Government: So you may assure yourself, that I will put all Irons in the Fire to send you South, all the Men thats engaged with you, and as many more as I can get.

You

You are quite mistaken, my dear Child, when you think, that your coming North would not engage them to go South. I am sure it would do much more than my Orders; for the Tenth Man would not go this Day at my Desire, that would go first when you began this Work: However, I will be working at them all I can.

I am making up, with all the Haste possible, a Habitation for myself in the House of Maily; for that Country is the strongest Hold in Scotland; for I will make too good Men defend it against all Forces that King George can have in Scotland. Besides, I ordered a Boat to be made, to carry me out and in to the Isle of Maily, when I please; so that it is morally impracticable to attack me in that Country, where I am resolved to go, if possible, next Week, if my Accommodation be finished. I keep Ferris till I go out of the Country; for if he went away just now, when the People of the Aird, are going South, and Simon, with some Men, out of this Country, I would be hunted like a Fox by Loudoun up and down the Country, which perhaps would cost me my Life by Cold and Fatigue; so that I am resolved to stay at my dear Gortuleg's House, which I reckon my Home as much as if I was at Castle-Dunry, till my Accommodation is made up at Glinfraser.

I shall send you my fine Pistols and Furniture, after I cause put them up in a new Portmantua; for it would be a Pity to spoil them; for they will be few so good in the Army. I wonder that you are so long without writing to me; for you may be sure that it's a Comfort for me to hear often from you; and when I am a Week without hearing, in the Situation that you are in now, you may believe that I must be very uneasy. Therefore, my dear Simon, for Christ's Sake, don't be a Week without writing to me; and let me know how all Matters goes with you, and what Situation the Prince's Army is in, and write encouraging News, that may be shewn to your People.

I shall long much for the Return of this Express; and I ever am, with great Affection,

My dearest Simon,

January 14th, 1746.

Your dutyfull Father.

P. S. I send you enclosed the Four Letters that you should have carry'd with you from Castle-Dunry, which, I hope, you will have Occasion to deliver out of your own Hand. You may tell the P. when you deliver the Letter to him out of your own Hand, That your Father thought it the greatest Misfortune of his Life, that his Sickness and Infirmitys deprived him of the Honour of attending his Royal Highness where-ever he went; and that his only Comfort now is, that he is capable to give his R. H. such a Mark of his Zeal as to send you, and his Kindred, to venture your Lives for him; and that he himself is every Day exposed to be made a Prisoner, and be sent to London, to have his Head struck off; since it can be easily proven against him, that he has done more against the Government than any one of his Rank in Brittain; and hopes, that since, by God's Help, he has made what may be called a miraculous Escape out of the Hands of his cruel Enemy, he will yet expose his Person, with his Sword in his Hand, to serve his R. H. and to do his Duty before his Eyes. You will make your Court and mine to Mr. Murray, as much as you can; he is a very pretty honest Fellow; and, I am very sure, would be ready to serve us. And tell young Locheil, and John Roy, That I expect that they will make my Court, and yours, to his R. H. in every Shape; and that they both know the entire Trust and Confidence I put in them.

I hope your Captain-Leivt. is come home by this Time; and it was very right to send him; for he is certainly one of the prettiest Fellows of your Clan: Give my Service to him, and tell him, That I beg of him to remember all that I spoke to him about my Patent; and when you talk seriously with him about it, I entreat that you both put all the Irons in Fire you can, to make the Thing succeed. I ask nothing of his Royal Highness, but to give his Countenance, and own publicly what his Father has done for me; which if he refuse, I must keep to the Oath that I gave before the Duke of Perth, the Earl of Traquair, Locheil, and other Gentlemen, that first engaged in the present Project with me, that I would never draw my Sword till that was done. And I cannot suppose or imagin, that his R. H. will make the least Scruple about it, since it is for his own Honour and Interest, as well as for that of my Family. I beg over and over again, my dear Child, to let me hear more often from you: I give you my affectionate Blessing; I pray God, and his Angels, that you may be preserved in Life and Health till you come to my Age. Adieu, my dearest Simon!

I need not tell you who the Bearer is; he is a very honest pretty Fellow; the natural Head of the MacTavish's. One of the Deserters goes in Company with the Bearer, and the rest of them will be up with you in a Day or two, in Company with John Dunche's Son, and John Thomas Gortmore's Son: They came all to me here, and were insinuating Complaints against their Officers; but I would not hear them, as the settling the Matters of your Regiment is your Province, not mine: But I promised them, that you would use them well; and that they would meet not only with all Manner of Justice, but with Clemency, as this was the first Fault: So I hope they won't fare the worse that I recommend them to you. I beg you may dispatch the Bearer, and send a Man with him here.

To the Honble the Master of Lovat, commanding a Regiment of Frasers, at Perth, or Stirling.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, It will now be necessary, that we should give your Lordships an Account of the Son's Letter, and likewise of his Hand-writing; and therefore beg Leave to ask the Witnests, Whether he was acquainted with the Hand-writing of the Master of Lovat?

R. Fraser. Yes, I have seen him write frequently.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing, as you believe, or recollect?

R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you seen him write?—R. Fras. Yes.

Lord High Steward. Have you often seen him write?—R. Fras. Yes.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We shall now beg Leave to call a Witnests to prove where this Letter was found.

Captain Robert Duff called into Court.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Has your Lordship any Objection to Captain Duff being sworn as a Witnests?

Lord Lovat. No, none at all.

Captain Duff sworn.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to ask this Witnests, Whether he was present on board the Furnace, when my Lord Lovat's Strong Box was opened?

Captain Duff. Yes, I was present.

The Letter was produced to the Witnests.

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Paper, and acquaint my Lords, if that Paper was taken out of my Lord Lovat's Strong Box at that Time, Look it all over, and be positive, if you can.

Captain Duff looks over the Letter.

Captain Duff. I saw this Letter taken out of Lord Lovat's Strong Box.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter taken out in the Presence of the Lord Lovat?—Captain Duff. Yes, it was.

Sir W. Yonge. Did my Lord Lovat say any thing about that Letter at that Time? Or did any body else say any thing about it?

Captain Duff. I spoke to my Lord Lovat then, and told him, That I believed that Letter was not designed to fall into my Hands.

Sir W. Yonge. Did Lord Lovat make any Answer to you?

Captain Duff. My Lord Lovat made no Answer that I can remember.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, One Witnests is enough to prove this Fact; but Campbell has also told your Lordships, That he took this Letter out of the Box.

Then the Letter, No. IX. was delivered in at the Table, and read by the Clerk, as follows:

No. IX.

This Letter is directed, To the Right Honble Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat.

My Dr. Papa,

Strathbuck.

I received this Day the Pleasure of your Lop's Letter of the 1st. I'm very glad you have no Complaints of your Health, notwithstanding the Fatigue you have of late undergone in your Escape from Inverness, which gave every body here great Joy. The Reason of my not writing your Lop by the Express I sent last was, that I did not know but you might be on Terms with Lord Loudoun and the President, after making your Escape.

I'm as sorry at my bad Success with the Commanders here, as your Lop can be; but there is no Help for it; Nor were they altogether to blame, as the Prince's sudden Return to Scotland made it dangerous for them to take any Step of Consequence, without his particular Orders; and these they had in a very few Days after I came to Perth; and the Orders were, That they should all march directly to Sterling. This, your Lop sees, put it out of their Power to march Northward: But as I saw your Lop's Safety, and the King's Interest, required an Expedition to the North, I left no Stone unturned to bring it about: I therefore immediately upon hearing of the Prince's being at Glasgow, dispatched my Captain-Lieutenant (who was of great Use in arguing this Matter to the People at Perth) to Glasgow, to negotiate the Affair there. He is not as yet returned; but I make no doubt, how soon the Affair at Sterling is ended, but a proper Body of Troops . . . ordered to clear the North, and sooner the Art . . . cannot bring it about.

As to your Lop's Conduct in the mean time, if I might give an Advice, it would be, not to lose on both Sides: I am far from meaning by this, that you should come to Perth; so far from it, that provided your Lop could make Conditions for your own Person and Estate, with Lord Loudoun, and the President, I should be content with a thin Regiment; but, in case they have neither Authority or Inclination to give this, I humbly think you should immediately come to a Resolution, and put it in Execution: For, if your Lop's Clan do not all immediately join the Prince, the Cause will soon be found out. I would not much care if your Lop's Person and Estate were preserv'd by their Stay; but it will be hard, if it does not better your Condition with the Government, when it must evidently make it worse with the Prince.—I'm sorry for the Opinion your Lop has of the Two Charles's: I really think you wrong them; but, tho' they had all the Inclination in the World, your Lop knows, you always accus'd me of not being very subject to Advice. As to what Dr. Archib. Grant writes of Inverlachie, I have all the Reason in the World to believe it is a very great Falshood, and I'm surpriz'd your Lop should give any notice to it. As to my going to Sterling, if it was the People at Perth that were to command in that Expedition, your Lop . . . right, and I would be quite a Conver . . . your Argument; but the Prince's positive Orders to us all, his coming there himself to command us, and venture his Person with us, in my Opinion, quite alters the Case.—As to my going North, I know your Lop's Influence over your Clan too well, to think, that, where your Orders fail, my Presence will have any Weight. I'm certain your Commands, tho' only intimate by your Officers, will do in a Day more than my Presence would in a Week; and, I'm persuad'd that your People will come up to a Man, if you order them; and, if you do not, that they will stay at home; so that their coming, or not, entirely depends on your Lop. Besides, my going North at this time . . . u'd look a little odd, when the Prince is so Scotland, has sent us his positive Orders, let us know, that he himself is to come and command us in Person, that I should, at such a critical Time, run home, would look ill; and the Pretext (as it would be called) of r . . . ing Men, wou'd not screen me from an Imputation your Lop, I'm sure, would alwise wish me to shun. These Reasons, I dare say, convince your Lop, that my going North is not only unnecessary, but very improper, at this time.

All your Lops Fr . . . ds here join me in wishing, that your Lop may live for many Years to serve your King and Country. (a) . . . great Affection,

Your Lo^ds

Dutifull . . .

FRASER.

Then the Lord Sandys moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the House was adjourned accordingly: And then the Lords and others returned in the same Order as before.

The House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Trial of Simon Lord Lovat on Monday next, in Westminster-Hall, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon: And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Spicer and Mr. Edwards, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Monday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Monday the 16th of March, 1746:

The FIFTH DAY.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on Monday last, into Westminster-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

The Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: And went accordingly.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You may proceed in your Evidence.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We beg Leave to call Robert Frazer again.

Robert Frazer called into Court.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, He has been already sworn; and [Shewing the Witness a Letter] look upon that Letter; and acquaint their Lordships of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Fras. It is mine; it was wrote by me.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you write it?

R. Fras. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it dictated by my Lord Lovat?

R. Fras. Every Word of it.

Sir W. Yonge. Is it signed?

R. Fras. It is not signed.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you send that Letter to any body?

R. Fras. Yes; it was sent from Gortuleg to the Master of Lovat, at Inverness.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you send that Letter?

R. Fras. By my Lord Lovat's Order.

Then the Letter, No. XI. was delivered in; and read by the Clerk at the Table, as follows.

No. XI.

My dearest Child,

Gortuleg came home last night, with Inveraloch's Brother, and the Two Sandys, Fairfild's Son, and mine: And I am glad to know, that you are in perfect Health; which, you may be sure, I wish the Continuance of. I am sure, for all Sandy's Reluctancy to come to this Country, he will be better pleased with it than any where else; for he has his Comrade, Gortuleg's Son, to travell up and down with him; and I shall not desire him stay an Hour in the House but when he pleases.

My Cousin Mr. William Frazer tells me, That the Prince sent Notice to Sir Alexander Benneman, by Sir John M'Donnell, that he would go some of these Days, and view my Country of the Aird, and fish Salmon upon my River of Beaully: I do not much covet that great Honour at this time, as my House is quite out of Order, and that I am not at home myself, nor you: However, if the Prince takes the Fancy to go, you must offer to go along with him, and offer him a Glass of Wine, and any cold Meat you can get there. I shall send Sandy Dean over immediately, if you think that the Prince is to go: So I have ordered the glyd Post to be here precisely this night.

Mr. William Frazer says, That Sir Alexander Benneman will not give his Answer to Sir John M'Donnell, till he return, about the Prince's going to Beaufort; and that cannot be before Saturday Morning. So I beg, my dearest Child, you may consider seriously of this, not to let us be affronted; for, after Sir Alexander, and other Gentlemen, were entertain'd at your House, if the Prince should go, and meet with no Reception, it will be an Affront, and a Stain upon you and me while we breath: So, my dearest Child, don't neglect this; for it is truly of greater Consequence to our Honour than you can imagine, tho' in itself it's but a Maggot: But, I fancy, since Cumberland is coming so near, that those Fancys will be out of his Head. However, I beg you may not neglect to acquaint me (if it was by an Express) when you are rightly informed, that the Prince is going there. I have been extremely bad these Four Days past with a Fever and a Cough; but, I thank God, I am better since Yesterday Afternoon. I shall be glad to see you here, if you think it proper, for as short or as long a Time as you please. All in this Family offer you their Compliments: And I ever am, more than I can express, March 20th.

My dearest Child,

1746.

Your most affected and dutifull Father.

P. S. The Prince's Reason for going to my House is, to see a Salmon kill'd with the Rod, which he never saw before; and if proposes that Fancy, he must not be disappointed. I long to hear from you, by the glyd Post, some time this Night. I beg, my dear Child, you may send me any News you have from the East, and from the North, and from the South.

Lord Halifax. My Lords, I should be sorry to ask any Questions that might interrupt the Managers of the House of Commons in their Proceedings. I should likewise be sorry, that any Questions should be asked by me that should, in any degree, preclude the noble Lord at the Bar from any Defence he should think proper to make: But, my Lords, as the Answer, in Consequence of my Question, will thoroughly establish, or else greatly diminish the Credit which your Lordships may give to this Evidence; therefore I think it my Duty to ask, Whether, after the Writing of this Letter, my Lord Lovat did himself read the Letter, and approve of it? And I look upon it, this would be a necessary Question to ask, in regard to all the other Letters which have been, or shall be, produced.

R. Fras. I never did write a Letter from my Lord Lovat, but I first made a Scrawl, or a Draught of it; and whenever it was transcribed upon clean Paper, it was always read to my Lord Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Repeat what you said just now aloud.

R. Fras. I first made a Scrawl or Draught of all the Letters that I wrote for his Lordship, and afterwards transcribed them upon gilt Paper, and then read them every Word to his Lordship: Sometimes my Lord read them himself, and sometimes I read them to him.

L. H. S. Upon your Oath, when you read any Letter to my Lord Lovat, after it had been written over fair, did you read it truly as it was written, Word for Word?

R. Fras. Yes, Word for Word.

Sir William Yonge produced another Letter to the Witness, and asked,

Sir W. Yonge. Look upon that Letter, and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is.

R. Fras. It was written by my own Hand.

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, We have done with this Witness for the present.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, would you now ask this Witness any farther Questions?

Lord Lovat. No; I hope to convince these Gentlemen, that no Footman should give Credit to his Evidence.

[Then the Witness withdrew.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We beg that Mr. John Murray of Broughton, may be called in again.

Mr. Murray called into Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, he has been already sworn: We pray, my Lords, that this Witness may be shewn the Letter, No. III. that was read to your Lordships before, and that was proved to have been written by my Lord Lovat to Mr. Murray.

The Letter, No. III. was shewn to the Witness.

Mr. Attorney General. Do you remember ever to have seen that Letter before?

J. Murray. I am sorry to say, that I received this Letter at Inverness, in the End of February, or Beginning of March, by the Hands of Mr. Frazer of Gortuleg.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Murray says, He is sorry to have received it; but I desire to ask him, if he did in Fact receive it?

J. Mur. I did receive it, at Inverness.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We pray, that the Letter written by the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat, may be shewn to Mr. Murray. The Use which we shall make of it; we shall explain to your Lordships by-and-bye.

The Letter, No. VI. was accordingly shewn to Mr. Murray.

Mr. Attorney Gen. Of whose Hand-writing is the Name at the Bottom of that Letter?

J. Murray. The whole Letter is written by the Pretender's Son himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. The whole Letter?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Both the Body and the Subscription?

J. Mur. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it directed to any body?

J. Mur. For the Lord Lovat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Direction also of the same Hand-writing?

J. Mur. The same Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know if that Letter was ever sent?

J. Mur. This Letter was delivered, together with the other Letters, to Hugh Frazer, at Glasgow.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whom was it delivered to him?

J. Mur. By me, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it, or was it not, sent and delivered by the Direction of the Young Pretender?

J. Mur. It was by his Direction.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it delivered to Hugh Frazer for?

J. Mur. It was delivered to him, to forward to my Lord Lovat.

Lord High Steward. Have you ever seen the Pretender's eldest Son write?

J. Mur. Very often.

L. H. S. Upon that Knowledge you have of his Hand-writing, do you, upon your Oath, believe that Letter to be of his Hand-writing?

J. Murray. Yes; I was present in the Room when he wrote it.

Then the Witness was shewn another Letter by Sir William Yonge, No. VII.

Sir William Yonge. Who was that Letter wrote by?

J. Murray. This Letter was wrote by Cameron of Lochiel.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order was it wrote?

J. Murray. It was wrote by the Direction of the Young Pretender himself.

Sir W. Yonge. Was that Letter signed? and by whom?

J. Murray. The Letter was signed by Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and by myself.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom was that Letter directed? Or, is there any Direction or Address to it?

J. Murray. No; there is none.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom was it intended to be sent?

J. Murray. To my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Was it, or was it not, delivered to any body to be sent to my Lord?

J. Murray. Yes; it was delivered to Hugh Fraser.

Sir W. Yonge. At the same Time with the Letter from the Pretender's Son?

J. Murray. Yes; at the same Time, and in the same Packet.

Sir J. Strange. What is the Reason why it was not addressed?

J. Murray. The Reason why it was not addressed was, that Hugh Fraser asked, If there was a Patent granted by the Pretender to create my Lord Lovat a Duke. To which Lochiel answered, That, if there was any such Patent, it was in the Hands of his Father John Cameron, who was then at Dunblain; and therefore that Packet was not addressed, because it was not then known, whether there was such a Patent, or no: And it was left without any Direction, till Hugh Fraser should inquire, whether there was any Patent of Duke, or not.

Sir J. Strange. Are you acquainted with Cameron of Lochiel's Hand-writing, or not?

J. Murray. Perfectly well.

Sir J. Strange. Was you present when that Letter was written, or no?

J. Murray. There was none present but Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and I.

Sir J. Strange. Did you see them sign that Letter?

J. Murray. Yes; I did.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, I mentioned to your Lordships, That I would explain the Use intended to be made of these Two Letters. Your Lordships have observed, That, among the several Species of Treason charged by the Articles upon the Prisoner at the Bar, one of them is, His corresponding with the Pretender's Son, and likewise with Persons employed by him. My Lords, in order to shew a Correspondence between the Prisoner and the Pretender's Son, and the Persons named in that Letter, we have shewn in Evidence, That the Prisoner at the Bar had an Interview with Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and Mr. Murray; which is one Kind of Correspondence: And, my Lords, it is material to shew, that those Persons, with whom the noble Lord at the Bar thus corresponded, were Persons employed by the Pretender's Son, it being, by an Act of the 17th of his present Majesty, made expressly High-Treason to correspond with any Persons employed by the Pretender's Son. My Lords, the First Letter now mentioned is a Letter wrote by the Pretender's Son to my Lord Lovat; in which, your Lordships will find, he refers to another Letter, which is the Second Letter produced to your Lordships, as a Letter written by his Order, and containing his Sense. Your Lordships have heard from Mr. Murray, that the First Letter was written by the Pretender's Son, and that the Second was written by his Order; and that proves expressly, that the Persons by whom they were written, were Persons employed by the Pretender; and consequently, any Persons corresponding with them were guilty of High-Treason within the Meaning of the Act: We therefore pray, That the Letters may be read. We do not offer them as Letters received by my Lord Lovat, but as Letters written by Persons employed by the Pretender's Son. The First is proved to be written by the Pretender's Son himself, and the Second by his Direction.

Then the Letter, dated the Second of January 1746, signed Charles P. R. was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table; as was also the other Letter of the same Date, from Cameron of Lochiel, Mac Pherson of Clunie, and Mr. Murray: Which said Letters are as follow:

No. VI.

Glasgow, Jan. y^e 2d, 1746.

I Have just now read a Letter written to you by Lochiel, Clunie, and Murray; and you may depend on its containing my true Sentiments, as much as if it was all writ with my own Hand. I shall only add to it, that you cannot do me either more Pleasure, or more Service, than by coming to join me out of hand; and then you need doubt as little as I do of our being perfectly satisfied with one another

For the Lord Lovat.

Charles, P. R.

No. VII.

My dear Lord,

YOU need not be surpris'd, from the Situation we have been in for some time past, that we have faln out of the Way of writing; notwithstanding of which, our particular Love and Affection for your Lordship, and Family, as well as our sincere Attachment to our King and Countrey, seems to render it absolutely necessary to give your Lordship the Trouble of this Letter.

We are no Strangers to the great Pain and Trouble your Lordship had taken to persuade MacLeod and Sir Alexander to act that Part, which was so consistent with their Honour and Interest, and, if we may venture to say so, the very Being of their Familys; for your Lordship well knows, that, upon the falling or standing of the severall Highland Familys now engaged in this Affair, theirs equally depends: For, did we fail in our Attempt, and the Conqueror prove either so weak or wicked, as to endeavour the Extirpation of our Familys (which perhaps wou'd not prove so easy as they imagine), these Two Gentlemen wou'd probably be taken (upon some false Pretext) into the general Corps of Disaffected, with a View to make a clean Stage of the Whole: Or allowing, that, from the scandalous Activity of one, and shamefull Indolence of the other, they were spared; yet their distant and small Influence, in proportion to the Body of the Clans, wou'd necessarily render them insignificant to any Party, that might, from unforeseen Causes, afterwards appear.

Your Lordship's firm and steady Behaviour, in spite of all the under-hand Dealings, as well as open Threats, of the Lord Loudon, and your Neighbour the President (who has rendered himself a Scandall to all Scotsmen, and a Nauseance to all Society), together with the early, noble and generous Appearance of the Master of Lovat in the Cause of his King and Countrey, has not only gain'd your Lordship the Admiration of this Island, but has settled the Affection and Friendship of the Prince for your Family upon a more firm and solide Foundation, than we dare venture to say, it was ever on with any of the Royall Family of Stewart, notwithstanding your Lordship's many heavy Sufferings in that Cause: And this my Lord we don't assure you from ourselves alone, but by his Royall Highness speciall and repeated Orders.

Now, my Lord, allow us to congratulate you upon your happy Escape from Inverness. Had it been any other, we could not possibly have given Credite to it, from the Circumstances of the Story; but knowing with what Address Lord Lovat has so often extricate himself from Difficulties, unfurmoutable by the rest of Mankind, we cou'd not allow ourselves to form the leaste Doubt of the Truth of it, and are now only in Pain to think of the Fatigue you must have undergone, and the Danger your Health must have run, in so sudden a Change of your usuall Way of Liveing.

The glorious Retreat his Royall Highness made from within Four-score Miles of London, upon Intelligence of the French being landed in Scotland, having an Enemy within 20 Miles in Front, and Mr. Wade within 3 Days March of Lancaster in his Rear, plainly shews what a great and enterprising Mind is able to perform. The Unactivity of the Enemy in not harrassing the Royall Army, when so much in their Power, with the feeble and weak Attack they made upon our Rear near to Perth, where they were most severely handled, makes it evident how easy a Game we wou'd have, did Scotsmen act with that Unanimity and Vigour, that made their Ancestors so famous over all Europe. From the present Situation of the Prince's Army on this Syde of Forth, who are all in the highest Spirits, the Numbers in the North already in Arms, the Victory Lord Louis Gordon has obtain'd over MacLeod and his Adherents, the landing of a Body of French Troops, with a fine Train of Artillery, the Kings of France and Spain declaring the Prince their Ally, and taking him under their speciall Protection, the French Ambassador having taken on his publick Character; and, in fine, an absolute Promise from the Court of France of a Descent of 15,000 Men in England, as by Letters received Eight-and-Forty Hours agoe from his Royall Highness the Duke of Albany and York, and from Cardinal Tencin, makes itt plain, that it now depends on us alone to restore the Royall Family to the Throne of their Ancestors, the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and Scotland to that Honour and Independency your Lordship has so long and ardently wish'd for; which last Article we are absolutely sure of, as Scotland, in the worst of Events, must be ours.

And now, my Lord, the only proper Means that appears to us, in common with all the Prince's Wellwishers, to bring this to the wished-for Issue, is your Lordship's openly appearing in Arms, and joining the Royall Standard; in which Case, we are certain, that there is not a Man beyond the Forth, however timorous or cautious (except some few who have already destined themselves to Perdition), but will appear with the greatest Alacrity and Cheerfullness. But, not to take up too much of your Lordship's Time, what his Royall Highness above all Things wishes and desires is, to have your Lordship with him to take upon you the Command of the Army; for tho' the Prince knows, that your Lordship's Age makes it impossible for you to undergo the Drudgery Part of a General, yett he is sensible, that your Advice and Council will be of greater Value, than the Addition of several Thousand Men. Tho' your Lordship has your own Equpage, yett we are apt to believe, the Prince's Coach and Six (of which he himself makes no Use) will be as convenient a Voyture for your Lordship; and the French Ambassador, with Lord Pitt-Rivers, who has been in itt all along, won't prove disagreeable Company.

In short, it is impossible for us to give the hundred Part of the Reasons, that makes us so sensible of the absolute Necessity of having your Lordship about the Prince's Person, which you will be fully satisfy'd of at Meeting.

This Moment Hugh Fraser is come here, and has given the Prince a Detail of your Lordship's Situation, and that of the Country, with the Proposall your Lordship sent to the Army at Perth; of which he approves exceedingly, and will To-morrow send Orders, by Express, to Lord John Drummond to meett him att Bannockburn, Saturday first, there to concert in what Shape it shall be putt in Execution, and to move 4 or 6 Piece of Cannon towards Blair-Castle without Delay: But of this your Lordship is most earnestly entreated not to mention one Word to any body, leaste the making it publick should procure the Escape of some Folks, who may otherwise be catch'd napping; and your Lordship is begg'd to cutt off all Intelligence from that Quarter.

We shall now only beg, that your Lordship give no Ear to any of the Storys spread in the North, as the Gazettes have not contained one Word of Truth in relation to us since we left Edinr; and do us the Justice to believe, that we are, with most sincere Regard, Attachment, and Esteem, wishing you many happy and prosperous new Years,

My dear Lord,

Glasgow, Janr. 2d, 1746. Your Lordship's most obedient, most faithfull, and most sincerely affectionate humble Servant...

The Signature of this Letter was torn off.

Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We have done with Mr. Murray.
 Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would you ask any Questions of Mr. Murray?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I did ask your Lordships before, if I might have Liberty to cross-examine the Witnesses brought against me; and your Lordship told me, I might have an Opportunity of doing it, when I came to make my Defence.

L. H. S. Your Lordship misunderstood me: I did not say, that you would have an Opportunity of cross-examining any of the Witnesses produced against you, when you came to make your Defence; but that you was at Liberty, when the Witnesses were produced, to ask them such Questions as you should think proper; and that, when you came to your Defence, you might make such Observations upon their Evidence as you should think fit: But if your Lordship has a Mind to call any of those Witnesses in your Defence, which have been produced against you, I do not doubt but the Managers of the House of Commons will take care that they shall attend.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, if the Noble Lord at the Bar will give notice over Night of any of our Witnesses, that he thinks necessary to call in his Defence, we will take care that they shall be in the Way.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, Would you now ask any Question of Mr. Murray?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I shall say nothing till I come to make my Defence, and then I shall hope to have an Opportunity to say what is just against these Witnesses.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We now beg Leave to call Robert Frazer again.

Robert Frazer called into Court again.

Sir W. Yonge [showing the Witness a Letter, No. XXI.] asked, Look upon that Letter, and tell my Lords of whose Hand-writing it is?

R. Frazer. It is mine.

Sir W. Yonge. By whose Order did you write it?

R. Frazer. By my Lord Lovat's.

Sir W. Yonge. Did he dictate it to you?

R. Frazer. Every Word.

Sir W. Yonge. Who is the Letter signed by?

R. Frazer. By my Lord Lovat.

Sir W. Yonge. Did you see him sign it?

R. Frazer. Yes.

Sir W. Yonge. To whom did he order it to be sent?

R. Frazer. To the Duke of Cumberland.

L. H. S. Was that Letter read over by my Lord Lovat, or was it read over by you to him, before it was sent?

R. Frazer. It was read over both by my Lord Lovat, and by me to him.

Then a Letter, signed Lovat, without any Date, was delivered in, and read by the Clerk at the Table, and is as follows:

No. XXI.

S I R,
 THIS Letter is most humbly address'd to your Royal Highness, by the very unfortunate Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat.

I durst not presume to solicit or petition your Royal Highness for any Favour, if it was not very well known to the best People in this Country, attached to the Government, such as Lord President, &c. and by those that frequented the Court at that Time, that I did more essential Service to your Royal Family, in suppressing the great Rebellion in the Year 1715, with the Hazard of my Life, and the Loss of my only Brother, than any of my own Rank in Scotland: For which I had three Letters of Thanks from my Royal Master, by the Hands of the Earl of Stanhope, then Secretary of State; in which his Majesty strongly promises to give me such Marks of his Favour, as would oblige all the Country to be faithful to him thereafter. Indeed the gracious King was as good as his Word to me; for as soon as I arrived at Court, and was introduced to the King by the late Duke of Argyll, I became, by Degrees, to be as great a Favourite as was about Court, of a Scotsman: And I often carried your Royal Highness in my Arms, in the Parks of Kensington and Hampton-Court, to hold you up to your Royal Grandfather, that he might embrace you; for he was then very fond of you, and of the young Princes.

Now, Sir, all I have to say in my present Circumstances is, That if your Royal Highness will be pleased to extend your Goodness towards me, in the generous and compassionate Manner, in my present deplorable Situation, if I have the Honour to kiss your Royal Highness Hands, I would easily demonstrate to you, that I can do more Service to the King and Government, than the Destroying a hundred such old and very infirm Men, like me, past Seventy (without the least Use of my Legs or Knees) can be of Advantage in any Shape to the Government.

Your Royal Father, our present Sovereign, was very kind to me. In the Year 1715, I presented on my Knee to his Majestie a Petⁿ, in favours of the Laird of M^r Intosh, to obtain a Noli Prosequi for him, which he most graciously granted, and he gave it to Charles Cathcart, then Groom of his Bed-Chamber, and ordered him to deliver it into my Hands, that I might give it to the Laird of M^r Intosh. This was but one Testimony of severall Marks of Goodness his Majesty was pleased to bestow on me while the King was at Hanover: So I hope I shall feel, that the same compassionate Blood runs in your Royal Highness Veins.

Major-General Campbell told me, That he had the Honour to acquaint your Royal Highness, that he was sending me to Fort William; and that he begg'd of your Royal Highness to order a Litter to be made for me, to carry me to Fort Augustus, as I am in such a Condition, that I am not able to stand, walk, or ride. I am, with the utmost Submission, and most profound Respect,

S I R,
 Your Royal Highness most obedient,
 And most faithfull humble Servant,
 LOVAT.

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, We have done with this Witness.
 Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Would your Lordship ask him any Questions?

Lord Lovat. No.

[Then the Witness, by the Direction of the Lord High Steward, withdrew.]

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, have you any other Witnesses to produce?

Sir W. Yonge. No, my Lords, we have no more Witnesses to produce.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,
 THE Commons have now gone through all the Evidence they propose to lay before your Lordships, in Support of their Impeachment; and as that has unavoidably run this Cause into a great Length of Examination, they think it may not be improper to have the Whole that relates to the impeached Lord collected together, and presented to your Lordships View, in as concise a Manner as the great Variety of Circumstances that have attended this Case, will admit of.

This Province is assigned to me.

And we choose to enter upon it now, at the Close of our Evidence, as the most fair and candid Way of Proceeding, with regard to the impeached Lord; For—should the Commons reserve the summing up, and observing upon their Evidence, to make a Part of the Reply (as they might do), the Noble Lord at the Bar (his Defence being then closed) might perhaps be under some Disadvantage; whereas, in this Way of Proceeding, if any Mistake shall be committed in Stating of the Evidence, or any Observations made upon it that the Case will not bear, an Opportunity is hereby given to the Party accused, to set it right.

My Lords, The Articles that have been read to your Lordships, contain Four distinct Charges of High-Treason.

The First is, "The Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King."

The Second is, "The Levying War against the King in his Realm."

The Third is, "Corresponding with the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown."

And the Fourth is, "Corresponding with the Pretender's Son, and others employed by him, knowing them to be so employed."

The Two first of these are declared to be Treason, by the express Words of the Statute of 25th Edward III.

The Third is made Treason, by the 13th & 14th William III, cap. 3. the Words of which extend to the corresponding with the Pretender, by Letters, Messages, or otherwise.

The Fourth Species of Treason is against the Statute of 17th George II. cap. 39. which makes it Treason to correspond with the Pretender's Son, or others employed by him, knowing them to be so employed.

As I have no Imagination that any Doubt can arise, whether, when the Matters of Fact are proved to your Lordships Satisfaction, the Case will not come within the Provisions of these Laws, I shall forbear entering into any Argument upon them; and shall only say, That, although the Articles have charged the First Sort of Treason, in the precise Words of the Statute of 25 E. III. which are, "Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King," yet the Law does not require Evidence of actually accomplishing so horrid a Crime; for that sacred Life is so guarded, that the bare going about, or contriving so flagitious a Scheme, is sufficient to constitute this great Offence, provided those Purposes are manifested by Overt Acts.

And that, although Levying of War is a distinct Branch of High-Treason, yet it is also an Overt Act of the former Species, "That of Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King."

My Lords, in stating this Evidence to your Lordships, I can no way do it so intelligibly, as by following the Example of the learned Manager who opened the Nature of the Case, and divided it into Three distinct Periods of Time.

The First Period contains the Behaviour of the impeached Lord, before the Landing of the Pretender's Son in Scotland, in the Month of July 1745.

The Second Period includes the Facts proved to have been committed by the Noble Lord at the Bar, from the Time of the Pretender's Son's Landing, to the Battle of Culloden.

And the Third Period relates to what happened afterwards, to the Time of my Lord Lovat's being sent up, and committed to the Tower.

As to the First Period of Time, your Lordships are pleased to observe, that our Evidence goes so far back as the Year 1719.

And, my Lords, we chose to take it up there, because, in the Noble Lord's Answer, he values himself much upon "Having given, in the Year 1715, the strongest Proofs of his Zeal for, and Attachment to his late Majesty, and the Succession of the Crown in his illustrious Family, against such as had undertaken the Destruction of both: And now laments his Misfortune, to have his Fidelity questioned, at the End of his Days, when near worn out with Age and Infirmities; and to be charged with intending the Subversion of a Government he had, in the Strength and Vigour of his Age, exerted his utmost Power and Address to support."

My Lords, I have faithfully rehearsed the Words of this Answer, which I think made it necessary for the Commons to shew, That the Noble Lord's engaging in the late Rebellion, was not the Effect of Dotage, or through the Constraint, or by the Imposition of others; but proceeded from a long and deep-rooted Principle of Disaffection to the Protestant Succession, and of Attachment to the Cause of the Pretender.

To begin then, at the Year 1719:

Mr. Chevis, a near Neighbour of the impeached Lord, has sworn, That the Noble Lord told him, that, in the Year 1719, when an Invasion was attempted by Spain upon Scotland, and Lord Seaforth was raising his Men in favour of the Pretender, he (Lord Lovat) wrote a Letter to Lord Seaforth, to acquaint him, That Lord Lovat would join him with his Clan: That this Letter was delivered to Lord Seaforth, after it had been first shewn shewn to one Chisholm of Knockford. This Chisholm, it appears, informed the late Duke of Arbuthnot of the Contents of the Letter; and his Grace sent up Notice of it to the Government. This came to my Lord Lovat's Ears, who was greatly alarmed at it; but your Lordships find he had soon the Dexterity to get up his Letter, upon Terms he had an Opportunity of making with Lady Seaforth: After which he shewed it in Confidence to a trusty Friend of his, who declared it to be a treasonable Letter; and as such, it was thrown into the Fire.

My Lords, I cannot help observing to your Lordships, that it appears from this Transaction, that the noble Lord was then contriving to commit Treason, and yet screen himself from Punishment; for he declared, he had not signed the Letter; and therefore, if it had been forthcoming, it could not be fixed upon him.

In the Year 1737, your Lordships find him sending a Message, by Roy Stuart, to the Pretender at Rome, to assure him of his Fidelity, and to hasten his Patent that had been promised him for a Dukedom.

It has likewise appeared in Evidence, That he afterwards sent another Message of the same Nature by Drummond.

In the Year 1739, he appears to have proposed an Invasion to Drummond of Bothalie, in favour of the Pretender, his lawful Sovereign (as he called him); and in whose Cause he then declared he was determined to live and die.—An Expression your Lordships cannot but have observed occurs also in his Letters.

And the same Proposal Mr. Chevis has proved was afterwards made by my Lord Lovat to Lochiel and Cluny M'Pherson.

My Lords, I pass over the poetical Performance between Roy Stuart and the Noble Lord, and go on to the Year 1746. About this time it was he declared to Mr. Chevis, that he had signed and sealed an Association of the Highland Chiefs, in favour of the Pretender; and which Lord Lovat declared was sent over to Cardinal Fleury.

My Lords, This material Part of our Evidence is so far confirmed, that Mr. Murray (the Pretender's Son's Secretary) has proved his hearing of it at Paris; and that it was also mentioned to him, at a private Audience he had of the Pretender's eldest Son, in France.

He has likewise proved what passed between M. Amelet and him, upon the Foot of such an Association; and the Assurances given by that Court, of Encouragement and Support.

But, above all, your Lordships have heard it confirmed by a Passage, in a Letter of the noble Lord's to his Son, that was read at the Table; wherein he tells him, "That, above Seven years ago, he was one of those that entered into a formal Association, to venture their Lives and Fortunes to restore the Pretender (by him called King) and his Offspring; which Engagement (he says) was signed with their Hands and Seals, and sent to France to Cardinal de Fleury, then First Minister at that Court; and was by him shewn to the King his Master, who promised them his Assistance, and Succours, to restore their King."

"Since which (says he) I have made it my Business to promote the King's Interest, and to gain and engage faithful Subjects to serve him."

And, in his Letter to the Pretender's Son, he appeals to all who have come into that Country, who (he says) will do him the Justice to declare, "That he has always been the most zealous and most active Partizan they had in the North of Scotland; and in that, he owns, he did but his Duty." This he repeats, in his Letter to Lochiel; and boasts himself to be "the Person who kept Life and Spirits in the Pretender's Affairs, more than any Man in the North."

In the Year 1742, your Lordships find him declaring he had got a Commission to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and a Patent of Duke from the Pretender; and which he said he had merited by his Services to that Family.

This Declaration is proved by Mr. Chevis. The Talk of it, and seeing a Copy in a Desk, supposed to be signed by the Pretender, is proved by Robert Frazer. And Hugh Frazer says, my Lord Lovat shewed it him.

Mr. Murray told your Lordships, he found my Lord Lovat expected the original Patent had been brought over; but Mr. Murray not being certain, that such a Patent had ever passed, he sent his Letters to Lord Lovat, without an Address, but inclosed in a Packet, with other Papers: And this, he has told your Lordships To-day, was done for fear of committing a Mistake, either by directing them to his Grace, or only to Lord Lovat.

This Affair of the Commission and Patent is also confirmed by a Passage in the Letter to his Son, that I appealed to before; wherein he tells him, "That, in Proof of the Sense his own King had of his Loyalty and Zeal, he had sent him such a Commission and Patent, besides a Number of Letters under his own Hand; the Original of which Patent, he tells his Son, was in Drummond's Hands; but he, Lord Lovat, had an authentic Copy of it, signed and countersigned by his King."

"These Favours (he adds) had more than ever attached him to that Interest; and he should be a Monster of Ingratitude if they had not." And, in the Postscript, he charges his Son to inquire for the Patent; adding, That "he asked nothing of his Royal Highness (as he calls the Pretender's Son) but to give his Countenance, and own publicly what his Father had done for him."

Your Lordships have likewise heard it proved, that, during all this time, the whole Turn of his Conversation was in favour of the Pretender.

He declared he had made an Alliance, by the Marriage of his Daughter, which added to his Strength, and would enable him to humble his Neighbours.

The Healths drank at his Table have been mentioned by the Witnesses, particularly that execrable one proposed by himself, of Confusion to the White Horse, and all their Generation.

The next Thing your Lordships heard of, were his Encomiums on the Pretender, whose Countenance he said proclaimed him, to all Beholders, the rightful King.

There are likewise in Proof, his Exultations on the Taking of Ostend, as laying open all the Coast of Flanders, and exposing us to an Invasion in the Compass of one Night, from the French, who, he declared, would carry all before them. And this we rely upon as a Circumstance of great Malignity, when it is considered what Numbers of our Troops were then abroad, in the Cause of Liberty and Europe, and what a Situation our Power at home was in at that time.

Your Lordships have likewise heard his Declarations about the Reformation and the Revolution, and of the noble Lord's Scheme to get rid of both; which was to bring in the Pretender.

And as to Religion, his Declaration to Mr. Chrois was, That he believed there was no true Religion in the World but one; and that was the Church of Rome.

A very extraordinary Declaration this, to be made by one, who, by having had an Independent Company in the King's Service, and upon other Accounts, must have seemed (at least) to have been of a different Opinion.

Thus circumstanced, my Lords, and this Temper of Mind, was Lord Lovat in, at the Breaking out of the Rebellion, in the Summer of 1745: Which is the Second Period of our Evidence.

And this Part of our Evidence, your Lordships will be pleased to remember, began with the early Notice it appeared my Lord Lovat had of the Pretender's Son's being landed in Scotland.

Upon the News of this, my Lords, he prepares immediately to support him.

His Son, a Youth of about Nineteen Years old, either newly come home, or sent for from the University on purpose, is appointed to head the Clan.

The Design of sending him to travel is laid aside.

A Proposal made by those who were willing to have kept the Son out of Rebellion, is (upon Consideration) rejected by Lord Lovat, who, at the same time, declared, that his first Intention was to have headed the Clan himself; but that now his Son should go, since others had disappointed him, who he expected would have joined Forces with him.

And, in Consequence of this, Orders are proved to have been given by my Lord Lovat for all Military Preparations.

My Lords, this Proposal for the Son's travelling is proved by Hugh Frazer, to have been made to, and rejected by the noble Lord; who also, in his Letter to Murray, makes use of these Words: "I have sent (says he) my eldest Son, the Hopes of my Family, and the Darling of my Life, a Youth about Nineteen Years old, who was just going abroad for his Studies and Education; I have sent him (says he), instead of this, to venture the last Drop of his Blood in the glorious Prince's Service."

Hugh Frazer has also proved his being charged with a verbal Message to the Pretender's Son to the same Effect; and his being sent back by Murray, with a Letter to Lord Lovat.

He has also proved, That, when he delivered the Letter, and told my Lord Lovat the true State of the Pretender's Affairs, which, he said, were not very inviting, after so many regular Forces were come from Flanders, which the Rebels would not be able to encounter, my Lord's Declaration upon that Occasion was, that "he had gone too far to go back;" and, for fear this News should dishearten his Son, he ordered Frazer not to say a Word of it to him.

Before or about this time likewise, it was, that he received the Pretender's Manifesto.

He orders his Son to read it aloud to the Company.

And when Mr. Chevis (who never went near him afterwards) was offering some Objection to it, my Lord Lovat told him, That he talked Treason; or it was Treason in him to object to the reading the Manifesto.

Soon after this, your Lordships may recollect, it has appeared, that great Preparations were made for supporting the Cause of the Pretender. Arms,—Colours,—Tents,—Powder, and Ball, are prepared, and laid in by Lord Lovat's Order.

His Arms and Crest are painted, supervised, and approved by himself. So eager is he, that his Son is upbraided for his Backwardness, and the Retainers of the Family are spoke to, to hasten him.

He thunders out his Anathemas against a Gentleman, who, he thinks, had disappointed him, which if he had not done, he says, in his Letter to Lochiel, "he had so managed that Part of the North, that above 6000 Men had marched South to the Prince's Assistance; which he (Lord Lovat) thought would much encourage his (the Pretender's) Son's own loyal Party, and fright the English to his Obedience."

At this time likewise it was, that he wrote those Letters to the Pretender's Son, and his Secretary, which were so audibly and distinctly read to your Lordships; that they stand in no need of a Repetition to make their Impression.

In the next place, your Lordships find him magnifying the Skirmish at Presston-Pans into a Victory not to be paralleled in History; which, I may venture to say, was certainly calculated by my Lord for the Encouragement of his People.

When the late Earl of Cromartie's Men marched South, and passed by Castle-Downey, your Lordships observe him repining that they should be first ready, and what a Shame it was they should pass by his Nose.

He entertains the late Earl of Cromartie, and his Officers, then in Arms for the Pretender, and declaring, in my Lord's Hearing, they were going to assist the Pretender's Son.

And this (as it came out upon a noble Duke's Question) was in a friendly, hospitable Manner, and not as a Person quartered on by Compulsion.

All this while his Men are gathering together.

There are Two Rendezvous of the Clan, and 700 Frasers drawn up within half a Mile of his House.

He offers (as it has been proved) Commissions to several Persons; Declares his Son was to be their Colonel:

Threats and Promises are made use of by him; and the Firy Cross is carried about:

The distinguishing Mark of the Rebels, the White Cockade, is worn by the Officers in his Presence;

He drinks to their Success; and, in his Letter to the Pretender's Son, begs of GOD to preserve him, and give him Success and Glory in all his Enterprizes."

He advises those he is sending forth not to let the Pretender's Son hazard his Person, by going into Engagements: He prophesies Victory and Success to him.

Let us all be thankful, that his Prophecies were not fulfilled! All this while your Lordships find him balancing between Hopes and Fears:

He gives Orders, and contradicts them, either as our own Forces arrive, or there comes Assistance to the Rebels from France;

Insomuch that his Son is at last forced, with Tears in his Eyes, to beg, "He may no longer be made a Fool or a Tool of;" but may then have such Orders as the Father will stand by.

And then it was he directed the Clan to march; and said, "Those were the Orders he would stand to."

And, to prove they marched by his Direction, I appeal to his Letter to the Pretender's Son; wherein he says, "I have sent with my Son all the principal Gentlemen, and Heads of Families of my Clan, with 800 of my common People." And the Words of his Letter to Mr. Murray are, "I have sent my Son." He also tells his Son, in the Letter that has been read, that "he will put all Irons in the Fire to send him Men: I will be working at them (says he) all I can."

His Friends and Dependents, however, were in doubt what to make of him, and whether it would be safe for them to exert themselves, or not, suspecting (and not without Cause), that he was keeping open a Back-door for himself; and therefore it was they also thought it necessary to call upon him to dissemble no longer, but to take off the Mask; which he performed before them, by pulling off his Hat, and laying it at his Feet, telling them "There it is then."

And, in the Letter addressed to him from the Pretender's Son, your Lordships must have observed a Jealousy he had of him; for he is there pressed to come and join him in Person; "and then (says the Letter-Writer) you need doubt as little as I do of our being perfectly satisfied with one another."

In the Course of our Evidence, my Lords, it has appeared, That he was taken Prisoner by Lord Loudon, as fomenting the Rebellion; and his escaping afterwards has been proved.

He corresponds with his Son and Lochiel, when in Arms for, and employed by, the Pretender, knowing they were so employed; which is one of the Overt Acts of Treason laid in the Impeachment.

And what is the Game he is all the while playing against his Son? From first to last it is an Endeavour to avoid being fixed himself, and to throw it all upon his Son; that Son, whom he had, in a manner, forced into the Rebellion.

This appears by Robert Fraser's Evidence relating to a Draught of a Letter to the Lord President, charging the young Man with Obstinacy, and forcing out the Clan against the Father's Inclination, or Power to controul him: Which when the Master had discovered, by accidentally going into the Secretary's Room, and insinuating to see the Draught, which the Father had ordered he should not, he declares (in great Repentment of such Usage from his Father,) "That he would go himself to the Pretendent, and put the Saddle upon the right Horse. Good God! (says the Master) how can he use me so!"

And the Disposition of the Son is further proved by the Circumstance of pulling the white Cockade out of his Hat, in the Father's Presence, and throwing it into the Fire.

And this likewise was confirmed by the Evidence of Hugh Fraser, who has told your Lordships, That, both from the publick and private Discourse and Behaviour of the Master, he is satisfied he was better disposed, than to have gone, of his own Accord, into the Rebellion.

To this I may add what fell from Chevis on his Cross-Examination; who, when he was asked by the noble Lord about a Plot to hang the Old One, and save the Son, declared to your Lordships, he never heard of any other than directly the Reverse.

A Behaviour this from a Father to a Son, which I the less wonder at in the noble Lord, when I consider he was at the same time forgetting that natural Allegiance, which he owed to the FATHER OF HIS PEOPLE.

There is one Circumstance more upon this Head, which is, that, when he began to find his Majesty's Forces were likely to be an Overmatch for the Rebels, he privately sent out Hugh Fraser to find what Terms he could get from Lord Loudon and the President; and what might probably be the Consequence to himself, if his Clan continued in Arms.

And this, my Lords, brings me to the glorious Action at Culloden;

A Battle which, the noble Lord declared, was rashly entered upon;

Contrary to his Opinion; which was, That the Rebels should have retired to the Mountains, where, he thought, the Duke's Horse could not follow them, and where they might easily have subsisted themselves till they had received a Reinforcement of Troops and Money.

Upon this Occasion, he pointed out the Distress such a Conduct must have brought upon the King's Troops, and upon that great Commander, who, under the wise Precautions of his Majesty, and by the good Providence of Almighty GOD, has proved to be the Deliverer of his Country.

Surely, my Lords, there is no Need for me to dwell any longer on that Period of Time, which includes the Rebellion.

The Third and last Period is what happened afterwards:

And this, my Lords, consists of a great Number of Particulars, which have been proved at your Lordships Bar.

The First thing your Lordships have heard of is, his personal Conference with the Pretender's Son on the Night of the Battle of Culloden.

The Excuses made by the noble Lord to that Person, for not coming himself to join him, on account of his Age and Infirmities, have appeared in Evidence, and are to the same Effect with those which have been read out of his Letters.

They are proved to have been, to outward Appearance, satisfactory to the Person, to whom these Excuses were made; and your Lordships find the Parting between them was with mutual Embraces.

VOL. IX.

The next thing your Lordships have heard of, in the Course of our Evidence, is the Flight of the noble Lord, in order to avoid being taken by the King's Troops.

To this End, he retires into a Part of the Country, where, he imagined, it would be impossible for them to find him out, or harraß him.

In such a Place it is he had that Meeting with the Rebel Chiefs; on which Occasion his Behaviour is very remarkable.

For it has appeared, that, at that Consultation, he continued to be what, at other Times, he boasted to have been, the Life and Spirit of the Party.

Who so forward to reassemble their scattered Forces as he?

It was he that declared they had no need to be afraid; for he did not doubt but Eight or Ten thousand Highlanders might yet be raised to defend themselves, either to get Terms from the Duke, or fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops; which was the Expression he made use of.

In consequence of this, it was then agreed to raise Men; and a Paper is drawn up for that Purpose. The noble Lord indeed avoided signing it himself, by desiring Lochiel to vouch for his Son the Master's Proportion: But it is very observable, that when his Cunning suggested to him the Declaration, That he was a neutral Person, it presently forsook him, or else he had not accompanied it with another Declaration, that denoted his repining at his not having joined the Pretender's Son on his first Landing.

This Agreement to raise Men is immediately followed by a Distribution of French Money for that Purpose; which Money, to the Amount of 35,000 Livres, had been just received to support the Rebels.

The Money indeed, that was intended to raise the Frasers with, was not paid into the noble Lord's own Hands; but (the Master being absent) it was delivered to a Servant that attended upon the noble Lord, and Part of it was by himself, soon after, sent to his Son; which brings it home to my Lord Lovat as his own Act: It shews him privy to the Design for which it was advanced (which was treasonable); and his own Hand is in the Transaction.

As this Money has appeared to have been sent over to support the Rebellion, and those who joined in it, the noble Lord thought he had a Right to a Share of it; and therefore sends to Murray for some of it, which he demanded, and received, for Twenty Days Pay of a Guard to attend his own Person, and defend him against the King's Troops, who were in Search of Rebels at that Time.

And when, soon after, his Son came to desire he might be permitted to surrender himself to the Duke, he calls him a Person of a mean Spirit, and advises him against it; that Son who would have been contented with a thin Regiment, so the Father had been safe.

When taken, his Guilt immediately suggested to him, and he declares openly, That he expected to lose his Head: He comforted himself, however, that his Estate was so settled, that it would be preserved to his Family.

Your Lordships have likewise heard the Circumstances that attended the Search of his Strong Box: When Papers were found in it, he declares in a jocular Way, that they would find no Treason in them: He continues in this Strain whilst many private and immaterial Papers were reading; but, when the Letter from his Son (which has been read in Evidence) appeared, and he is asked, Whether that came within his Description, or was designed to be found there, he changes his Note, is surprised at its being found there, and agrees it was not in a proper Place.

After all this, I need only barely mention the Offers he made to merit his Life by Discoveries, and appeal to the Letter written by him to the Duke of Cumberland, just now read at the Table.—Those must have proceeded from a Consciousness, that he had forfeited his Life before.

How the noble Lord will be able to reconcile all his softening Insinuations in his Letter to the Duke with what he before said to Lochiel, wherein he declares, "He is resolved to live and die in his King and Royal Prince's Service; and that no Death the Government can invent can lessen his Zeal, or fright him from his Duty"—This I must leave to his Lordship; for, I own, it is past my Skill.

My Lords, I am very ready to acknowledge, that, in the Course of our Evidence, one of the Witnesses has said, That, by what he could observe, the noble Lord did not seem to be averse to his present Majesty; but his Repentment, he said, was against the Ministry, that had taken away his Company.

But how far that is agreeable to his Actions, Healths, and Declarations, that he was ready to join Kouli Kan, if he had come over, your Lordships will consider.

And, as to his Objection to Mr. Murray's Evidence, as remaining an attainted Person, I will only say (that it may appear in this Tryal when it comes abroad into the World), That although Sir Thomas Armstrong suffered upon the Notion, that a compulsory taking within the Year was not strictly a Surrender; yet, in the Second Year of his present Majesty's Reign, in the Case of one Roger Johnson, who had been outlawed for Treason, and was taken within the Year allowed by the Statute, the then Attorney General, like a true Friend to the Liberty of the Subject, disdained to insist upon Armstrong's Case; and the Court of King's Bench held it was immaterial, whether he came before them on a voluntary Surrender, or a Compulsory Caption, so long as it appeared the Man was there, and amenable to Justice within the Time: And, in Consequence of this, the Man had his Trial, and was acquitted.

To apply this to our Witness, I need only observe, That it has appeared in Evidence, that his Time was not out till 12th July 1746, and he was committed Prisoner by the Lord Justice Clerk Fourteen Days before, and has ever since remained in Custody, amenable to the Law. The Precedent, therefore, I have cited, is directly in the Point, and founded in the Justice and Equity of the Case; for a Man, who has a fixed Time given him to come in, ought not to be prejudiced by being taken up before.

Some Questions, my Lords, have been asked our Witnesses upon their Cross-Examinations, and some Objections thrown out about Expectations of Mercy, which I do not see it is necessary to take Notice of at this Time: If they are relied upon by the noble Lord, in his Defence, the Reply will be the most proper Time to answer them; and to that I shall leave it.

All that now remains for me to do, in Discharge of the Commands I have been honoured with by the Commons, would be to take particular Notice of the Letters that have been read, and the Strength they communicate to the Evidence of the Witnesses.

But, as I have attempted something of this Nature as I went along, and they are also fresh in your Lordships Memory, it does not seem necessary to be making a separate Head of them.

In Gratitude therefore to your Lordships, who have thus honoured me with your Attention, I forbear to descant any farther upon these Letters; and if, in this, I shall be thought by those who sent me hither, to have been remiss in my Duty to them (to whom I own myself accountable), I shall humbly implore their Forgiveness for any Omissions I may have been guilty of in this Service.

This only I will say, upon the Letters, that whatever bodily Infirmities the noble Lord may labour under, yet whoever reads or hears those Letters, and considers the Strength and Energy of the Expressions, dictated by himself, must agree with him in what he intimated to Sir Everard Fawkener, That the Faculties of his Mind were yet intire.

I have now done, my Lords, with stating the Evidence that has been given in Proof of the High-Treason charged in the Impeachment; and I should abuse your Lordships Patience, if (after this) I should attempt to apply it particularly to the several Statutes I took Notice of in the Outset.

Surely, my Lords, I may venture to say, that these Facts (if not answered by the noble Lord) must, in your Lordships Judgment, amount to a full Proof of all the High-Treason with which he is charged; and will abundantly justify me in alluding to that Expression contained in the noble Lord's own Letter to his Son, wherein he boasts "to have done more against this Government than would hang Fifty Lords, and forfeit Fifty Estates."

Thus, my Lords, have the Commons maintained their Impeachment, and supported it (as they think) with a Weight of Evidence suitable to the Dignity of their Interposition.

They think they have sufficiently shewn your Lordships, that this unfortunate Lord was not fit to be trusted to bring his Clan about again, Et versare dolos, as he offered to do. On the contrary, they think it appears, that they have properly singled him out, and brought him to this Bar, on their own Prosecution, here to receive your Lordships Judgment for the other Part of the Alternative pointed out by himself.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, have you any thing farther to offer in Support of your Impeachment?

Sir William Yonge. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have closed what they have to offer by way of Evidence, and in Support of the Charge against you; and now is the Time for you to make your Defence, by making such Observations as you shall think fit, upon the Evidence which has been given against you, and upon what they have offered, by way of Argument, to enforce it. Your Lordship may likewise open your own Evidence, which you have to offer, and call your Witnesses, and pursue your own Method, as you shall think fit; provided it be agreeable to Law, and the Course of Proceeding in such Cases.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have already told your Lordships several Times since I came here, that I was very weak and feeble, and really afflicted with a Distemper that made me almost incapable to appear here, if it had not been to shew my Obedience and Respect to your Lordships: And I now humbly beg, that since you are so good as to indulge me to say something for myself, that you will give me Four or Five Days, at least, to recover my Health a little, and to prepare my Evidence. And, my Lords, I have another Thing humbly to propose to your Lordships: There is an Evidence, a very material Evidence for me who is a Member of the House of Commons: I would humbly beg that your Lordships would be pleased to take such Methods as you shall think proper, to make him appear at the Bar, and give his Evidence, which is but Two or Three Words, whatever Day your Lordships please.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, as to what you have mentioned, First, in asking for Four or Five Days, to make your Defence, and prepare your Evidence, that is an Interruption of a Trial I have not known; but it is in the Judgment of the Lords what Time they will be pleased to give you. As to what your Lordship hath said, in regard to a Member of the House of Commons being a material Evidence for you, you must be advised by your Counsel (who are to advise you as to Matters of Law, and the proper Methods of Application) in what Manner you are to make Application for that Purpose.

Lord Lovat. My Lord, I will take your Lordship's Advice, and will do so; but it will be impossible for me to appear before you, except I am better in Health.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, have you any thing to offer, in relation to what my Lord Lovat has now said?

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, Nothing, but to submit it to your Lordships, when you will be pleased to proceed. My Lords, the Time that the Prisoner at the Bar has desired is very extraordinary, and will be very inconvenient: But, my Lords, a reasonable Time the Commons will have no Objection to.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am at your Lordships Disposal; I am a Prisoner here, and submit entirely to your Lordships Determination, be it what it will.

The Lord President moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the House was adjourned accordingly. And then the Lords, and others, returned in the same Order as before.

And the House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament, Ordered, That a Message be sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Mountague, to acquaint them, That the Lord Lovat having requested, that Normand M^r Leod, Esquire, a Member of their House, might be examined as a Witness at his Trial, the Lords do desire, that they will give Leave to the said Normand M^r Leod to be so examined at the said Trial: And that their Lordships will proceed further thereupon, in Westminster-Hall, on Wednesday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Wednesday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Wednesday, the 18th Day of March, 1746.

The SIXTH DAY.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on the First Day, into Westminster-Hall, where the Commons and their Managers were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before. And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

L. H. S. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes I Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordship may rise.

The Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: And went accordingly.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, your Lordship may now proceed to make your Defence.

The Prisoner then acquainted their Lordships with his great Age and Infirmities, which rendered him, as he alledged, incapable of speaking what he had to offer; and that therefore he had put into Writing what he had conceived, and was advised to say on this Occasion; and which he desired their Lordships would be pleased to permit their Clerk to read at the Bar: And their Lordships permitting it, the same was read by the Clerk, as follows; viz.

My Lords,

IN my unhappy Situation, it is with the highest Pleasure and Gratitude, that I return my Acknowledgements to your Lordships, for the Indulgence you have shewn me, during the Course of my long Tryal: And had I, my Lords, met with any Degree of Justice from those who have appeared as Witnesses against me, it would have been unnecessary for me to have troubled your Lordships with any thing in my own Defence; but as there can be no Security against the Oaths of Persons who are swayed by Malice, or interested by the Hopes of Life, and Fears of Punishment, it becomes necessary for me to trouble your Lordships with a few Observations: First, As arising from the particular Circumstances of my Case; and, Secondly, Upon the Nature of the Evidence that has been produced against me, and the Degree of Credibility which such Sort of Evidence deserves. With respect to the First, my Lords, upon being served with a Copy of the Articles of Impeachment, I immediately applied to your Lordships for an Order to bring up those Witnesses, whom I thought necessary for my Defence: And, considering the complicated Nature of the Treasons charged upon me, and the great Period of Time they were intended to comprehend, it cannot surprise your Lordships, that my List contained Sixty, or thereabouts. But, to my very great Misfortune, uncommon Methods have been used against me, to prevent their Attendance: The ordinary Judges have been divested of their Offices, and obliged to appoint others, who were recommended by the King's Officers to officiate for them: Nay, the ordinary Seats of Justice have been, in my particular Case, forsaken, and new Courts erected, to which Numbers have been forced under the severest Menaces, to attend as Witnesses against me; whilst all whom those new Judges and Rulers, upon their Inquisition, found might be serviceable to me in my Defence, have been overawed and intimidated; so that they durst not attend my Tryal. These, my Lords, are Facts as notorious in themselves, as unprecedented in these Kingdoms; and Facts which I can instantly prove, to your Lordships Satisfaction, partly by Affidavits now in my Hands, and partly by Witnesses of undoubted Credit, who have been brought Five hundred Miles from the Highlands of Scotland, with a View to be examined against me; and who, it is probable, have been laid aside, lest what I now take the Liberty to affirm to your Lordships, should, upon their Examinations, have been made to appear.

My Lords, By these and such-like Methods, have my Witnesses been terrified from appearing; at least, so very few have had the Resolution to venture, that they scarcely deserve to be named, and cannot be material for my Defence, without the Assistance of the others. I am therefore under the hard Necessity to forget yet a little longer the Inconveniencies of a close and tedious Imprisonment, and to stifle that Desire of Liberty which is so natural to me, for some longer time, till, by your Lordships effectual Interposition, I can command the Attendance of my Witnesses; and, of Consequence, justify my Innocence: For, if your Lordships consider, that my very Words and Actions have been made the Subject of a critical Examination, from the Year 1719, my Case must appear extremely hard, and necessarily require a very circumstantial Proof, by Examination of those Persons with whom I have had any Intercourse, from that Period till now: But, if your Lordships should instantly oblige me to proceed upon my Defence, unprepared as I am, I must submit. Locked up a Prisoner in the Tower, I cannot make your Lordships Order effectual against the several Persons in the List I gave in to this Honourable House; and to proceed to Tryal, whilst I am under these Circumstances, has the Appearance of so much Hardship, that I flatter myself it will move your Lordships effectually to interpose, and order some proper Method, by which my Witnesses can be forced to attend; and not suffer a Peer of the Realm to be destroyed, because he cannot work impossibilities, or oblige me, like the Israelites of old, to make Brick without Straw. I must therefore humbly move, and insist with your Lordships, not to introduce a Precedent in my Case, which may be attended with the worst of Consequences to any Lord who shall hereafter be brought to your Lordships Bar. And, indeed, my Lords, I say this not altogether out of a Regard to myself: I am now Four-score Years of Age, have suffered many Changes, and, thank my God, have no unbecoming Fear for any Thing I can yet suffer: I know, by the quick Advances and Frailties of old Age, that, in the Course of Nature, I am hastening to my End; and, by the Favour of the Almighty, I have been long preparing for that great and solemn Change: But this, my Lords, may produce a Precedent that shall prove fatal to many of younger Years. And, surely, your Lordships must be convinced I have the greater Reason to insist on this Demand, upon considering what I propose to lay before your Lordships, in the Second Place, namely, a few Observations upon the Nature of the Evidence, and the Credit that those Witnesses deserve who have sworn against me.

In general, your Lordships have undoubtedly perceived the high Improbability that runs through the whole of Chevis's Oath: He, my Lords, takes upon him to swear to Conversations as far back as the Year 1719; and mentions as if I was then engaged in Plots against his late Majesty, at the very Time many of your Lordships know, and that it is notorious, I was highly in his Favour. It might, my Lords, carry the Air of Vanity for me to mention to your Lordships the many particular Services I was thought to have done his Majesty in the Year 1715: But allow me, my Lords, to say, they were Services of such a Nature, as made his Majesty think me entitled to very distinguishing Marks of his Favour, as will appear by several Letters, which, by his Majesty's Orders, I had the Honour to receive from the late Lord Stanhope, my great and very worthy Friend: So that, my Lords, Chevis's Accounts are even more than improbable; besides, that the minute and particular Manner in which he swears to Circumstances that have happened so long ago, must render his Testimony too suspicious to be believed. And allow me to observe a very remarkable Circumstance, That he has carefully avoided to name any one Man who was present at any one of those Conversations, and could possibly have been brought to confront him, lest the same Providence which detected the Elder, in the Case of Sufanna, might have detected Chevis. A farther Circumstance your Lordships will also allow me to observe, That it is not to be supposed, that I, or any Man of Common Sense, should have talked so often, and so freely, upon a Subject of that delicate Nature, to a Person, who, if your Lordships can possibly believe himself, was always so openly and zealously affected to the present Establishment. But can your Lordships yet conceive any good Opinion of a Person who voluntarily offers himself as an Evidence to little trifling Conversations, which the only Opportunity he had of hearing was his eating at my Table, when he must have starved at his own, and perished for Cold, unless my Money had furnished him with Cloaths? In Evidence of this, I was, till very lately, possessed of many of his accepted Notes, for greater Sums than I am afraid he is yet able to pay, I having prevailed with a Friend to let me have Money upon them, to supply my present Wants; and I should be sorry if he shall suffer by his Friendship to me.

The next Three Evidences, who have appeared at your Lordships Bar against me, are these infamous Fellows, who call themselves Secretaries; the one, and on this Occasion I name Murray, the most abandoned of Mankind, who, forgetting his Allegiance to his King and Country, has, according to his own Confession, endeavoured to destroy both, like another Catiline, to patch up a broken Fortune upon the Ruin and Distress of his native Country; To-day stealing into France to enter into Engagements upon, your Lordships may believe, the most sacred Oaths of Fidelity; soon after, like a sanguinary Monster, putting his Hand and Seal to a bloody Proclamation, full of Rewards for the apprehending the sacred Person of his Majesty; and, lest the Cup of his Iniquity had not been filled, to turn up all in one, impudently appears at your Lordships Bar, to betray those very Secrets, which he confessed he had drawn from the Person he called his Lord, his Prince, and Master, under the strongest Confidence. Your Lordships will perceive, I have yet forbore to mention the other Circumstances of his having received, since the Battle of Culloden, 35,000 Livres, which he yet expects to live and riot on; but, my Lords, who can consider the Price of Blood and Treachery, and not bestow that Sort of Pity, which Murray, the greatest Criminal, the true Disciple of his Master Isariot, calls for? One Thing more, my Lords, I cannot omit; and that is, to take some Notice of the indecent and scandalous Liberty the Wretch has attempted to take, by aspersing a Number of very noble, worthy, and honourable Persons, of whose Innocence your Lordships were so fully persuaded, as to stop him in his Career, lest, like one of Samson's Foxes, he should destroy some of the worthiest Members of the Commonwealth. But if, after all that I have said, your Lordships can pay the most distant Regard to this Secretary's Evidence, it is hard to determine how many of his Majesty's other faithful Subjects may escape the licentious Liberty of his Impeachment; for let him once think, that, upon the Multiplicity of his Accusations, his worthless Life depends, and there is no Reason to apprehend any of the most faithful Subjects can boast of a long Security. I will not, my Lords, trouble your Lordships much upon the Objections, to which my Counsel have spoke against the Competence of this Witness; but, if a Desire of Life to so wicked a Person, who must be afraid to die, can be any Inducement to swear falsely, it is apprehended impossible any of your Lordships can give the least Degree of Credit to the Oath of the Villain Secretary Murray.

My Lords, the next Secretary I choose to trouble your Lordships with, is Robert Frazer, a Person who never had the good Fortune to be worth a Shilling, and whose Veracity and Truth never exceeded his Riches. He, my Lords, has taken upon him to swear to Letters wrote by himself, and many of them not pretended to have been signed by me: Others, my Lords, have neither Date or Direction; and no Sort of Proof has been attempted to be brought by the Managers, where, or in whose Custody, they were said to have been found. How weak an Evidence, therefore, this is to fix so heavy a Charge as High-Treason upon a Peer of this Realm, is humbly submitted. But, my Lords, this Witness has also, to go through the whole Drudgery of Swearing, framed a very improbable and awkward Tale to your Lordships, of his having found, in a Writing-desk in my House, a Copy of a pretended Patent, creating me Duke of Frazer, which, by-the-bye, the Managers have not offered to produce; and I must leave it with your Lordships, whether it is at all likely, that, if I had been possessed of such a Patent, I should have left it so carelessly loose; or that, if I had, this Witness should have been the only Person in my numerous Family to have seen it; for I am not now speaking of the Testimony of the other Witness Hugh Frazer. My Lords, is it, or can your Lordships think it possible I could have had the Copy, and not have had the Original? The one was quite as easily sent as the other; and your Lordships all know, that it is a mighty unusual Thing to send Copies of Patents, where Dignities are intended to be conferred. As to the other Part of Robert Frazer's Testimony, that relates to his writing for Arms, Powder, and Ball, I am persuaded it cannot make the least Impression upon your Lordships: First, Because he has not deposed to express Quantities; and, secondly, That it might have been so easy for the Managers to have brought a positive Proof, had the Fact been true, by the Persons from whom these Things were said to have been bought; or, at least, by those who carried them to my House, though indeed I can make no manner of Doubt, that had this Gentleman, Robert Frazer, thought it material, he would have gone a little farther, and sworn to that, as he is one of those honest Gentlemen, whose Mouth seldom opens, but for their Tongues to lye.

My Lords, I must next trouble your Lordships with Hugh Frazer, and again repeat a general Observation, That a Person, himself in the Rebellion, and who did, upon his Oath, declare at your Lordships Bar, That he would give no Evidence, except in Expectation of Life, cannot be reckoned an unsuspected Witness; for, according to the Value which he shall set upon his own Life, must his Evidence be less or more hurtful to me; since, my Lords, Life is the Purchase, and his giving Evidence the only Price. He says, That I shewed him a Copy of the Patent; and yet, long after this pretended Time of shewing, he, my Lords, was the very Person to whom Murray declared, he knew nothing of such a Patent. He was also the Person who received those treasonable Letters that have been read against me; and it is not pretended, that after this Interview with Murray at Glasgow, I ever saw him, or had any Intercourse with him, till I was brought to your Lordships Bar; nor is it laid to my Charge, that I ever received any of those Letters or Commissions, which Frazer is said to have brought from Glasgow. And here, my Lords, I must repeat the same Observation against Frazer of Dunballech, who was himself in the Rebellion; and therefore in like manner swearing away my Life to preserve his own.

Many other Particulars, my Lords, I purposely omit, reserving my Observations, till I shall have your Lordships Order to bring up my Witnesses; and then, my Lords, I shall be able to falsify those Particulars, and, indeed, the whole Substance of this heavy Charge against me.

I must, my Lords, beg your Lordships Pardon for taking up so much of your Time. I labour under so many Disadvantages from old Age, and the Decay of the Faculties of the Mind, that it is no Wonder I should make a bad Defence for myself, unassisted either by Counsel or Solicitor; and that so many great and eminent Persons, skilled in the Laws, and Masters of Ciceronian Eloquence, have appeared to manage the Prosecution against me. But I hope, in your Lordships Hands my old Life is safe; and that your Lordships, whose noble Blood is like so many Fountains, from whence issue Streams of Humanity, Justice, and Honour, will not, nay, cannot, find me guilty upon the Evidence of such Witnesses as have defiled your Bar, and have no other Method left to expiate their own Crimes, but by laying them upon me: For your Lordships must allow me to observe, that all the Witnesses, except Sir Everard Fawkenner, have both their Lives and Estates depending upon their giving such Evidence as may convict me: And even as to Sir Everard, he has Judgment enough to know, that, should I be acquitted, he would find it difficult to defend an Action at my Instance, for Reparation of uncommon Wrongs, and Acts of Violence, done by his Order upon my Estate, in cutting very valuable Woods, and appointing Receivers of my Rents; and consequently he has too great an Interest in my Conviction, to be considered or received by your Lordships as an unexceptionable Witness.

My Lords, to me, who am no Lawyer, it appears extremely strange and unreasonable, that Socii Criminis should be admitted Witnesses before they are pardoned; but if it is true, that the Law of England differs in this respect from the Law and Usage of all other Nations, I should be glad to know, how that Difference has been introduced.—I take it, my Lords, for granted, that it is not by the Force of any Statute; for, I am sure, the great Learning and Ingenuity of the Managers have omitted to mention none that concerns the Case of Treason; and, if it is by the Common Law, my Objection is entire, and can only be determined by your Lordships, as in this Case my Jury.

In some Sort of Felonies, my Lords, I remember to have often heard of Statutes which authorise a Proof of that Nature; but, in Treason, I never heard of one: And, indeed, the Necessity does by no means appear to me to be the same; for, Because the one is not so common as the other; and 2dly, Because there can be no Room to plead a Penury of Witnesses in Treason, which is laid to my Charge: whereas there may in Felonies. Another strong Consideration will naturally occur to your Lordships, that the Revenge or Malice of Power cannot operate in Felonies; but may in Treason.

If, my Lords, I should be told, It has been established by Custom, I must beg Leave to say, That, as it seems contrary to Justice and Reason to trust to the Evidence, which an Accomplice unpardoned is to give, it is incapable of being hallowed by Custom; since I am assured, that it is an established Rule, That, unless a Custom is reasonable, and according to Justice, it is void.

But allow me, my Lords, to ask, What Reason can be given, why these confessed Rebels have not been honoured with a Pardon previous to my Trial? If it is that the Government believe, in that Case, they would not swear the Truth, can the Wit of Man invent a stronger Argument why your Lordships, in equal Diffidence, should not believe them when they they have no Pardon; for, if they are such abandoned Villains (and, in Truth, my Lords, I believe them such) as to perjure themselves after a Pardon, when they can neither gain nor lose by the Evidence they are to give, surely your Lordships ought not to trust them, when their Lives depend upon giving such Evidence as may convict me, who have yet the Honour to be a Brother Peer.

One thing more, my Lords, and I have done; and that is, Should this Sort of Proof be once established, I may venture to say, that Dalton's would become greater Nuisances here than ever they were at Rome; and that all our noble and ancient Families will be, by degrees, cut off, upon Pretence of Jacobite or Republican Plots; since the History, my Lords, of all Ages shews, that Power can make Plots; and fatal Experience proves, that in every Age are Villains ready, like my Three Secretaries, to prove what Power shall hereafter dictate or expect.

Thus far I thought it my Duty, in Vindication of myself, to trouble your Lordships, and, without further trespassing upon your Patience, freely submit my Life, my Fortune, my Honours, and, what is dearest of all, my Posterity, to your Lordships.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, Do you think fit to call any Witnesses?

Lord Lovat. No, my Lords.

MR. SOLICITOR GENERAL.

My Lords,

THOUGH the noble Lord perseveres in denying the Charge, yet, as he has called no Witnesses, but rests his Defence altogether upon Complaints, Observations, and Objections to the Force and Credibility of the Evidence against him, if I was to follow my own Inclination and Judgment, I should think it unnecessary to say any thing upon a Matter already sufficiently understood.

But I am told by the Opinion of those, whose Opinion is to me a Law, That I shall not do my Duty, nor perform the Part assigned me, unless I close this solemn Trial, by calling back your Lordships Memory and Attention to the principal Grounds upon which we have proceeded; especially as they have now been objected to as insufficient, and complained of as setting an Example, which may be dangerous to Innocence hereafter.

The Gentlemen who manage this Prosecution have, in the Course of it, meant to do Justice to their Trust in such a manner, that the noble Lord at the Bar should feel the Weight of Truth, but not of his Accusers: And it is not to aggravate Guilt, or to press down the Load heavier upon him, that I am at this time commanded to speak; but to satisfy your Lordships now, and the World hereafter, from the Nature of the Evidence by which this Accusation has been supported, why no Part is attempted to be answered.

He has put your Lordships in mind, that the Law requires you, as his Judges, to be his Counsel; which is certainly true: And I am persuaded, Compassion, inseparable from noble Minds, has been ingenious to suggest to your Thoughts, Doubts and Objections, in favour of one standing in that Place, who certainly labours under some Infirmities, and is allowed to defend himself by no other Tongue than his own.

If Scruples have arisen in the Minds of any of your Lordships, they will gain Strength from that Consideration; and the honest Prejudice you must feel from his Want of Assistance, may be of more Advantage to him, than the ablest Assistance he could have had.

It is proper, therefore, it may even be necessary, to endeavour to set the Whole in such a View, as may tend to obviate every Possibility of Doubt.

There are but Two Things for your Lordships Consideration upon this Occasion:

First, Whether the Evidence given is a convincing and legal Proof of the Charge, if it be believed? And next, Whether there be any Reason to induce your Lordships not to believe it?

The only thing, in the Course of this Proceeding, which has not yet been done to satisfy your Lordships with regard to both these Points, is, to apply the particular Evidence that has been given to the principal Overt Acts laid in the Articles of Impeachment.

As this is the only thing which has not yet been done, it is the only thing which I shall attempt to do.

There are Three Kinds or Species of Treason, of which the noble Lord at the Bar stands accused by the Articles:

Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King:

Levying War against his Majesty within the Realm;

And Corresponding, contrary to a late Act of Parliament.

The Two first are Treasons, declared to be so by the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third.

Compassing or Imagining the Death of the King is an inward Thought, or Operation of the Mind; and therefore, as God alone can judge of Thoughts, because He alone can know them, so, for this Kind of Treason, no Man can be convicted, unless he does some open Act, which proves the secret Intention of his Mind. It is not necessary, that the open Act should have an immediate Tendency to take away the natural Life of the King; but any Design to subvert his Government, or to raise War against him, which may, in consequence, draw on his Death, has been long settled to be an Overt Act of this Species of Treason.

In High Treason, for greater Security, the Law requires a formal, as well as convincing Proof; and therefore no Man can be found guilty of High Treason, which is not proved by the Testimony of Two Witnesses. One, let his Credit be never so good, let him be supported by never so many Circumstances, is not sufficient.

But it is not necessary, that Two Witnesses should give Proof of the same Overt Acts: If they give Evidence in Proof of distinct Overt Acts, it is enough, provided they are Overt Acts of the same Species of Treason.

Having mentioned what legal Proof is required (for this was the Law before the 7th of King William, and is therefore applicable to the present Occasion), I will state the Overt Acts of each Species of Treason, whereof the noble Lord stands impeached; and apply the Evidence to them.

Of Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, the principal Overt Acts laid in the Articles are Three:

1st. That he conspired, with several of the King's Subjects, to induce a Foreign Power (the French) to invade this Kingdom.

2d. That he corresponded with the Pretender, in order to dethrone the King, and, with that View, solicited, and accepted, a Commission from him to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands; and also solicited and obtained from him a Patent creating him Duke, as a Reward of his engaging in that Design.

3d. That he conspired to raise War and Rebellion against his Majesty within this Realm.

That Conspiring with a Foreign Power to invade the Kingdom is an Overt Act of Compassing the Death of the King, cannot now be doubted.

As to the Proof:

Robert Chevis proves, That, in June 1739, he heard Lord Lovat propose to William Drummond of Bochaldie the Project of an Invasion;

That, in 1740, he heard him say, There was an Association; and drank Success to it.

Robert Frazer proves a Letter of the 14th of January, 1746, from the noble Lord to his Son, to have been dictated by him, afterwards read over to him, approved of, and sent; in which are these Words:

"I was one of those that entered into a formal Association to venture our Lives and Fortunes to restore the King, and his Offspring; and we signed our mutual Engagements for this Purpose with our Hands, and Seals, and sent it to France to the Cardinal de Fleury, then First Minister of France, by the Hands of Mr. William Drummond of Bochaldie. The Cardinal was so pleased with it, that he shewed our Engagements and Subscriptions to the King his Master, and begged of his Majesty to support us; and the King desired the Cardinal to assure us of his Protection and Assistance, and Succours to restore our King."

Here are Two Witnesses who give Evidence of that; which is direct Proof against the noble Lord of this Overt Act: But this direct Proof is strengthened by general Evidence.

John Murray of Broughton proves, That such an Association and Memorial was sent to the Court of France; and that William Drummond of Bochaldie was the Person who carried it; he names all who signed it; he was himself carried by this Drummond of Bochaldie to Monsieur Amelet, and introduced as coming from those, who signed, and sent the Association and Memorial: He was received by Monsieur Amelet upon that Foot: He had an Answer from the French King to carry to those from whom he came.

This general Evidence is again corroborated by that, which is positive Proof against the noble Lord.

In his Postscript to the Letter I mentioned before, he says, If his Patent of Duke was refused, he would keep to the Oath that he gave to the Gentlemen who first engaged in the Project with him, that he would never draw his Sword till that was done. He mentions Three of the Persons by Name who first engaged with him; so that the general Evidence is supported by this Postscript, as to some of those who signed the Association, and particularly as to Lord Lovat himself.

The Authenticity of this Letter and Postscript don't rest upon the positive Testimony of Robert Frazer only; but is supported by the Letter from my Lord's Son, to which this is an Answer, proved to be the Hand-writing of the Son, and to have been found in my Lord's Custody.

There are other Circumstances which give Credit to the Proof of his having entered into the Association, which was sent to France by William Drummond of Bochaldie.

In his Letter to Lochiel, he inquires after Mr. William Drummond, as the Man whom he loved, and who loved him best.

Robert Frazer says, Lord Lovat told him, That his Patent was in the Hands of one Drummond in France.

And, in his Letter of the 14th of January to his Son, he says, The Patent was sent by William Drummond, as a Reward of his having joined in the Association.

The Second Overt Act of this Species of Treason, which I mentioned, was, That he corresponded with the Pretender, in order to dethrone the King, and, with that View, solicited and accepted a Commission from him to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands; and also solicited and obtained from him a Patent creating him Duke, as a Reward of his engaging in that Design.

Tho' Corresponding with the Pretender be made Treason by Act of Parliament, yet Corresponding, in order to disturb the King's Government, is an Overt Act of Compassing the Death of the King; and so it is laid in the Articles.

As to the Proof of this Overt Act:

Robert Chevis heard him, in 1736, send a Message by Roy Stewart to the Pretender, with Assurances of his Fidelity, and that he would live and die in his Cause; and charged Roy Stewart to expedite the sending over his Commission of Lieutenant-General, and Patent of Duke.

This is corroborated by Charles Stewart, who met Roy Stewart in 1736 at Boulogne, and was told by him, That he was going to Rouen; and hoped for a Place under the Pretender, thro' Letters of Recommendation which he carried from Lord Lovat.

Robert Chevis was told by Lord Lovat in 1742, That he had got a Commission of Lieutenant-General, and obtained a Patent.

Robert Frazer saw at Gortuleg, among Lord Lovat's Papers, a Commission from the Pretender, appointing him Lieutenant-General. He saw the Copy of a Patent creating him Duke.

He was told by Lord Lovat, after his Escape from Lord Louden, That his Patent of Duke was in the Hands of one Drummond in France.

Hugh Frazer was told by Lord Lovat, That his Patent of Duke was in Lochiel's Hands; and, in November 1745, my Lord shewed him a Copy of the Patent.

In his Letter to John Murray of Broughton, he refers to his Cousin the Bearer (who was this Hugh Frazer) about a Suit he had to make.

John Murray of Broughton says, Gortuleg explained this to relate to the Patent.

In his Letter to his Son, speaking of the Pretender, he says,

"When he was acquainted with the Association, he gave Mr. Drummond a Commission to me of General of the Highlanders, which I have."

"Last of all, the King was so good as to give such a singular Mark of his Favour to me and my Family, that he created me Duke of Fraser, and sent me that Patent by William Drummond, of which I have a Copy."

The Original, he says, was left with old Lochiel.

In the Postscript to this Letter, he says,

"Tell your Captain-Lieutenant (Hugh Fraser) I beg of him to remember what I spoke to him about my Patent.—Put all Irons in the Fire.—I ask nothing of his Royal Highness, but to give his Countenance, and own publicly what his Father has done for me; which if he refuse, I must keep to the Oath, &c. never to draw my Sword till it was done."

This is corroborated by general Evidence given by Broughton, and Hugh Fraser: They talked at Glasgow about it: The Packet was not directed till Hugh Fraser should learn from old Lochiel, whether he had such a Patent.

Of this Overt Act there is direct positive Evidence, by the Testimony of Three Witnesses, Hugh Fraser, Robert Chevis, and Robert Fraser, supported by Two more, Charles Stewart, and John Murray of Broughton; and all the Circumstances, which confirm the Authenticity of the Letters.

The Third Overt Act, which I mentioned, of this Species of Treason, was,

That he conspired to raise War and Rebellion against his Majesty, within this Realm.

In his Letter to the Pretender's Son, he says,

"None of your Servants but will do me the Justice to declare, that I am, and always have been, the most zealous and active Partizan your Royal Highness has in the North of Scotland."

In his Letter to John Murray: "For many years past I was the Life and Spirit of the King's Affairs in these Countries," &c.

"I made it my only Business to encourage and keep up the Hearts of the King's Friends."

In his Letter to his Son, he says, "Since that Association, I made it my Business, wherever I was, to promote the King's Interest, and to gain and encourage faithful Subjects to serve him: So that I have done more against this Government than would hang Fifty Lords, and forfeit Fifty Estates."

In the Postscript, "It can be easily proved against him (your Father), that he has done more against the Government than any one of his Rank in Britain."

Hugh Fraser proves, That he said he thought of heading the Frasers himself, as he believed Four or Five thousand Men would have risen; but that was disappointed.

He sent a Message to the Young Pretender, by the Witnesses, That he had intended to have gone at the Head of Four or Five thousand Men, to support his Interest.

When the Witnesses gave him the true State on both Sides, he said he had gone too far to go back.

In his Letter to Lochiel, he says, He had so managed the North, that 6000 Men would have marched South to join the Pretender, had not the Design been frustrated.

Robert Fraser proves, That he made Excuses to Lochiel, Keppoch, and others, for not having joined them publicly: That he made Excuses, after the Battle, to the Young Pretender; and they both embraced.

This is strengthened by general Evidence given by John Murray of Broughton, that, when the Young Pretender landed, a Message was sent to Lord Lovat by Doctor Cameron, and Gortuleg came from him.

And also by general Evidence given by Robert Fraser, that, soon after the Pretender landed, one Cameron came to Lord Lovat, and Gortuleg went to the Young Pretender.

This is strengthened too by most of his Letters; which imply a previous Concert, and Assurances given: They are full of Apologies for his not acting up to that, which, he seems conscious, was expected from him.

His Wavering and Irresolution speak a Mind divided between former Engagements and present Fear.

At first, when he thought Four or Five thousand Men would be raised, he intended to have headed them himself: When that Scheme was disappointed, he neither would join the Rebels himself, nor send his Men. Upon the News of the Battle of Preston-Pans, he resolved his Son should go.

When an Account came of the Landing of the Dutch Forces in England, he resolves his Son should stay, so as to give Occasion to that Expression of his, That one Day undid what another did.

At last, when Lord John Drummond landed in Scotland, with a Body of French Forces, and Assurances of powerful Succours from France, he returns to the Design of sending his Son.

This Conduct, and Fluctuation of Counsels, shew he equally dreaded either breaking former Engagements, when the Attempt wore a Face of Success; or keeping them, when it looked desperate; and gives Credit and Strength to all the direct and positive Evidence, that the Case was so.

Thus this Overt Act is proved by the Testimony of Two Witnesses, Robert and Hugh Fraser, and supported by all the Circumstances which confirm the Authenticity of the Letters.

The Second Species of Treason, whereof the noble Lord stands accused by the Articles, is, Levying War against the King within the Realm.

My Lords, Levying War, properly speaking, and in the Nature of the thing, is itself an open Act, and may be laid as an open Act, of Compelling the Death of the King: It is impossible to consider a Man as levying War, without having done some Act. In Treason there are no Accessories; all who assist are Principals. Tho' a Man should not himself appear in Arms, nor commit any Hostilities with his own Hands, yet if he voluntarily aids, in any Manner, those who are in Arms, and commit Hostilities, he is guilty of levying War.

But tho' levying War be really an Act itself, to be proved by the Hostilities committed, or Assistance given; yet, as the Letter of the Statute of Edward III. requires the Four Kinds of Treason first mentioned in that Act to be made out by open Deed, Overt Acts are always laid of this Species of Treason, tho' generally, they are only Descriptions of the Manner of levying War.

Vol. IX.

In the present Case, the Articles have pointed out particularly the Manner in which the noble Lord is charged with having levied War. And of this Species of Treason there are Three Overt Acts laid:

First, That he encouraged, by Messages and Letters, the Pretender's Son, and his Adherents, then in Arms, waging War against his Majesty, within this Realm.

Hugh Fraser proves, That he carried a Message from Lord Lovat to the Young Pretender; the Purport of which your Lordships have heard.

Robert Fraser proves his Letters to the Pretender, Lochiel, and John Murray of Broughton.

His Evidence, as to the Letter I last-mentioned, is supported by its appearing to be written in Answer to a Letter of the 31st of October, from Broughton; and Hugh Fraser swears, he brought such a Letter from John Murray of Broughton to Lord Lovat, was privy to the Contents, and gives an Account of them: And John Murray of Broughton proves, That he received this Letter from Gortuleg.

All these Letters are established by the Postscript to his Letter to his Son, of the 14th of January 1746; in which he says,

"I send you inclosed the Four Letters which you should have carried with you from Castle Downy: You may tell the Prince when you deliver the Letter to him."

The Authenticity of this is supported by his Son's Letter, to which this is an Answer.

So that, to this Overt Act, there are Two positive Witnesses, Hugh and Robert Fraser; besides all the Circumstances which give them Credit.

The Second Overt Act of this kind of Treason laid in the Articles, is,

That he sent his Son, at the Head of an armed Force, to join the Young Pretender, and his Adherents, and assist them in the War they were then carrying on against his Majesty, within the Realm.

Robert Fraser proves, That Lord Lovat sent Letters early to Two Heads of different Tribes of the Name, to prepare their Men, in order to join the Master of Lovat:

That he ordered Colours and Bell-Tents to be got ready:

That his Men were twice rendezvoused just by his House, with his Privy:

That he ordered the Witnesses to give them Gunpowder, and delivered him the Key of the Place where it was, for that Purpose:

That he furnished them with Bonnets, Shoes, and Shot.

His Letters to the Young Pretender, Lochiel, Broughton, and the Son himself, shew that he sent his Son, and the Men he led.

Hugh Fraser says, after his Return from the President, Lord Lovat gave his Opinion, that his Son should march with all Dispatch:

That this was his final Opinion, and should not be countermanded.

Robert Chevis proves, That my Lord offered him a Captain's Commission.

Hugh Fraser of Dumballoch says, Lord Lovat asked him what Number of Men he could raise; and said the Master was to head and raise them.—Declared he would send his Son and Clan—Wished himself younger, that he might go and command the Men himself—Blamed his Son's Slowness in raising the Men—Promised Gratuities to the Wives and Children of those who went South to the Pretender, and engaged to support their Families in their Absence.

W. Walker was present at Part of a Dispute between Lord Lovat and his Son, who threw his Cockade into the Fire.

He heard Lord Lovat say to Fraser of Byersfield, "What would you have me do? I am forcing my Son out, the Life of me."

Peter Fraser of Balladrum proves, That when the Men were rendezvoused, the Officers used to go to Lord Lovat, and he bid them go to his Son, their Colonel.

There are more; but I have already named Six Witnesses to this Overt Act, whose Evidence is confirmed by a Variety of Circumstances.

The Third and only other Overt Act of this kind of Treason, which I shall mention, is, That he conspired with many Persons in Arms, how to renew the Rebellion, when it was almost suppressed, and to raise Forces to keep it alive.

John Murray of Broughton proves, That Lord Lovat met at Mortligan, in the Island of Morar, Fifteen of the Chiefs of the Rebels:

That he said 3000 Men would be sufficient; and mentioned 400 Frasers, as the Quota of his Son; and desired Lochiel to answer for his Son.

John Farquhar proves, That he embraced Lochiel's Officers; and said, He did not doubt their getting 7 or 8000 real honest Men, to fight the Elector of Hanover's Troops.

Charles Stewart proves, That 3 or 400 Frasers were proposed as his Son's Quota; and that he desired Lochiel to answer for his Son.

All agree French Money was distributed for the Purpose of raising Men; and that 70 or 80 Louisers were given to a Man belonging to Lord Lovat, for the Frasers.

John Murray of Broughton says, That Four or Five Days after, my Lord talked of sending the Servant who had received the Money, to his Son with it.

So that, to this Overt Act, there are Three concurring Witnesses.

The Third Head of Treason laid in the Articles, which is, knowingly corresponding with the eldest Son of the Pretender, and Persons employed by him, contrary to the late Act of Parliament, I pass over, because the Evidence to support that Part of the Charge is also Evidence upon the Two other kinds of Treason; and, as such, it has already been taken notice of.

All this particular Proof is strongly corroborated, if it wanted any Support, by a general Evidence of Guilt.

Lieutenant Dolymple proves, That Lord Lovat, after he was taken, being asked, how he came to be engaged, said It was in Revenge for the Loss of his Company.

David Campbell asking how he came to be engaged in a thing of this Kind, at his Years, Lord Lovat said, He had been disoblged by taking away his Company.

Sir Everard Fawkenor has told your Lordships, that he did not take Pains to deny his Guilt: That he put the Part he had acted upon Representation to the Ministry, for having taken away his Company: That he said, for the Sake of Revenge, he would have joined Kauli Kan, had he come.

His escaping after he was first apprehended, the Condition and Place in which he was taken, shew, that he thought his only Safety lay in Flight.

After he was taken, his Declarations to those who took him; his Conversations with Sir Everard Fawkenor, well knowing who he was, shew an absolute Conviction, that the Part he had acted was too notorious to be dissembled.

My Lords, This being the Nature and Strength of the Evidence, upon which the Case now in Judgment depends: from the Precedent which may be made upon this Occasion, I little thought to have heard of Danger to Innocence hereafter.

If this were a doubtful Matter, if it were a measuring Cast, the Commons had rather the Guilty should escape, than run a risk of the Innocent being condemned. When they accuse, they desire the Person accused may be convicted upon clear, satisfactory, and unanswerable Proof, or not at all.

The noble Lord at the Bar has complained of many Hardships: Few are the Tryals in which such a Complaint would be so little founded.

He had full Time to prepare for his Defence: At his own Request he has been indulged with Adjournments during the Tryal: He has had all the Advantages of Assistance which could be given, or connived at.

I wish the inflexible Rule of Law, as it still stands in Prosecutions of this Kind, could have allowed him to make his full Defence by others.

The Appearance of a Hardship would have been removed; but, as this Case is circumstanced, the removing that Appearance would have helped the Prosecution much more than the Prisoner.

I speak it feelingly, I had rather reply to the ablest Advocate, than do what my Duty now requires of me. It is painful to the last Degree, to observe upon any thing which has dropped from himself; but some Notice must be taken.

He has laboured to prove, That no Credit ought to be given to the Witnesses against him, because many of them are Accomplices, and speak from the Danger of their Situation.

I will allow, that the Hopes of Life, or the Fear of Death, may have induced some of them to give Evidence upon this Occasion, but not a false Evidence.

The same Hope or Fear is a Security against that: When the Commons accuse, and your Lordships sit as Judges, what Expectation can they have but from their Ingenuity and Veracity? Should they be caught prevaricating, should they be detected in a false Accusation, desperate were their Condition indeed.

But the noble Lord is misinformed, when he says an Accomplice ought not to be believed at all, till he is pardoned: If so, he could not be examined. The utmost Force of the Objection is no more than a Circumstance, to weigh in the Scale against his Credit; but then it must be balanced with the Matter of the Evidence, the Manner in which it is given, the Proof by which it is supported, and that by which it is contradicted.

The Matter here is probable and consistent: Nothing of Consequence rests upon a single Testimony: They who support each other, first told their Stories separately; have never since had an Opportunity of conferring; and therefore could not agree in a Fiction. One perhaps first examined in London, another at Inverness, neither knowing what the other had, could, or would say, kept in separate Custodies ever since,-- it is impossible they should unite in the same Falshood.

The Manner too in which they gave their Evidence, carried with it a Degree of Conviction: To instance in one, the Behaviour of Hugh Fraser demonstrated what he told your Lordships: He said, if he had no Hopes of Mercy he would not have spoke at all; for if he submitted to be examined, he must speak religiously the Truth.

The visible Agonies, and Anguish of Mind, under which he laboured; the Ingenuity with which he answered the precise Question put to him, without ever going a Syllable beyond it; could not but force Belief to all he said; and shewed he gave the Answer because it was true, but wished not to have given it upon this Occasion.

When he first discovered what he knew, he has told your Lordships, that he thought himself in the Article of Death; and from what he then said he never has varied since.

The Proof by which their Testimony is supported, I have already laid together in one View: To contradict them nothing is offered.

The noble Lord says, the Witnesses who could clear him are not here: Though, in the Course of the Tryal, we heard of his having Witnesses, and what they would prove; he has not had Time enough to bring them;--he complains of their having been prevented: As he has not Witnesses enough, he won't call any.

These are Pretences; but he let fall the true Reason why he has no Witnesses,--There is no making Brick without Straw;--There is no calling Witnesses without Facts;--There is no making a Defence without Innocence;--There is no answering Evidence which is true.

He has not so much as suggested what these Witnesses could prove, if they were here.

I will do him the Justice to believe, that, if he could with Truth, he would not now throw the whole upon the stiff-necked, headstrong Disobedience of his Son--That unhappy Boy is already attainted, and now actually in Custody. Though he might have been made the Scape-goat, if he were out of Reach, yet, in his present Situation, I am sure the noble Lord would not defend his own Life by loading this unfortunate Youth: Much less would he attempt such a kind of Defence, contrary to Truth; for so it must be, if either the Prisoner himself, or our Evidence, is believed.

Would he call Witnesses to prove the Letters which have been read to be forged?--Consider how they are authenticated. To some his Signature still remains--He don't controvert its being like his Hand--

The Bodies are wrote by Robert Fraser.--A Letter, unquestionably signed and sent by the noble Lord to his Royal Highness the Duke, was produced. The Body is wrote by the same Robert Fraser. The Signature to this, and the Signature which remains to the others, appear manifestly of the same Hand.

One of the most material Letters is an Answer to a Letter wrote by his Son. That too must be a Forgery;--yet it was found in his own Custody. But the intrinsic Evidence of Authenticity is still stronger.

If the Letters are forged, how come they to give the same Account of the Association, and mention the same Persons concerned, as your Lordships have heard from the general Evidence?

If the general Evidence is a Fiction, how could the same Story get into these Letters?

If Robert Fraser invented the Letters, how came Hugh Fraser, and others, to give the same Account of the Patent and Commission which is to be found in them? If the Patent and Commission never were seen or heard of, how could they be put into forged Letters? But Remarks are unnecessary, where the Case is so plain. I have said thus much, to shew, that the noble Lord's alledging he wants Assistance, or has not his Witnesses, may be of more Service to him, than any Assistance, or Witnesses, he could have; and to shew, that the Commons have not taken upon themselves this Prosecution, to lay the noble Lord at the Bar under any Disadvantages, in his Defence.

From the Witnesses who have been examined, the Case must appear to your Lordships such as no Advantages could have enabled him to get the better of. There are many Circumstances which induced them to single out this Prosecution; many Circumstances of a publick, many of a peculiar Nature. I am almost tempted to mention some of them;--but, in Part, they have occurred to your Lordships in the Course of the Examination; and I refrain, lest I should drop any thing that might tend to inflame. Every thing of that sort has, by every body, been carefully avoided upon this Occasion. That Ciceronian Eloquence, as he calls it, from Principles of Justice and Humanity, has not been used against him. Every Gentleman, who has spoke in this Tryal, has made it a Rule to himself, to say nothing against the Prisoner but plain Facts, and positive Evidence, without Aggravation. They have addressed themselves to your Judgment, and not to your Passions. I dare say your Lordships have observed, that, though the Evidence given consists of a Variety of Facts, some more directly affecting the noble Lord, others less, and some, perhaps, not affecting him at all, neither in the Summing up the Evidence, nor in what I have now troubled your Lordships with, has any thing been mentioned as direct Evidence against him, which is not so. Circumstances which only tend to corroborate, have been mentioned in that Light; and Evidence which no way affects him, has not been repeated, or observed upon at all.

My Lords, The Whole is now before your Lordships: It is your Province to make the Conclusion which ought to be drawn from the Premises.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, The Abilities of the learned Manager who just now spoke, never appeared with greater Splendour than at this very Hour, when his Candour and Humanity has been joined to those great Abilities which have already made him so conspicuous, that I hope one Day to see him add Lustre to the Dignity of the first Civil Employment in this Nation. My Lords, I observe one thing in the Defence of the noble Lord at the Bar; which, for the Sake of the Managers for the Representatives of Great Britain, and out of the Regard that I have for their Constituents who deputed them, I think myself obliged to take Notice of.

My Lords, The noble Lord at the Bar, in his Defence, complains I believe, very unjustly, of the Hardships he has suffered, in being deprived of his Witnesses; and, at the same time, mentions, that there are Witnesses of indisputable Credit, who were brought up in order to be Witnesses against him, but who have not been examined by the Managers, for Fear they should, on their Cross-Examination, support those Facts.

My Lords, I therefore now desire, for the Honour of the Gentlemen who are Managers of this Prosecution, that the noble Lord at the Bar may be asked, Whether he is now willing to have those Witnesses produced, and to have them asked any Questions concerning that Matter?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, What has been taken Notice of by the noble Lord, and what is desired by him, is extremely irregular, after the Managers have closed and summed up their Evidence; and the noble Prisoner had Liberty and Time given him, in the most indulgent Manner, to make his Defence in such Way as he should be advised. He was pleased to make a Speech to your Lordships, containing a great Variety of Facts, but declined producing any Witnesses; and though called upon for that Purpose, thought proper to acquaint your Lordships, that he should offer none to support those Facts which he had alledged. Your Lordships have, upon that Declaration, been pleased to proceed to hear the Managers Reply.

My learned Friend on my left Hand hath executed that Part with great Justice to the Commands of the Commons, and all that Tender-ness to the noble Prisoner, which was consistent with his Duty. Your Lordships have heard and felt the Weight of it.

The Proceedings are closed, and wait only for your Lordships Opinion. The Managers therefore are surprised to find the noble Lord now calling upon the Prisoner, to examine Witnesses which he did not think proper himself to examine, after the fullest Opportunity of considering it. And it appears by his own Speech, he has had Correspondence with his Witnesses since they came up. The Managers therefore must insist, that your Lordships will proceed to give your Opinion upon the Whole of the Evidence, which is now fully before you.

My Lords, I cannot but take Notice of the Method which the Prisoner at the Bar has taken, of reflecting upon this Prosecution, in his Speech. He has complained in a heavy Manner, and endeavoured to induce your Lordships to believe, that those who have had the Conduct of this Prosecution, have been using undue Methods, either to get Witnesses to support support the Charge, or to prevent him from having any Witnesses in his Defence. If the Prisoner at the Bar could have made out any thing of this kind, your Lordships would certainly have heard it here, in Evidence; for his not doing it could not be out of Deference to the Commons, or to your Lordships, or to his Majesty.

He has represented as if a new Method was taken, of erecting uncommon Courts of Justice, to compel some Witnesses to give Evidence on one Side, and deter others from doing it on the other. My Lords, it is indecent to lay Reflections of this Kind before your Lordships, in this Manner. Is the noble Lord at the Bar now to say, I could have Evidence, if I had an Opportunity of producing it; and if your Lordships will give me Time, I will prove all that I have said? My Lords, what has he been doing ever since the Articles were exhibited? Who are the Persons he could now examine? Many of his Witnesses, he has said himself, are come up; has he made any Use of them? Have they been examined at your Lordships Bar? On the contrary, did not the Prisoner say, he would produce no Witnesses? Yet, says he, I will reflect upon the Proceedings; and say, that I could have Witnesses, if I had Leave and Time to produce them.

My Lords, a Prisoner who is tried for his Life, may think he has a Right to say any thing; how false, how unjust soever: But it is incumbent on your Lordships to prevent the Effect of such Reflections, to do Justice to all Parties, to the Government, the Commons of Great Britain, and the Managers. The Prisoner seems to have Hopes, that your Lordships may be prevailed upon, by this Means, to believe, that there is some Truth in what he says. Your Lordships Indulgence now, of further Time, on this Pretence, would give some Colour to that Suggestion; and it will be imagined, that it was believed by your Lordships. I call upon the Prisoner himself, to declare, whether your Lordships did not indulge him with an Opportunity of calling any Witnesses, even those brought up on the Part of the Managers, on his giving them Notice for that Purpose? If your Lordships should now, upon what has been said by the noble Lord, which I do not doubt but he said from the great Regard he has to Justice, and from his Compassion for a Person appearing in the Circumstances of the Prisoner: I say, my Lords, if upon such a Suggestion your Lordships should now call again upon the Prisoner to produce his Witnesses, it will be giving Credit to that false and injurious Insinuation: And I hope your Lordships will not give Colour to imagine it was believed by You, by giving Leave to the Prisoner now to call Witnesses for that Purpose.

Lord High Steward. Have you done with your Evidence on both Sides?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am an unfit Person to say any thing after that great Man that has spoken last; but, since I am now upon my Tryal for my Life and Fortune, I must tell your Lordships what is really Fact, though, perhaps, it may not be pleasing to that great Man. That there is not one Syllable of what he has said true. My Lords, it is certain, that I got your Lordships Order for bringing up Sixty Witnesses to this Place; and it is certain that I sent a Gentleman, who was once allowed to be my Solicitor; and, though I was robbed of my whole Money, and did not get a Farthing out of my Estate since I was taken Prisoner, yet I had Interest enough to get 500 l. from Mr. Ross, which was given to this Man, to bring up my Witnesses. My Lords, he came there to Inverness, and found all the Witnesses that I had named to him were very ready to come up; but I was extremely surprised to find, that there was a new Court, besides the Court of the House of Peers, a little Depute of the Sheriffs, that took upon him to leave the common Place of Justice in the Tolbooth at Inverness, and to go to a private Place in the Suburbs, and there to erect such Courts as he thought fit; and there he examined what Witnesses he pleased; and those which he thought Friends to me were some of them put into Prison, others overawed and terrified, and others chased out of their Houses, their Houses burnt, and their Cattle taken away, and most of the rest obliged to go to the Highlands, and threatened to be undone, if they came to be Evidence for me. My Lords, after my Friend, that was sent to bring up my Witnesses, used all his Endeavours, and offered to bear their Expences, and to keep them, he could not get them to come up, because there was an Influence used by the General Officers in his Majesty's Service, and Persons sent up and down the whole Country, to threaten Part of the Witnesses, and to bribe others of them: So that, my Lords, though I am no Lawyer, nor Orator, as the learned Gentleman on my left Hand is, yet I heard from a very great Man, that this was a Precedent which never happened in Scotland, and, he believed, not in England; and he said to me, That it was most certain the Lords would take notice of it, because the Affront had been done to themselves. My Lords, after I was arraigned before your Lordships, and that the House of Commons had brought up Articles against me, that your Lordships would not allow any little Court of Inquisition to go afterwards, and to judge my Cause, as it were, before your Lordships. Therefore, my Lords, it is simply impossible for me to make my Defence, while I am not allowed the Witnesses that your Lordships ordered for me. That what I say myself is true, there are two Affidavits here of it, if your Lordships please to let them be read by the Clerk.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, By our Law, Affidavits cannot be read as Evidence upon a Tryal: You must call Witnesses to prove the Facts. But I would ask your Lordship the Name of that Agent, whom you sent down into Scotland to bring up the Witnesses, and who gave you this Information?

Lord Lovat. His Name is Hugh Fraser.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I must put your Lordship in mind, that you made Three Applications to the House of Lords, by Petition, to put off your Tryal: The first was on the 19th of February, and the others on the 2d and 3d of March. One of those Petitions was supported by an Affidavit made by one Hugh Fraser: Was that the same Hugh Fraser, whom you sent, as your Agent, into Scotland?

Lord Lovat. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Lord High Steward. Then, my Lord, there is another Affidavit annexed to your Petition to put off the Tryal, on the 3d of March, which is the Affidavit of George Ross. Now, in neither of these Petitions, though one of them is supported by the Affidavit of Hugh Fraser, whom you admit to be the Person you sent into Scotland to summon your Witnesses, is there any Allegation of any undue Practices, or any Restraint upon your Witnesses. How comes it to pass, when this Hugh Fraser came back from Scotland, and made an Affidavit to support the Petition to put off your Tryal, that this Complaint was not made then?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, In the first place, it could not be done before, because they went upon these Methods but just before Hugh Fraser came up. I have a Minister of the Gospel, a very honest and worthy Man, whom they designed to make an Evidence against me; and, I believe, he will tell the Truth upon the Subject of the Hardships done to my People, to keep them from coming up here to be Evidences; I mean my Tenants.

Mr. Noel.

My Lords,

I DID not intend to have troubled your Lordships at all, not finding the noble Lord at the Bar had, in his Defence, made it necessary for me to take any Part in the Reply; since what he has said (if it had been more material than the Nature of it appears to be), he hath said unsupported by any Evidence at all; and the noble Lord very well knows, that, in every Court of Justice, a Prisoner is not expected to make his Defence by what he thinks fit to say himself; but he must support it by Evidence, or it can have no Weight in Answer to the Evidence produced to support the Charge against him; and, my Lords, it was for that Reason that I did not trouble your Lordships in that Part of the Case, which hath been so amply, minutely, and accurately gone through by my learned Friend, who has spoken to it. But, since the noble Lord has irregularly mentioned several Matters since the Reply was closed, I shall take the Liberty to make some Observations upon what he has insinuated upon.

My Lords, the noble Lord at the Bar has made it Matter of Complaint to your Lordships, as if particular Methods of Practice had been used, to prevent his Witnesses coming up to appear in his Behalf. Your Lordships will give me Leave to say, that such Allegations ought to be considered as the highest Injustice, when his Lordship has not called one single Witness to the Truth of them, or to his own Defence. My Lords, this Affectation of saying Things, without supporting them by any Proof, after hearing the Reply of the Commons, and the summing up of the whole Proceeding, is a Method which was never known to be endured in any Proceeding by way of legal Tryal. My Lords, it is extremely easy for any noble Peer upon this Occasion, when he stands to be tried for his Life, and has no Defence to make, nor no Witnesses to produce; it is easy, I say, my Lords, to throw in Matters by way of Calumny; but your Lordships will not endure it, unless it is made at a proper Time, and supported by proper Evidence.

My Lords, I am the more surprised at this from the noble Lord at the Bar, because, whatever he may think of it, this I will say, that I know of no Instance in any Case where a Prisoner has been more fairly dealt with, or used with more Candour and Humanity on the Part of those, whose Business it is to make but the Charge against him, not on the Part of those, by whom he is to be tried: And it is the more extraordinary, because, if I am not mistaken, till this very Day, he has declared to your Lordships, that he had Numbers of Witnesses ready to produce, who would falsify every Fact which has been alledged against him.

My Lords, I will take notice, now I am up, of another Objection made by the noble Lord to some of the Witnesses that have been produced against him. My Lords, it is a known Objection; it has been often made, and as constantly over-ruled.

The noble Lord says, Some of the Witnesses are Persons interested; that they are criminal, as Accomplices in this Rebellion; and therefore ought not to be believed. Your Lordships will give me Leave to suggest, whether the laying down that as a Rule would not be of very ill Consequence, and, in effect, secure the most wicked Offenders from all Possibility of Punishment and Justice. My Lords, it is from a Principle of right Reason, and absolutely necessary to the Preservation of Government, that those who are concerned with them, should have Liberty to do Justice to the Publick by their Testimony. It is so in all Cases of Robbery, Murder, and other Felonies, and much more in Cases of Treason, where the Whole is in Danger. My Lords, if this was not so, the very End of Government would fail in every Particular, if those who are concerned, and best able to discover the Truth, are not allowed to give Testimony, for the sake of preserving the Nation. But, my Lords, in the present Case, I don't recollect any material Fact against the noble Lord at the Bar, but what has been proved by every Witness visu voce, and by every Letter that has been read, wherein not only his corresponding and treasonable Engagements have been made appear, but he has expressed himself, almost in every Letter, as manifesting the Glory he took, and Zeal he shewed, in that wicked Service, which he is proved to be engaged in to the last.

My Lords, we have nothing now to do, but to expect your Lordships Opinions upon the Evidence and Facts that have been laid before you; and in Contradiction to which, there is not one single Evidence produced by the noble Lord.

Here the Prisoner offered to speak.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, My Lords will be ready to hear every thing that you can offer, which is material for your Defence; but I must acquaint you, That the Commons, by the constant Rules of Proceeding in Cases of this Kind, are intitled to the last Word.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am far from blaming the Honourable Managers for the Commons, tho' they prosecute me with great Warmness, and especially the Man at their Head, who was, some time ago, my Friend and Acquaintance. But, my Lords, whatever they were pleased to object against me, as I was forced to speak for myself, I was obliged to answer; and my Lords, since I asked the Favour of this House to force up my Evidence in the Manner they thought fit, your Lordship saying, That no Affidavit was good upon the Subject, my Lords, I have Two very good Witnesses, one a very Reverend Minister of the Gospel, that will prove the the most extreme Hardships that ever were imposed in this Country, to hinder my Witnesses from coming up to me; so that, if your Lordships do not, in your great Justice and Goodness, think it proper to order, in the Manner your Lordships please, to have my Witnesses come up, I must submit to your Lordships. You may do what you please.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I particularly asked your Lordship, Whether you would call any Witnesses to prove what you alledged in your Defence: To which you answered, That you would not.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I would call Witnesses upon no other Account than this that I have mentioned: I have Witnesses to prove the Falsity of what has been said by the Witnesses against me; but, since I do not get Time to do that, I give it up.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship does not attend to what I said, which was, That I asked you Two or Three times, Whether you would call any Witnesses to prove any Part of your Defence: To which you said, No. If you had any Witnesses, why did you not call them at that Time?

Lord Lovat. This Minister was brought up as one of the Counter-Evidence. I told your Lordship, That I would call no Witnesses that Day.

Lord High Steward. Is that Minister here?

Lord Lovat. He is here.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, It is certainly an irregular Method, in which the noble Lord at the Bar would proceed, to call Witnesses after the Reply; but I desire to know of you, Whether you oppose my Lord Lovat's calling Witnesses now?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, It is a Difficulty upon us, who are appointed Managers, to carry on this Prosecution, and would do it with all the Candour and Indulgence possible, to insist, That the noble Lord, who is trying for his Life, should not now be admitted to produce Witnesses; but it is, perhaps, as difficult to know, how to dispense with that which is the known Course and Method of Proceedings, merely because the Prisoner, in an irregular and improper Manner, thinks fit to desire it. The Managers do not oppose their being produced, from an Imagination that they would say any thing material for the noble Lord at the Bar; but, if your Lordships are to break through all Methods and Rules of Proceedings, your Lordships will consider the Consequence. The noble Lord at the Bar told your Lordships, That he did not intend to call any Witnesses; and, upon that Foot, the Managers replied. He has now told you, That he would do it. But what is it that he would examine them to? Is it to make out any Part of his Defence to the Treason charged on him? That is not pretended; but to prove the Hardships he complains of, in being hindered from having his Witnesses; and the noble Lord at the Bar wants your Lordships Order now for their coming. The Tendency of this, if it means any thing besides Complaint, is to put off the Cause after it is heard; and, unless I had a greater Authority than I have at present, I cannot take upon myself, and I do not find that the rest of the Gentlemen, who are Managers, can take upon them, to depart from the known established Course of Proceeding, and to introduce a Precedent that may be of bad Consequence. And, my Lords, I can hardly think, that the noble Lord at the Bar would insist upon doing it, but because he thought, that the Managers must insist, that he ought not. There is nothing that has occurred now, that did not, must not, have occurred to him before; and when the Prisoner thought fit to declare to your Lordships, after having full Time allowed him for the maturest Consideration, and Counsel appointed for his Assistance, That he would not call any Witnesses, you cannot but think such Determination of his was upon the Advice that his Counsel gave him; and your Lordships will hardly think, that the noble Lord can, at present, thus unadvisedly determine to call any Witnesses, which before, upon the Foot of the Advice he must be presumed to have taken, he determined not to do, from any Expectation that they would be able to do him any real Service, but from Views of another Kind. The Managers therefore doubt not that your Lordships will proceed in this Case, as you would in any other, to consider the Evidence, and give such Judgment on the Whole, as your Lordships shall think most right and just.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have often told your Lordships of the Infirmities that I labour under: I have often mentioned them to you; and the Want of Memory is the thing I regret most. I have been a Cripple these Four Years, and therefore not very capable to go to head Men in the Rebellion; yet I am much surprised to hear that Honourable Person, that is at the Head of the Law, and very deservedly placed there, that he should lose his Memory in an Hour's Time. My Lords, the Reason is plain to your Lordships, why I did not adduce Witnesses this Morning: The Reason was, because I begged of your Lordships Time to bring my Witnesses up from Scotland, that they might be produced to prove my Innocence; and the only Reason that I now desire to call these two Witnesses, if your Lordships please, is, that they may prove before that great Man such Examples of extreme Hardships, as he will never find out in all his Law-Books.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, You mentioned but One Witness at first; and now you mention Two: Who is the other?

Lord Lovat. The Two are, Donald Fraser and Alexander Fraser.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Do you oppose my Lord Lovat's being admitted, though it is irregular, to call these Two Witnesses?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I think we cannot, consistently with our Duty to the Commons, give up this Point, which would be attended with many dangerous Consequences, the whole of which your Lordships may not now be able to foresee, if a Man, when he has closed his Defence, and says, That he will examine no Witnesses, and the Managers have replied, should afterwards be admitted, on such a Pretence as this, to examine Witnesses.

Earl of Cholmondeley. My Lords, I am satisfied that the Manner, in which the noble Lord at the Bar desires now to call his Witnesses, is totally different from any Proceeding that I ever saw; but, as the accused Lord, in his Defence, has alledged several Hardships that he has undergone, in having his Witnesses prevented from attending his Trial, and as that contains the highest Reflection upon the Government, and those who are employed under it, I would therefore desire to know of the noble

Lord at the Bar, Whether, upon the Speech that he offered at the Bar, as it contains Objections to the Credit and Weight of the Evidence, and Complaints of undue Practices; whether, upon those Complaints, the noble Lord at the Bar desires the Opinion of the Lords, whether they will give him further Time, in order to produce his Witnesses?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I was fully determined never to examine any Witnesses, when I found I was under such Disadvantages; and I humbly beg your Lordships Protection and Kindness to give me Time.

MR. SOLICITOR GENERAL.

My Lords,

THE Matter now agitated is of the utmost Consequence not only to the present, but to all future Proceedings of this Kind; and I doubt, whether it is yet thoroughly understood, in its full Extent.

The Witnesses the noble Lord now proposes to call, are not to his Defence, or in Support of his Innocence.

If they were, how irregular soever it may be to offer them now, in my Opinion, and, I dare say, the other Managers are of the same, I should be for consenting to their being called. We should never contend, though in Strictness we might, that any Evidence of this Kind came too late to be heard.

But the Design of calling them, as now opened, is to shew, that, from some Obstruction given to the bringing up his Witnesses, his Trial ought to be put off to an indefinite Time; and that he may have new Orders to summon and compel Witnesses to come from Scotland. This we oppose, because the Application intended to be supported by it cannot now be made.

The Speech made by my Lord consisted of Two Parts: First, a Desire to put off his Trial indefinitely; and, if your Lordships should not think fit to comply with this Desire, then he rested his Defence upon Observations, and Objections to the Force and Credibility of that Evidence which had been offered to prove his Accusation.

In this he was very proper; for though a Person accused calls no Witnesses, yet, if the Charge against him is not clearly made out by legal and credible Evidence, he ought to be acquitted. Being asked, whether he had any Witnesses to call, he declared he had none.

Had he desired to take your Lordships Opinion, whether the Trial should not stay till he could send to Scotland for Witnesses, we should have opposed it. Your Lordships calling to the Managers to proceed, was a Determination, that you would not deliberate about staying the Trial.

I own freely to your Lordships, the Reason why I did not take particular Notice of the noble Lord's Complaint, was, because I understood it to be meant as an Artifice to palliate his not going into any Evidence: And I did not think it necessary, I did not care, to endeavour to wipe off from his Apology any Varnish of this Kind with which he thought fit to colour it. One thing, had I thought of it, I would have taken notice of: He was pleased to say, that several Witnesses, brought up in Support of the Prosecution, were not called by the Managers, because they would have proved the Hardships he complains of. I can assure your Lordships, and every other Gentleman of the Committee will join in what I say, no one Witness was left unexamined for that Reason. It is true, more Persons were brought up to be Witnesses than we called; but the Reason of not calling them was, either because we thought what they had to say not material enough; or else, because they were liable to an Objection the noble Lord had made; which, whether well or ill founded, we did not care to give your Lordships the Trouble of disputing.

In consequence of what fell from your Lordships, we told the noble Lord, in the Course of the Trial, that any Witness examined by us should attend to be examined by him, if he desired it, and would give Notice: We should have done the same with regard to any Person brought up as a Witness, tho' not examined.

As to this whole Matter of Complaint, the Managers are intire Strangers to it. Nothing of that Kind has been done with their Privy or Knowledge.

And this brings me to the Point, Whether Witnesses shall now be heard at this Time, to prove any such Ground for putting off the Trial fin Die.

We oppose it, because, true or false, the Trial cannot now be put off; and it would be a most dangerous Precedent, to go into an Ex parte Examination of such collateral Matters. Hearing the Evidence supposes your Lordships can do something in Consequence of it: If you cannot, it would be irregular and improper to go into it.

Before your Lordships appoint the Time of Trial you take into Consideration the Nature of the Charge, and the Place where the Facts arise, in order to allow a reasonable Time for Preparation, and bringing Witnesses.

Your Lordships did so in the present Case; and, after weighing all Circumstances, you appointed the 23d of February.

If, thro' any Accident, the Time fixed is too short, your Lordships are always open to Applications, which must be supported by Evidence, to shew the Delay is not affected; that all due Diligence has been used; and that the Witnesses are material, and expected to come within a certain Time.

Upon the Application of the noble Lord, your Lordships deferred this Trial to the 5th of March.

Upon another Application by him, you deferred it to the 9th of March, the Day named in his Petition.

If he had any Ground sufficient for deferring the Trial longer, he should have applied to your Lordships before it began; but, upon the Ground now mentioned, it could not have been deferred, even in that Way, because it is plain, this Matter, whatever there be in it, was within his Knowledge, at the Time of the other Applications. Hugh Fraser, his Agent, who went down, as his Lordship says, to bring up his Witnesses, made an Affidavit, annexed to a Petition presented by his Lordship on the 2d of March, for putting off the Trial; and was called in, and examined at your Lordships Bar.

There was likewise an Affidavit annexed to his Lordship's Petition, presented on the 3d of March; and not a Syllable of this Complaint was suggested; which shews, that they thought no Strefs could be laid upon it; and that it was not to be supported. In the Course of the Trial hitherto your Lordships have heard nothing of it; on the contrary, you have heard of his Witnesses, and what they were to prove.

There is no Precedent of putting off a Trial indefinitely, after the Evidence for the Prosecution is closed; I dare say there never will be such a Precedent. At soonest this Trial could not come on again before the next Session of Parliament.

We oppose the attempting to prove a Matter upon which your Lordships cannot now do any thing; but I desire it may be understood, that we do not oppose, tho' it be at an improper Time, the calling any Witnesses upon the Merits of his Defence, either to disprove the Evidence against him, or to assert his own Innocence.

Then the Duke of Newcastle moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the Lord High Steward going back to his Chair, the House was adjourned accordingly: And then the Lords returned in the same Order as before.

After some Time, the Lords, and others, returned into Westminster-Hall, in the same Order as usual; and the Peers having taken their Places, and the Lord High Steward being seated in his Chair, the House was resumed.

Then Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, take the Prisoner from the Bar; but you are not to take him away to the Tower yet.

Lord Lovat. If your Lordships would send me to the Highlands, I would not go to the Tower any more.

[The Prisoner was taken from the Bar accordingly.]

L. H. S. Your Lordships have heard and considered the Evidence in this Cause, and every thing that has been alleged by the Managers for the House of Commons, and by the Prisoner. The solemn and established Method of your Proceedings requires, that I should ask your Lordships Opinions severally upon the Question, Whether the noble Lord the Prisoner is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands impeached, or Not Guilty; and that those Opinions should be given in the Absence of the Prisoner. My Lords, this has always been your Rule; and after that is done, the Prisoner is to be brought to the Bar again, and to be acquainted by me with the Result of those Opinions. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to proceed now to give your Opinions upon the Question of Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was then made for Silence, as before.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered; and, beginning with the youngest Peer, said,

L. H. S. Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, What says your Lordship? Is Simon Lord Lovat Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands impeached, or Not Guilty?

Whereupon Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chirbury, standing up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, answered, Lord Herbert. Guilty, upon my Honour.

In like Manner, the several Lords aftermentioned, being all that were present, being respectively asked the same Question, answered as followeth:

William Duke of Devonshire, Lord Steward of his Majesty's Household. Guilty, upon my Honour.
 Lionel Cranfield Duke of Dorset, Lord President of the Council. Guilty, upon my Honour.

Then the Lord High Steward laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, said, Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands impeached, upon my Honour.

L. H. S. My Lords, There are One hundred and Seventeen of your Lordships present; and you have unanimously found, That Simon Lord Lovat is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands impeached.

Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that he should be brought to the Bar, and acquainted therewith?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation was made for Silence; and another Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Prisoner to the Bar; which was done in the same Order as before: And then Proclamation was again made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. Simon Lord Lovat, The Lords have considered the Charge of High-Treason, which has been brought against you by the House of Commons: They have considered the Evidence, and all that has been offered to maintain the Charge: They have also considered every thing that has been alleged in your Lordship's Defence: And, upon the whole Matter, their Lordships have unanimously found, that you are guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

Lord President. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

The House was accordingly adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the same Order as before.

And the House being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further, in order to the giving of Judgment against Simon Lord Lovat, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, in Westminster-Hall.—And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by the former Messengers, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back Simon Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Thursday the 19th of March, 1746.

The SEVENTH DAY.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon the Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order as on the First Day, into Westminster-Hall; where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence as usual, and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then he knelt down.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

The Serjeant at Arms, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, made another Proclamation for Silence.

Lord High Steward. Simon Lord Lovat, When your Lordship was last at this Bar, I acquainted you, That your Peers had found you Guilty of the High Treason whereof you stand impeached, by means whereof you are convicted of that High Treason: And I am now to ask your Lordship, What you have to say, Why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I am very sorry I gave your Lordships so much Trouble in my Trial; and I give you a Million of Thanks for your being so good, in your Patience and Attendance, whilst it lasted. I thought myself very much loaded by one Murray, who, your Lordships know, was the bitterest Evidence there was against me. I have since suffered by another Mr. Murray, who, I must say with Pleasure, is an Honour to his Country, and whose Eloquence and Learning is much beyond what is to be expressed by an ignorant Man like me. I heard him with Pleasure, tho' it was against me. I have the Honour to be his Relation, tho' perhaps he neither knows it, nor values it. I wish, that his being born in the North may not hinder him from the Preferment that his Merit and Learning deserves. Till that Gentleman spoke, your Lordships were inclined to grant my earnest Request, and allow me further Time to bring up Witnesses to prove my Innocence; but, it seems, that has been over-ruled. All now that I have to say, is a little in Vindication of my own Character. I was pointed out by the Honourable Managers as a most inveterate Enemy of the Royal Family now upon the Throne, and the most zealously attached to a Family that is not like to come upon the Throne. My Lords, I humbly beg, that your Lordships will take notice, that my Attachment to the Family of Hanover is proved without Contest, after the great Services I have done. I was honoured by the King's Favour and Countenance, that made me so naturally and gratefully attached to his Person and Family; and as I was for Twelve Years in Germany, almost every Day in Conversation with his Majesty and his Family, I thought it necessary to know the History of his Family; and I read it very particularly; both the publick and private History of it: And I must say, that since your Lordships, and this Nation in general, thought fit to have a King from Germany, you could not have chose one from a more illustrious House; so great, that several Emperors of Germany have been elected from out of that Family; and they always behaved with great Distinction, both in the Wars, and in their own Country. I will only give one Instance of that, which I had from my dear Master the late King's own Mouth (of glorious Memory). I heard him say this to the Emperor's Envoy, after the Siege of Belgrade, when the Envoy told him, That there were Forty thousand Janissaries killed upon the Spot: "Why, says he to the Envoy, I shall be very glad of it; but I know the Nature of those Animals: If 40,000 of them are killed at Night, in the very Place of those that are killed 40,000 will rise up the next Morning. I have had Experience of the War with the Turks: I was with 6000 of my own Men, at the Siege of Buda: And, I believe, they will do me the Justice to say, that both I and my Men behaved as we ought to have done." This shews, my Lords, that I always had a true Notion of the Greatness and Illustration of the Family of Hanover. I gave signal Proofs of it in the Year 1715; and I beg your Lordships will indulge me to repeat a little of what passed at that Time, because there are several Lords here that were not then born. My Lords, when I came into England, in the Year 1714, my Design was, that, with the Assistance of my Friends, the late Duke of Argyll, and the present Duke, I should endeavour to get my Remission, to go down into my own Country, to endeavour to recover my Fortune, and to serve the Government faithfully, in what I was able. In this Situation I was, when my Lord Marshal set up the Pretender's Standard at Aberdeen: It did much alarm the Court. I was sent for, and particularly spoken to by the Earl of Sunderland, and my Lord Townshend, who were always my Friends. My Lords, this present Duke of Argyll was so generous, that he would follow his brother to Scotland, and expose his Life as a Volunteer; and he suffered by it; for at the Battle of Sheriff-Muir, he had a Ball went through his Side and Arm, and had almost lost his Life, if it had not been by the extraordinary Skill and Diligence of one Mr. Mac Gill, a Surgeon, who attended him. When he went down, he told me, Dear Lovat, you must do your best for us now; and I desire you may meet me in Badenoch, with all the Men you can get together; and I will gather all the Men I can in Argyllshire, and meet you there. I went down on Horseback, and he went down Post. Before I came to my own Country, I found that the Rebels were got together in vast Numbers; and as Inverness was the great Capital of all those Parts, my Lord Marshal resolved to send 2000 Men to reinforce the Garrison of Inverness, that it might not be surprized. The Mac Intosh and the Mac Donalds were gathered together, in order to go to Inverness: When I found it was impossible for the Earl of Ilay to come with his Men from Argyllshire, I resolved to distinguish myself, even though by a desperate Stroke. I had gathered together 200 Men at Strathbarr, with these I marched to Inverness, and invested it. Sir John Mac Kenzie, the then Governor, had 1000 Men in the Town; so I found there was nothing for it but Boldness. I sent a Message, which, indeed, looked like a French Galconade, that I would blow him, and his Garrison, and the Castle, and the strong Steeple, into the Air, if they did not surrender to me before Ten o'Clock the next Day; though I had not Two Pounds of Powder. At the same time, I sent a Party of Men, in which was a pretty Gentleman of Skill, one Captain Ross, the Laird's Brother. Whether Sir John Mac Kenzie heard this Over-night, I can't tell; but he enquired, If I was fully resolved to attack the Town. He told him positively, That I was. Says he, If Simon be there, he is a desperate Fellow; I believe I must leave the Town to him: And accordingly, he run off that Night, with all his Men. This I did, my Lords, before any of the loyal Clans to this Government were raised. After this they were pleased to declare me General of the King's Forces there. When I got together near 2000 Men, of which 1000 were my own, I resolved to attack Lord Seaforth, who was coming with 2500 Men, to join Sir John Mac Kenzie, at Inverness, or to fight any of the Rebels that should meet him: He called them so. He stood his Ground till I came within Half a Mile of him. I drew up the little Army I had in pretty good Order, being an Officer for many Years before: And I can say to your Lordships, that, I believe, I am the oldest Officer in Commission in Great Britain; for Fifty Years ago I was Captain of Grenadiers in King William's Army. They were the Sutherland Men, Lord Ray's Men, and some of the Grants and Monros: But when I came to march up the Hill, to attack Lord Seaforth, I had none followed me but the Monros. When they found I was come within Sight of them, they made a precipitate Retreat to a Bridge that was near them, over a River: And afterwards, by Lord President's Advice, who was then in the Army, Lord Seaforth came, and submitted to me, as General of King George's Forces, promising immediately to lay down his Arms; which he did. This Submission was brought up, and shewn to the Ministry. I then went, and reduced the Duke of Gordon, who gave me the most ample Submission I ever read, to the King; and Assurances of Fidelity to him and to the Government. That Submission I likewise shewed; and, if they are not consumed in my House that was burnt, they are still extant. My Lords, then I pursued the Rebels from Place to Place, and chased them from Hill to Hill. On this Expedition I lost my only Brother, who was a very brave young Fellow; and I never left off pursuing the Rebels till the Rebellion was suppressed and extinguished: So that I may fairly say, that I assisted to keep the Crown upon the late King's Head, as much, if not more, than any one Man of my own Rank in Britain. I had then several Invitations to come to Court; and had Three Letters of Thanks from the King's Person, by the Hands of the great Earl Stanhope, who was Secretary of State then; in which he says, that he was so sensible of my extraordinary and signal Services, that he would, all his Life, give me such Marks of his Favour, as would oblige all the Country to be zealous and faithful to me. Upon this I came to Court; and I was not disappointed. I believe there are Lords in this House, I am sure there are a great many yet alive, that know I was a particular Favourite of the late King's; I believe more than any one of my own Rank in Scotland. I remember my Lord Townshend told me one Day, who was my particular Friend, That I was certainly a great Favourite of the King; and if all the Ministry should join together to hurt me, that it was not in their Power to do it; and that he would do me all the Service he could; and said, the King would not refuse any thing he should ask for me: And the King, to my own certain Knowledge, reproached the Scotch Ministry, that I was not provided for. But that unhappy Nation has been always divided amongst themselves, between the Family of the Argylls, and that of the Montrosses; so that they, knowing me to be a Relation and Partizan of the Family of Argyll, they never would do any thing for me. At last, the King said, he must do it himself; and sent for the Hanoverian Minister, and told him, That he must immediately fix upon a Way to give me a Pension: At last, it was ordered by the King's particular Instruction, that I should have a Letter, or Patent, for myself, for 300 l. a Year; which I enjoyed till now, for any thing I know. Then all the English Ministers, every one of them, were my Friends; and they proposed that I should go into the Army. Lord Cadogan, who, in the Year 1716, went with an Army into Scotland, sent for me; and desired me to bring up 500 Men to Badenoch, to escort him to Inverness: Which I did. They gave out, that the Highlanders were to attack him in the Woods: But when they heard, that I was with him, with the best Part of my Clan, they did not think it proper to attack him. After Lord Cadogan came to Inverness he sent for Sir Robert Monro, who was killed at the Battle of Falkirk: He called me into his Closet with him, and told me, We are now fully convinced, Lord Lovat, that it was you, and a few of the King's Friends that were joined to you, that subdued and suppressed the Rebellion, and extinguished it; and that all that was wrote in the Gazette about Lord Sutherland, was all Romance. Now, I am so sensible of those Services that you have done the Government, that, if you will join yourself to the Duke of Marlborough, to the Earl of of Sunderland, and to me, that are thought the Favourites of the King, we will, in the first Place, immediately make you a Major-General: You shall have a Regiment of Foot, or Dragoons, and 3000*l.* a Year Pension, during your Life. My Lords, if I had accepted of that Offer, I had now had the best Estate in Scotland; and would have been fair for being one of the Field-Marshals of England, being the oldest Officer: But, my Lords, the Condition was too severe; and I had rather never have any Being, than be ungrateful. The late Duke of Argyll, I mean this Duke of Argyll's Father, who was one of the greatest Men that has been in our Country for many Ages; he was a Father to me, and protected me as his own Child; he got me Two Remissions from King William; and, as he was carrying another Remission in, to be signed by Queen Anne (King William, to my Misfortune, having died that Year), he found the Door shut; that is, he found that Three Men had turned out all King William's Friends, of whom he was one, and the Duke of Quinsberry, and several others; and that she brought in Two Families, the Duke of Hamilton, and the Marquis of Athol, whom she made a Duke; and to please him, with whom my Family unfortunately had a Quarrel about an Estate; to please him, I say, she put 2000*l.* upon my Head, which was 1000*l.* more than ever was usual. So I told the Duke of Argyll, that I had nothing for it, but to go to Hanover, and there to live and die with Fidelity to the Duke of Hanover. He told me, that he was well assured, that the Duke of Hanover would be glad to receive me; but, as he was then declared the Protestant Heir, and that Succession depended much upon the good Will of Queen Anne, he must, upon her Desire, be obliged to send me back to England; and that he did not know a safe Way for me, but to go to France, because we were at War with them then. And that was the first thing, my Lords, that obliged me to go to France, which was the Foundation of my Misfortunes. Now, my Lords, after what I have told you, I must humbly submit it to your Lordships, whether you do not think it is improbable, that I should be an Enemy to King George, and his Family: I, that received more Marks of Favour from the late King George than any Subject in the North; I, that got my Estate settled in his Time, both by the House of Commons and Peers; I, that expected never to be out of Favour with the Government, being very zealous to promote any thing that was for the Good of it. My Lords, I commanded a Highland Company for Fifteen Years, as their Colonel: And the Country can testify, that there was no Depredation, Theft, or Robbery, committed there during that Time: I took Twenty-five Highland Robbers in the Highlands in one Night, and brought them all Prisoners to the Tolbooth of Inverness. I continued to act in the Manner that General Wade from time to time ordered me. I own I did not expect, that he, who reviewed my Company every Year, and called it the best Company that he ever saw in his Life—I must make the Lords laugh upon that Occasion: He told me, that Mr. Pulteney, now Earl of Bath, said, in the House of Commons, that he knew old Lovat very well; that he would never have a Company but in his Pocket: And now I can tell him, That he did not speak Truth. General Handaside was present, and his Brother, who is a very pretty Gentleman, when he declared, that he never did see such a fine Company in any Country that he was ever in: And he appealed to the Two Handasides, and the other Officers that were there, whether it was not true; and they all agreed in it. So that, my Lords, after this, I very little expected, that, without ever blaming me, or imputing any Crime to me, my Commission should be broke; and not only so, but that I should be ordered to keep 400 Men from it in the Country, to be put into another Company, to make up a Regiment that General Wade procured for his Favourite Colonel Durero. My Lords, I was certainly much out of Humour to see myself so used; but I never imputed it to the King, nor to his Prime Minister Sir Robert Walpole, afterwards Earl of Orford. And this is all the Grounds of my being out of Temper, or that they can lay hold of, to say I was against the Government. So, after what I have told your Lordships, and the Manner that I have been used, I hope your Lordships will not think I was capable of any malicious Design against the Government. And, indeed, it was a Loss to the Government more than to me, that my Company was broke, because, if I had commanded the Highland Company, as I did for Fifteen Years, the Country had been peaceable, and there had been no Rebellion.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, I must put your Lordship in mind of the Question I asked you, Whether you have any thing to offer in Arrest of Judgment?

Lord Lovat. Whatever way I may be over-ruled, I will say, to my dying Hour, that I have met with the greatest Hardships ever practised in Britain; and I still insist, that I shall get the Benefit that all Subjects have a Right to, of adducing Witnesses, that may be for the Safety of their Lives and Interests.

L. H. S. Your Lordship has heard the Opinion of the Lords already.

Lord President. I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order they came down: And the House being there resumed,

The Proceeding entered in the Journal of the 19th of March, 1715, in relation to the Giving of Judgment against George Earl of Wintoun was read: Which being done,

Their Lordships were informed, That the Commons, with their Speaker, and the Mace, were at the Door: Whereupon they were called in: And Mr. Speaker, at the Bar, said,

My Lords,
THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, in Parliament assembled, did, at this Bar, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach Simon Lord Lovat of High Treason, and exhibited Articles against him, and have made good the same: I do therefore, in the Name of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, in Parliament assembled, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, demand Judgment of your Lordships against Simon Lord Lovat for the said High Treason.

And they being withdrawn,

Ordered, That, when Judgment shall be pronounced against the said Lord Lovat, it be the same as was pronounced against the late Earl of Wintoun.

Then the House was again adjourned into Westminster-Hall: And the Peers, and others, went down in the same Order as before; and the Peers being in their Places, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the Commons and their Managers in the Seats prepared for them respectively; the House was resumed: And the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, As some Time has intervened since I last asked you the Question, Whether you had any thing to offer in Arrest of Judgment, I am now to ask you again, Whether you have any thing to say, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Lord Lovat. No! I have said all that I had to say; and beg your Lordships Pardon for the rude, long Discourse I made to your Lordships. I had great need of my Cousin Murray's Eloquence for half an Hour, and then it would have been more agreeable.

Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

Lord High Steward.

Simon Lord Lovat,

YOU have been impeached by the Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, of High-Treason, charged upon you by particular Articles, containing different Species, and various Overt Acts, of that Treason.

To these Articles your Lordship thought fit to put in an Answer, amounting to a general Plea of Not guilty to the Whole; and, after a long and impartial Trial, upon the clearest and most convincing Evidence, against which you offered no Defence by Witnesses, your Peers have unanimously found you Guilty.

What remains is the disagreeable, but unavoidable, Part of proceeding to that Judgment, which is the necessary Consequence of such atrocious Crimes. Happy had it been for your Lordship, if before you engaged in them, you had suffered the Terrors of that Consequence to have their due Weight, when the sacred Ties of your Allegiance, and your Oaths, were not strong enough to restrain you.

In this Proceeding, the Zeal and dutiful Affection of the Commons to his Majesty, and their Country, and the Justice of the House of Peers, have shone forth in their full Lustre. The Commons found your Lordship to be one of the principal Conspirators, who contrived and carried on the late detestable Rebellion, to destroy our Religion and Liberties, and to subvert that Legal Settlement of the Crown in his Majesty, and his Royal Family, under which alone we can live Free and Happy.

They rightly judged, that this, which is the common Cause of all the People of Great Britain, ought to be prosecuted by the United Voice of the People: That it became them to investigate and lay open, in full Parliament, the Source of those Calamities, which we have lately suffered, and the deep-laid and long-meditated Conspiracy, in which your Lordship had so considerable and so flagitious a Part. They rightly judged, that no Judicature was equal to such an important Proceeding, but this High Court, on whose Penetration and Justice they relied, and before whom, in this Great Assembly, Publick and Indubitable Satisfaction might be given.

Before your Conviction, I have spoken to your Lordship upon a Presumption of your Innocence; but now I am bound, by the unanimous Decision of my Lords your Peers, to take the Evidence against you to be True, and to address myself to you as a Guilty Person.

Your Lordship has, in your Answer, endeavoured to avail yourself of former Services to his late Majesty and the Protestant Succession, which you have this Day enlarged upon at the Bar. How unfortunate have you been in referring back to such cancelled Merit, since thereby you have furnished an Opportunity to the Commons, to shew, for how long a Track of Time you have conceived and nursed up this Treason in your Heart! Whatever your Pretences were, so infected was your Mind, and so forward your Zeal, in the Cause of that Pretender, whom you had then abjured, as to engage in that rash and weak Attempt from Spain, in his late Majesty's Reign. Yet, at or very near that Time, it appears, by the Evidence (out of which every Observation I will make shall naturally arise), you were soliciting or accepting Favours and Trusts from that very Government, which you had thus engaged to destroy. What Use did you make of those Trusts? The Instance of Roy Stewart, now an Attainted Rebel, speaks it too plainly. Whilst you were Sheriff of the Shire of Inverness, the largest County in Scotland, and one of the greatest Consequence, you suffered that Criminal, in the Year 1736, to escape out of your publick Prison; harboured him afterwards in your own House; then charged him with Messages, and Assurances of Fidelity, to the Pretender; and to procure for you a Commission of Lieutenant-General, and a mock Title of Honour, from that Pretended Prince.

If any thing could surpass this Treachery, it is the Association, which your Lordship signed and sealed, together with Six other Persons, and sent to Rome and Paris, by Drummond of Bochaldie, in the Beginning of 1740. The Substance of this was, to assure the Pretender, whom you always called your lawful King, of your Readiness to appear openly in Arms for his Service; and to solicit an Invasion from France against your Native Country, to support this desperate Design.

It should seem, by the Evidence, that the Foreign Enemies of Britain were less forward in this Measure to disturb her, than her degenerate, Unnatural Sons. Whether that Reluctance proceeded from a Distrust of so false a Set of Men, or from a Conviction, that the Body of this Great People was not to be shaken in their Loyalty to a King, who possesses the Throne by the most Rightful Title, and governs them in Justice and Mercy, according to their Laws and Constitution; in either Case they they were in the Right. What Dependence could the Court of France have on a few abandoned Traitors? What Hopes could they entertain, that a general Infatuation would, on the sudden, seize and delude a Brave, a Free, and a Happy People, to seek their own Slavery and Ruin?

From this Time till the Year 1743, the Conspiracy lingered in its Progress, though great Efforts appear to have been made to render it more extensive, and more formidable. Then it happened, as it always has happened, that when France saw such an Enterprize, whether successful or not, might be made a convenient Engine of her own Politicks, that Court set about an Invasion in earnest. Great Preparations were made, and ready at Dunkirk; but the Providence of God disappointed them. To be capable of proving Transactions of this Kind by strict Evidence in the Forms of Law, is not common, nor, in the Nature of the Thing, ordinarily to be expected. But this the Vigilance of the Commons has effectually done, to the Conviction of all well-intentioned Persons, and to the Shame and Confusion of those, who, though they believed, and perhaps knew it themselves, were industrious to propagate a pernicious Incredulity in others.

Thus the Commons have traced and brought down the Series of the Conspiracy to the remarkable Era of July, 1745, when the Eldest Son of the Pretender landed in Moidart, unsupported by any Foreign Troops, unattended, and almost alone.

The appearing Rashness of this Attempt gave Rise to some Apprehensions, some Misgivings, in the Breasts of your Lordship, and your Fellow-Conspirators, proceeding from a Concern, not for the KING, or for your Country, but for your own private Interest and Safety. A French Invasion had been long solicited; a French Force was depended on, to secure you against the just Vengeance of your Native Country; and the Failure of that damped your Hopes, and produced your Expressions of Disappointment. However, such was your Zeal, that, in this rash Enterprize, your Lordship joined; not indeed personally (this you often excused, complaining of your Infirmities), but by Sending, or rather Forcing out your Clan; and committing every other Species of the blackest Treason, which the Articles of Impeachment have charged upon you.

Permit me to stop here a little, and lament the Condition of Part of this United Kingdom; happily United in Interests both Civil and Religious; happily United under the same Gracious Monarch, and the same Publick Policy: And yet the common People, in some of the remote Northern Counties, are still kept in such a State of Bondage to certain of their Fellow-Subjects, who, contrary to all Law, and every true Principle of Government, have erected themselves into Petty Tyrants over them, as to be liable to be compelled into Rebellion against their Lawful Sovereign, under the Peril of Fire and Sword. Astonishing it is, that such a dangerous Error in Government, such a Remain of Barbarism, should have subsisted so long in any Quarter of this Civilized, Well-governed Island: But, since such is the Misfortune, let it be accounted one good Fruit of this Inquiry, that it has appeared in this solemn Manner. The Knowledge of the Disease shews the Way to the Cure; and it calls aloud for a Remedy.

This usurped Power was audaciously made use of over your Clan. It is true, your Lordship's Activity in exerting it rose and fell, in Proportion to the Appearances of the good or bad Success of the Pretender's Cause; But, after the Advantage gained by the Rebels at Preston-Pans, which you vainly called "A Victory not to be paralleled in History," you thought it Time to throw off the Mask; and, with less Caution, to espouse a Party, which, you then hoped, might be espoused with Impunity.

I forbear to enumerate the many Overt Acts of your Treason. It would be tedious to this Assembly, who have heard them so much better from the Witnesses, and from the Recapitulation of the Managers. It would be grievous to your Lordship, if your Heart is, by this Time, touched with any Remorse for your Guilt. But one Thing I cannot help observing upon,---the Excuse you expressly made for this traitorous Conduct, even after you were taken Prisoner; to which you have this Day artfully endeavoured to give a different Turn. Being asked, How you could act such a Part against a Government, from which you had received many Favours? Your Lordship's Answer was, "That it was in Revenge to the Ministry, for their ill Usage of you, in taking away your Commission of Captain of an Independent Company of High-landers." An Excuse almost as false as it was profligate. False, because some of your Treasonable Practices were committed whilst you were possessed of that very Commission. Profligate it was, in the highest Degree. Is Allegiance no Duty? Are Oaths to His Majesty, and His Government, no Obligation upon the Conscience? Is Loyalty to our Lawful Sovereign, and the Love of our Country, to depend on the Enjoyment of extraordinary Favours and Emoluments, which no Man has a Right to; can, in the Nature of Things, be enjoyed but by a Few; and are in the Pleasure of all Governments to confer or deny? A Person actuated by, and avowing, such Principles as these, must be lost to all Sense of Virtue, and of Shame, and of every Natural, as well as Civil, Sanction of Society.

Sorry, very sorry I am, to see this last Reflection so strongly verified by the Proofs against your Lordship. It has appeared, that you used your Paternal Influence over your Eldest Son, a Youth not above the Age of Nineteen, to compel him to go into the Rebellion; and afterwards unnaturally endeavoured to cast the Crime and Reproach of it upon him. If this be true, it is an Impiety which makes one tremble. It is the celebrated Saying of a wise Writer of Antiquity, and shews his perfect Knowledge of Human Nature, "That the Love of our Country includes all other Social Affections." For we see, when that is gone, even the tenderest of all Affections, the Parental, may be extinguished with it.

I have said these things, not with a View to aggravate your Lordship's Crimes, but, as becomes This Place, and This Occasion, to rouse your Mind, which, there is Reason to fear, may have been too much hardened, to a just and deep Sense of your unhappy and dreadful Situation.

Were I to attempt this from Topicks of Religion, I should be at a Loss, whether to apply to you as a Protestant or a Papist. Your Open Profession, your Solemn Oaths, and Publick Actions, speak on one Side: But, if I am to believe the Evidence, your Private Discourse and Declarations testify on the other. I will apply no Suppositions on this Head particularly to your Lordship; but from hence I would draw an instructive Lesson, which well deserves the serious Attention of this Whole Nation; of what important Consequence it is, to preserve not only the Name and outward Form of the Protestant Religion amongst us, but the real Uniform Belief and Practice of it. Indifference to all Religion prepares Men for the External Profession of any; and what may not That lead to? Give me Leave to affirm, before this Great Assembly, that, even abstracted from Religious Considerations, the Protestant Religion ought to be held in the highest Reverence, as the surest Barrier of our Civil Constitution. Ecclesiastical Usurpation seldom fails to end in Civil Tyranny. The present Happy Settlement of the Crown is, in Truth, and not in Name only, THE PROTESTANT SUCCESSION. And the inviolable Preservation of that Wise and Fundamental Law, made since the Revolution, whereby every Papist, or Person marrying a Papist, is absolutely excluded from Inheriting to this Crown, will, in future Times, be a solid Security for our Posterity, not only against the groundless and presumptuous Claim of an Abjured Pretender, and his Descendants, but also to prevent this Kingdom from becoming a Province to some of the great Popish Powers, who have so long watched for the Destruction of our Liberties.

But, to return to your Lordship: Suffer me to exhort you, with great Earnestness, and in great Charity, to deliberate seriously upon your own Case, and to deal impartially with your own Conscience. If, according to the Evidence given at this Bar, you have led a Life of Craft, Disimulation, and Perfidy, consider how that Scene has closed; what Desolation you have thereby endeavoured to bring upon your Country; how fatally it has ended for yourself. Consider, that the Sentence which I am obliged to pronounce, may soon send you to a Tribunal, where no Disguise or Artifice can avail you.

The Sentence of the Law is, and this High Court doth adjudge;

"That you, Simon Lord Lovat, Return to the Prison of the Tower, from whence you came; from thence you must be drawn to the Place of Execution; when you come there, you must be Hanged by the Neck, but not till you are Dead; for you must be cut down Alive; then your Bowels must be taken out, and burnt before your Face; then your Head must be severed from your Body, and your Body divided into Four Quarters; and these must be at the King's Disposal."

And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul!

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I hope your Lordships will not take it amiss, that I should let you know, though it be in a very barbarous Language, both the Affection I had for his late Majesty, and the Service I did for him and his Family. And I must say, I have for that the Testimony of one of the King's Evidence, that I declared my Affection to his present Majesty: And I have Reason so to do; for when he was Regent of these Kingdoms, and his Father was in Hannover, he was so good as to give me a Noli Prosequi for the great Laird of Mac Intosh that was at the Battle of Preston: And when I complained of the Hardships the Duke of Roxburgh put every Day upon me, in an Audience he was pleased to admit me to, in his Closet at Kensington, he was so good as to say, that, if he was King, he would defend me against all my Enemies, not only the Duke of Roxburgh, but all my other Enemies. Now, my Lords, when a Man has but a very few Days, in Appearance, to live, what he says should be relied upon, if there is not immediate Evidence to the contrary. I have shewn your Lordships my Esteem for the illustrious House of Hanover. I have shewn my Attachment for my dear Master the late King, and my Respect for his present Majesty; and therefore all that I have further to say, is most humbly to implore your Lordships Intercession, and to recommend me to his Majesty for Mercy.

Lord High Steward. Have you any thing further to offer?

Lord Lovat. Nothing, my Lords, but that I make the same Prayer to the Honourable the Members and Managers of the House of Commons; and that, I hope, as they have been stout, they will be merciful.

Lord High Steward. Would you offer any thing further?

Lord Lovat. Nothing but to thank your Lordships for your Goodness to me. God bless you all, and I bid you an everlasting Farewell. We shall not meet all in the same Place again, I am sure of that.

Lord High Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take the Prisoner from the Bar.

Which being done, Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, upon his Knee, his Grace stood up uncovered; and, holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, and declared that there was nothing farther to be done by virtue of the present Commission, and pronounced the same to be dissolved; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-Pack, and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the House was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords and others returned in the same Order as they come down.

And the Prisoner was carried back to the Tower of London.

THE which Day compeared Patrick Haldane of Bearcrofts, Esq; his Majesty's Solicitor, and Advocate-Depute, and produced, in presence of the said Lords, a Writ of Recognizance, signed by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, of Date the 23d Day of January last by-pass, which was ordered to be read and recorded; and whereof the Tenor follows.

Middlesex and Westminster.

To wit; Be it remembered, That, upon the 23d of January, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George II. King of Great Britain, &c. came before me, and acknowledged themselves to be severally indebted unto our said Sovereign Lord the King as follows, viz.

Archibald Stewart, of Edinburgh, Merchant, the Sum of £.	3000 0 0
David Scot, of Scotstarvet, in the Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0
James Oswald, of Dunnikier, in the said Shire of Fife, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0
Alexander Campbell, of the Parish of Allhallows-Staining, London, Doctor of Physick, the Sum of	2500 0 0
James Baird, of Downing-street, in the Parish of St. Margaret's Westminster, Esq; the Sum of	2500 0 0

To be levied upon their several Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements and Hereditaments, by way of Recognizance, upon Condition, that if the said Archibald Stewart do personally appear before his Majesty's Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, at the first Sitting of the said Court after the Twentieth Day of March next, then and there to answer to all such Matters as on his Majesty's Behalf shall be objected against him; and also appear from time to time when thereunto required, and not depart the said Court without Leave thereof; and, in the mean time, be of the good Behaviour, then this Recognizance to be void, or else to remain in full Force and Virtue. Signed HOLLES NEWCASTLE.

Immediately after reading whereof, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, Merchant in Edinburgh, and judicially sifted himself in Court before the said Lords, in Terms of and agreeable to the said Writ of Recognizance, and humbly insisted, that thereby the Condition of the said Writ was fulfilled, and the same fell to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person on his Majesty's Behalf ready to insist against him.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Writ of Recognizance was not only for Mr. Stewart's Appearance this Day, but thereafter, from Time to Time, when thereto required; that, having only had occasion lately to see the said Writ, he was not just now ready to insist in any Matters on his Majesty's Behalf against the said Archibald Stewart, as therein mentioned; and moved their Lordships would appoint a farther Time for his Appearance again.

Mr. Stewart, without making any Reply, submitted his Case to the Court.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the said Writ of Recognizance, and above Debate, they continue the Diet, for the said Archibald Stewart's Compearance, to Monday the eighth Day of June next, and ordain him to sift himself personally in Court that Day, without Prejudice to the Lord Advocate to insist against and prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner, in Behalf of his Majesty, if he shall see Cause.

Lord Strichen Præses.

THE said Day, in obedience to the foregoing Order, compeared the said Archibald Stewart, and sifted himself in Court, when he and Messieurs Lockhart, Ferguson, Home and Stewart, Advocates, his Procurators, insisted, That, in obedience to the last Order of Court, in consequence of the Recognizance therein mentioned, he had appeared a second Time; that, as he pled first, so he now did, that the Condition of the said Writ of Recognizance was fulfilled; and that the same ought to be voided, and he dismissed, if there was no Person yet ready to insist against him on his Majesty's Behalf, which he had Reason to believe was the Case.

VOL. IX.

To which Mr. Patrick Haldane, his Majesty's Advocate-Depute, made Answer: That the Lord Advocate, who, at the last Diet, attended the Service of his Country in Parliament, was, contrary to Expectation, still detained, although he intended to have been in Scotland long before now, when he could and would have proceeded to bring Mr. Stewart to Trial in the ordinary Way: That, for his Part, as Advocate-Depute, he had no such Instructions as he could move in that Matter, either just now, or by a proper Process; and all he was instructed to ask of their Lordships, was a Delay of eight Days, which could be no Prejudice either to Mr. Stewart or his Cautioners, and against which Time he was pretty well assured his Majesty's Advocate would be present, and shew Cause why the Writ of Recognizance should continue, and satisfy Mr. Stewart how or when he would be brought to Trial.

It was replied for Mr. Stewart, that he expected, if there was any thing to be objected to him on behalf of his Majesty, considering the long Space of Time intervening betwixt this and his former Appearance, he would have been brought under some Prosecution for it ere now; that the Absence of my Lord Advocate, however necessary, and his Depute's not being properly instructed, was to Mr. Stewart or his Cautioners nothing to the Purpose; that Mr. Stewart's Appearance, now and before, and nothing objected to him, was, as to his Cautioners, a Liberation of their Bail, which was so very great as must appear to be a Hardship if it should last any longer; and therefore craved that he might be dismissed, and the Bond voided.

It was replied by Mr. Haldane, that the Delay sought was so small, as plainly shewed that there was no Intention of putting a Hardship on any Person; and, without farther Argument, he doubted not but the Court would continue Mr. Stewart's farther Compearance, in Terms of, and agreeable to the Writ of Recognizance, till Monday next the 15th Instant.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above Debate, they continue the Diet for the said Archibald Stewart's farther Compearance to Monday the 15th Day of June Instant, and ordain him to sift himself personally in Court that Day, without Prejudice to the Lord Advocate to insist against and prosecute the said Archibald Stewart sooner, if he shall see Cause.

Lord Strichen Præses:

THE said Day compeared the said Archibald Stewart, in obedience to the last Order of Court, and sifted himself agreeable to his Writ of Recognizance, and craved the said Writ might be declared void; and he dismissed, in case the Lord Advocate was not yet ready to insist against him, as, if he was, he had at least got no Notice of it, nor so much as of any Time for his Trial.

The Lord Advocate thereupon appeared, and represented the former Delays were not owing to him, but, in some measure, to Mr. Stewart's own Friends, who applied to him at London for a Delay, till he should come to Scotland and be present himself; which truly was the Reason of his not raising and executing a criminal Process against Mr. Stewart to the last Diet he appeared. That, to shew his Lordship had no Inclination to give Mr. Stewart any unnecessary Delay, he now was ready to insist, and for that End gave in, and presented to the Lords, a Bill signed by him, craving Warrant for criminal Letters against the said Archibald Stewart, for the Crimes and Misdemeanours therein mentioned, and fixing the Diet for his Trial to the third of July next.

Thereafter Mr. Lockhart moved, in Behalf of the Cautioners for Mr. Stewart, that the Writ of Recognizance should be voided; and for Mr. Stewart, in place thereof, that he was willing to find new Bail for any Sum the Lords should appoint and judge reasonable, as the Bail he was presently under was by far too extravagant.

To which the Lord Advocate made answer: That the Writ of Recognizance, on which Mr. Stewart was liberate, was still in force, and behaved to continue, as the Cautioners and Mr. Stewart not only became bound that he should appear such a Day, but from Time to Time thereafter, as the Lords should appoint, and not to depart, without Leave, out of the Court; that this Bail was taken by, and given to one of the highest Authority, and that it must necessarily continue, agreeable to the said Writ, till he be dismissed.

Whereupon Mr. Stewart himself, and Mr. Elliot his Procurator, waved the Motion made by Mr. Lockhart anent renewing the Bail, and agreed that the former stand good, and he had no Objection why the next Diet of Compearance might not be the third of July next.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the above Debate, they continue the Diet, for the said Archibald Stewart's farther Compearance, till Friday the third Day of July next to come. Signed

ALEX. FRASER. I. P. D.

Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel.

Indicted and accused at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate for his Majesty's Interest, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty, and Misbehaviour in Offices and Places of publick Trust, and the Violation of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, in manner at Length mentioned in the criminal Libel raised against him thereanent, making mention, That Whereas, by the Laws of this and all other well governed Realms, all Neglects of Duty, and Misbehaviours of Persons employed in Offices and Places of publick Trust; and all Violations of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, are Crimes of a high Nature, and severely punishable; and the public Justice of the Realm requireth a vigorous Prosecution of such Offenders, especially when such Neglects of Duty and Misbehaviours are incurred by the chief Magistrate of any great or considerable City, in a Time of publick Danger, and open Rebellion; and particularly by an Act made in the fourteenth Parliament of King James the Second of Scotland, Chapter seventy-sixth, intituled, The Punition of negligent Officers, 'It is ordained and determined, That if any of the King's Officers or Sheriffs, Mayors, Bailies, Crowners, Serjeants, Provost of Burghs, and their Ministers both to Land and to Burgh, be found faulty or negligent in the Execution of their Offices, and it may be lawfully proved on him, or notoriously kend; if the said Office pertains to him in Fee and Heritage, he shall tyne his Office, and the Profit thereof, for an Year and a Day, and to be punished by the King in his Person and Goods after the Quantity of his Trespas; and if his Office pertains to him not in Fee and Heritage, he shall tyne his Office for all the Times he has it, and to be punished in his Person, after the Quantity of his Trespas, at the King's Will.' Yet true it is and of Verity, That the said Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Provost of the said City, is guilty, Actor, or Art and Part of the said Crimes, or one or other of them, aggravated as aforesaid; In so far as he, being Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, when a most bold, desperate, wicked, and unprovoked Rebellion was raised and carried on against his Majesty within this Realm, by a large Body of armed Traytors, headed by the eldest Son of the Pretender to his Crown, and assisted with Troops and Money from his Enemies abroad, and, at such a Juncture, it being his Duty, as the chief Magistrate of the said City, and the King's Lieutenant therein, having Authority to command the military Force of whatever Kind within the City, to have exerted himself with Fidelity, Vigilance and Zeal, for opposing the Progress of the Rebellion by all lawful Methods in his Power, and particularly for preserving the City intrusted to his Care from falling under the Power of the Rebels, or becoming a Prey to them, he, the said Archibald Stewart, was grossly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his said Office and Duty on so important an Occasion, in manifest Violation of the Trust and Duty of his Office: and particularly was thus guilty on the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Days of September, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, and upon several other Days and Times in the said Month of September, and the Month of August preceding, within the said City of Edinburgh, where he was resident for the Time. And moreover, the said Archibald Stewart was not only faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and notoriously known to have been such, but was guilty of Malversations and counteracting the Duty of his Office, in such an Exigency, in many Instances, and particularly, amongst others, in these following: First, That whereas the Preservation of the City of Edinburgh, from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, was of great Importance to that City itself, and to the King and the Kingdom in general, and the Care of it especially incumbent on the Lord Provost for the Time being, and ought to have been looked after with the utmost Attention, Zeal and Vigour, in such an Exigency, as when the Rebels got to the Southward of the Body of the King's Troops under the Command of Sir John Cope, of which Advices came to Edinburgh in the latter End of August One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, from which there was Reason to fear that the Taking of that City would be attempted by the Rebels, and to hope that the King's Army might soon after come to its Relief: Yet, in these Circumstances, he, the said Archibald Stewart, then chief Magistrate, and sole military Governor of that City, did nothing of his own accord towards providing effectually for the Defence thereof; and, on the contrary, every Measure for that Purpose proposed, and pressed by the honest Zeal of the then Magistrates and Council, and of many of the Citizens and Inhabitants, instead of being heartily encouraged and promoted by him the Provost, were by him thwarted and retarded, or else absolutely refused or declined; and in this Manner it was that he received a Proposition made to him in the latter End of August One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, for raising a Regiment of one thousand Men, by voluntary Subscription, for Defence of the City; against which he formed Objections on account of the Expence, and affected Doubts concerning the Legality thereof. And, Secondly, He treated in like manner another Application made to him in the Beginning of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, by a Number of Gentlemen or Citizens, for Leave to associate themselves under his chief Command, as Volunteers, for the Defence of the City, and Service of the Government; and, after his Objections to the Legality of that Measure were over-ruled, he would not suffer it to be published or given out that he heartily approved, but barely that he acquiesced in that Measure; and yet his Reluctancy or Aversion to it, or Uneasiness under it, continued to discover itself on frequent Occasions, and particularly by the cold, if not the rude Manner in which he behaved towards those Volunteers, consisting of a Number of very respectable Gentlemen and Burgeses, when he went to a public Meeting of them, in the New Church Isle of Edinburgh, to name their Captains. Thirdly, That, in like manner, through the Misbehaviour of the said Archibald Stewart, when certain Repairs of the City Walls, and other Works for making it defensible for some Time, against an Enemy who had no Artillery, and were very unskilful in making Sieges, had been proposed and advised, amongst others, by the now deceased and famous Mr. Colin Mac Laurin, Professor of Mathematics in the College of Edinburgh, and were ordered by the Council of the City of Edinburgh to be made, the Execution whereof was chiefly incumbent on the Lord Provost for the Time being, yet the same was carried on very slowly and imperfectly, notwithstanding frequent Remonstrances and Complaints made by divers of the faithful and zealous Inhabitants; and, as late as Sunday the Fifteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, when the Rebels were marching to, and were come within a few Miles of the City of Edinburgh, he the said Archibald Stewart refused to give Orders for loading the Cannon planted upon the City Walls, and, about the same Time, he refused to apply for some of the Sailors from on Board one of the King's Ships of War for managing of those Cannon, when he could not otherways be provided of fit Persons to act as Gunners. Fourthly, That, about the same Time, he the said Archibald Stewart refused to listen to, or to follow several salutary Propositions that were made and pressed by well-affected Inhabitants, for the greater Safety and better Defence of the City; such as, that the Trained Bands, consisting of a promiscuous Number of Burgeses, whereof many were known to be disaffected, should be laid aside, as had been practised during the Rebellion in the Year One thousand seven hundred and fifteen, and that Arms should only be trusted in the Hands of such as were known to be well-affected, and that a general Search for Arms should be made within the City, and that a Number of the ablest bodied Men of the Tradesmen's Servants should be employed and armed for assisting to defend the City when it should be attacked, upon the Encouragement of a Guinea to be given to each of them; towards defraying which Expence an Offer was made to the said Archibald Stewart, on the Part of the Volunteers, to have raised or advanced the sum of Five hundred Pounds Sterling. Fifthly, That the said Archibald Stewart misbehaved himself in like manner, in respect of the Succours that were brought at the Time aforesaid from the Country in the Neighbourhood of Edinburgh, consisting of Numbers of well-affected and zealous Subjects, under the Conduct of Gentlemen of known Loyalty and good Affection, who came and voluntarily offered their Service to assist in defending the City of Edinburgh, without any Fee or Reward, upon that dangerous and pressing Occasion, the Approach of the Rebels to that City; but these very seasonable and laudable Offers were by the said Archibald Stewart very coldly received and ill-treated: For Instance, he proposed to Sir Robert Dickson of Inveresk, who came to Edinburgh upon Sunday the fifteenth Day of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, from Musselburgh, with about One hundred and fifty Volunteers, to offer their Services for the Purposes aforesaid, that these Men should enlist themselves for three Months as Soldiers in the Edinburgh Regiment; a Proposition which, instead of being calculated sincerely to provide for the better Defence of the City, could be no otherways received by those Volunteers, than as an Insult and Discouragement to their Zeal, who, being Tradesmen or Husbandmen, did not mean to leave their Occupations, and enlist themselves as Soldiers for Hire, but had bravely offered to serve gratis in the then present Exigency, which could not last above a few Days, before the End of which the City of Edinburgh must either have been relieved or surrendered. Sixthly, That, on the Morning of Monday the Sixteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, the said Archibald Stewart received a Message from the Camp of the Rebels, by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, that the City of Edinburgh would be ill treated by them, unless it should be readily or speedily surrendered; being a Message to the same Effect with that contained in a Letter from the Pretender's Son, bearing Date from his Camp that same Day, addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh, and which Letter was thereafter that same Day delivered; and yet he the said Archibald Stewart did not immediately commit the said Andrew Alves to Prison, for bringing or delivering to him such Message, neither did he give Notice to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, that he had received such Message. Seventhly, That upon the same Monday, the Sixteenth of September One thousand seven hundred and forty-five, about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, he received a Petition from certain of the Inhabitants of the City who opposed the Defence thereof, and insisted to have a general Meeting called of all the principal Inhabitants, to consult what was proper to be done, and he accordingly held and presided in a Meeting in the New Church Isle in the Afternoon of that same Day, upon the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which was the appointed Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their Alarm-Post; the Consequence of which was, that few or none of those Volunteers, who consisted of a Number of the most substantial and best affected Burgeses, were or could be present at that general Meeting: In which Meeting, as every one who had a mind got Access, there were Numbers of Persons present of known Disaffection to his Majesty's Government; and thus, by ill Design upon their Part, and by the Timidity of others who were thus assembled in a tumultuous Manner, and a very improper Council with which to take Measures in a Time of immediate and pressing Danger, the general Cry was given for surrendering the City, and giving up all Thoughts of making a Defence: And the said Archibald Stewart thus held and took the Sense of this Meeting, notwithstanding that before he went to it, it was very well known that the Rebels were ill armed, and that an Offer had been made to him, in Aid of the other Forces with which the City was provided, to send one hundred out of two Regiments of Dragoons in the King's Service, or as many of the Dragoons of those those Regiments as he should desire, to assist in defending the City; but he refused to give his Consent or Authority for receiving any of these Dragoons, though he had requested such Party of Dragoons, about an Hour or two before in that same Day, by a Writing under his Hand, addressed to Lieutenant General Joshua Gues, then in the Castle of Edinburgh. And moreover, at this Meeting there was brought in, and delivered to the said Archibald Stewart, the Letter above-mentioned from the Pretender's Son; immediately, or soon after the receiving whereof, that Meeting was dissolved, and he, with others of the Magistrates and Council, withdrew to the Council-Chamber, where (which is the eighth Article charged upon him the said Archibald Stewart) he caused or suffered the said Letter from the Pretender's Son to be publicly read, and moved or agreed that an Answer should be given to it; which was accordingly sent, first by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council: All which Intercourse was in him the said Archibald Stewart, then Lord Provost, the more criminal, that any Danger or Necessity that might be alleged, in order to avoid the same being punishable as High-Treason, was owing in great Measure to his own Backwardness to discharge his Duty, by taking all the proper Precautions against such Danger, with that Fidelity and Vigour which he owed, by his Allegiance and his Station, to the City of Edinburgh, and to the King and Kingdom. Ninthly, That all this while he the said Archibald Stewart refused or neglected, though frequently applied to for that Purpose, to give any Orders to the Volunteers of the City of Edinburgh, who had been long standing upon the Street under Arms, how or in what Manner they should dispose of themselves, and employ these Arms, or how they should dispose of the Arms, if they were not to be used or employed for the Defence of the City, for which they had been first taken up; and, upon such his Refusal or Neglect, the said Volunteers took and executed the Resolution to carry back their Arms to the Magazine in the Castle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent the same from falling into the Hands of the Rebels. Tenthly, That, on the Evening of the same Monday the sixteenth of September One Thousand seven Hundred and Forty-five, he the said Archibald Stewart refused or declined to give his Licence or Authority for a Party sent by the said Lieutenant-General Gues, or by Lieutenant-General George Preston, Governor of the Castle of Edinburgh, to remove or spike up the Cannon that were then planted upon the City-Walls; and, about the same Time, he the said Archibald Stewart gave Orders to Thomas Dalziel, one of the Captains of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, whose Turn it was to be on Duty that Night, to keep Guard with the usual Complement in peaceable Times, of One-third of the City-Guard, or Company, and no more; and, about the same Time, he the said Archibald Stewart gave Orders to the Parties of the Trained-Bands of the City of Edinburgh, who had been upon Guard at the several Gates of the City, to quit their Posts, and to dispose of their Arms in the Parliament-House, or some other Place or Places, where they must be exposed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, as soon as they should enter or become Masters of the City. And, Eleventhly, In the same Evening of the sixteenth of September, One Thousand seven Hundred and Forty-five, it was proposed and urged in Council, where the said Archibald Stewart was present, and presided, That the whole City Arms, being in Number about twelve hundred Firelocks and Bayonets, should be lodged and secured within the Castle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent their falling into the Hands of the Rebels; but he the said Archibald Stewart refused or declined to give any Order for that Purpose, neither in Fact were the City-Arms so lodged and secured, but were seized by the Rebels upon their entering the City the Day following, who came to Edinburgh so imperfectly armed, that the Supply of Arms which they thus received, appears to have been one principal Cause of the Disaster that befel the King's Forces near Preston-Pans, on the twenty-first Day of the same Month of September, One Thousand seven Hundred and Forty-five. And, lastly, By Occasion or Means of the several Instances above-recited, and other Instances during the Time above-mentioned, upon one or other of the Days of the Months of August or September, One Thousand seven Hundred and Forty-five, of the Misbehaviour of the said Archibald Stewart within the City of Edinburgh, of which he was then Lord Provost, it came to be very notoriously known, that he was highly faulty and negligent in the Execution of his Office, and to be farther violently suspected and believed, amongst the King's faithful Subjects in that City, that he the said Archibald Stewart was secretly in the Interest of the Pretender, by reason of the Uniformity of his Behaviour from the Beginning to the End of these Transactions, discovering a constant Unwillingness or Backwardness to provide for, or heartily prosecute the Measures that were in a Manner forced upon him, in order to the Defence of that City, at a Time when, if he had observed a contrary Conduct, there was at least a high Probability, that the City might have been preserved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels: And in Fact the same did fall into their Hands, in a very strange and suspicious Manner, by a Party of the Rebels entering the City at the Netherbow Port, early in the Morning of Tuesday the seventeenth of September, One thousand seven Hundred and Forty-five, when that Port was guarded with nothing more than a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, and was opened to suffer a Hackney-Coach to go out, which had just returned from bringing back the second Deputation sent by the said Archibald Stewart, and other Magistrates and Councillors of Edinburgh, to the Pretender's Son: All which Misfortunes were, in great Measure, owing to the Misconduct of the said Archibald Stewart, and served to bring a heavy Calamity on the City of Edinburgh, and the Kingdom in general; at least, at the Time and Place aforesaid, he, the said Archibald Stewart, being Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, was highly faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, at a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion against his Majesty. And for proving that the said Archibald Stewart was guilty as aforesaid, there would be produced against him, by Way of Evidence, besides very credible Witnesses, certain Documents in Writing, which should be lodged in the Hands of the Clerks to the Court of Justiciary, that he might see the same, and whereof a List should be delivered to him, along with the List of Witnesses to be adduced against him. All which enormous Neglects of Duty, and Misbehaviours, or Part thereof, or his being Art and Part of the same, being found proven against the said Archibald Stewart by the Verdict of an Assize, before the Lords Justice-General, Justice-Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, he, the said Archibold Stewart, ought to be punished with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others to be guilty of the like in Time coming.

The Pannel having, agreeable to a Clause contained in an Act past the last Session of Parliament, intituled, An Act for taking away and abolishing the heritable Jurisdictions in that Part of Great Britain called Scotland, &c. given in to the Clerk in Writing a signed Account of the Facts relating to the Matters charged upon him in the said Libel, with the Heads of such Objections or Defences subjoined, as he was advised to make at his Trial;

And the said Libel being this Day openly read, and full Debate thereupon, and upon the said signed Account of Matters of Fact, and Heads of Defences given in for the Pannel, in Presence of the Pannel, Court and Jury, The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, in respect of the Importance and Difficulty that may occur in this Case, and by virtue of the Power reserved to them in the said Act of Parliament, ordain both Parties to give in Informations to their Lordships, and the Clerks of Court; the Pursuers to give in their Informations against Monday the twentieth instant, at six o'Clock at Night, and the Procurators for the Pannel to give in theirs against Friday thereafter, the twenty-fourth instant, at the same Hour; and, at the particular Desire of both Parties, ordain the Clerks of Court to record the said Informations in the Books of Adjournal, in place of the Minute directed to be made up and entered in the said Books by the Act of Parliament; and continue the Diet in this Cause, and the said Archibald Stewart his Compareance, upon his Bond of Recognizance formerly recorded, till Friday the thirty-first of July current, at Four of the Clock Afternoon, in this Place; and ordain Parties, Witnesses and Affizes, then to attend, each under the Pains of Law.

July 20, 1747.

INFORMATION for his MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majesty's Interest, Pursuer,

AGAINST

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel or Defender.

THE Libel, at the Pursuer's Instance, against Mr. Stewart, late Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, charges him the Pannel with being guilty of very high Crimes and Misdemeanours, in having many ways acted contrary to his Duty, when he was chief Magistrate of the City of Edinburgh, in the Months of August and September 1745, a Time of publick Danger and open Rebellion, headed by the eldest Son of the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown, assisted with Troops and Money from his Majesty's Enemies abroad; at which Juncture the Pannel, by his Misbehaviour, suffered the City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon and Arms therein, as well as other Supplies of various Sorts, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels, in manifest Violation of the Trust and Duty of his Office. This is the general Charge against the Pannel, which is in the Libel more particularly specified, by a Deduction of many particular Instances of Misbehaviour alleged against him in Support of that general Charge, which Particulars it is unnecessary here to repeat; but for them the Pursuer begs Leave to refer to the Libel itself.

The Pannel having been duly served with a Copy of this Libel, did first of all, in pursuance of the late Act of Parliament for abolishing the heritable Jurisdictions in Scotland, &c. give in to the Clerk of Court, the Day before his Trial was to come on, signed by one of his Counsel, his Account of the Facts relating to the Matters charged upon him, together with the Heads of certain Objections and Defences which he makes to the Libel, and therein says, 'That he is not guilty of all or any of the Neglects or Misbehaviours laid to his Charge, and that there is no Ground for supposing him disaffected to the Government, but much to the contrary; and, in particular, he avers, that his Conduct, upon Occasion and at the Time of the late Rebellion, will, upon Proof, afford the strongest Evidence of his real Attachment to the Government;' and farther says, upon the several Matters charged against him,

In the first Article, 'That he thwarted no Measures that were proposed that seemed legal and expedient; that where any Doubts or Difficulties occurred, either as to the Legality or Expediency of any Particular proposed, some of which seemed rather to be intended as a Snare, he delivered his Opinion with a becoming Freedom, submitted his Reasons to the Council or Committee, and heartily went into whatever they resolved, after taking Advice, in Points of greatest Importance, with those who bore the highest Offices, both Civil and Military, that were at the Time in this Town.'

As to the second Article of the Indictment, Mr. Stewart says, 'That the Proposal made for associating a Body of Volunteers was a Point of so much Delicacy, as must justify him for desiring Advice as to the Legality of what was thereby proposed. That so soon as the Magistrates found they could safely go into the Proposal, the Lord Provost readily acquiesced, and shewed a Willingness to have it carried into Execution; and that, upon every Occasion, he behaved towards them with the utmost Civility.'

As to the third Article, 'The Magistrates of Edinburgh, with the rest of a Committee appointed by the Council to provide for the Defence of the Town, readily listened, and cheerfully received every Proposal that appeared calculated for the Defence of the Town, in which nothing was by them delayed; and the Execution of these Matters was committed to proper Persons, chosen and appointed for that Purpose by the Council and Committee. He does farther say, That the Guns were charged in the proper time, and all Endeavours used to supply the Town with proper Gunners.

The Provost does in like manner say, That what is loosely charged in this Article of the Indictment, of his having refused the Proposals of those who were zealously affected, is not well understood: Every Conversation was freighted with a Proposal, many of them contradictory, and some of them from sinister Motives; such particularly was the Proposal mentioned in this Article, which, if sincerely meant, ought to have been proposed in Council, which never was done.

As to the fifth Article, The Provost thinks he behaved kindly to every Man who came, or pretended that he came, to the Assistance of the Town; and denies the Instance charged in the Libel, nor can he imagine that it was, or can be presumed an Affront, although he had offered the putting Sir Robert Dickson's Volunteers in the Way of receiving Pay, supposing that to have been the Fact.

As to the sixth Article, Mr. Stewart apprehends there can be no Crime in it; for he did communicate the Message by Mr. Alues, immediately after he received it, to the Gentlemen of the Council, who were of Opinion, that the Message delivered by Mr. Alues ought not to be divulged, for fear of intimidating the Inhabitants; and soon after he waited of the then Lord Advocate, to impart that Affair, and get his Advice what ought to be done, and, conform to the Advice then given, committed the said Andrew Alues, so soon as he understood that it was lawful and proper, and there was no criminal Delay in committing him.

As to the seventh Article, Mr. Stewart says, That the Meeting in the New Church Isle was not in consequence of any Petition delivered him by the Inhabitants, which Petition was never once under Consideration of the Committee, nor did he order the Alarm-Bell to be rung to convocate the Inhabitants. Denies that he ever refused to admit any Dragoons into the Town; but, on the contrary, he expressed a Willingness to receive them, providing they were sent.

As to the eighth Article, Mr. Stewart refuses that he received or gave Orders to read any Letters from the Pretender, or that he gave Orders in consequence of any such Letter; any Deputation that might have been sent, was the Effect of the Fears of the Inhabitants, who had more of the Government of the Town at that time than the Magistrates.

As to the ninth Article, The Volunteers carried their Arms to the Castle without applying to Mr. Stewart for his Orders, and before he understood the Town to be in a defenceless State.

As to the tenth Article, Mr. Stewart says, That it was the Sense of the Committee the Provost should give no Orders; and he believes it will appear, that the Messenger from Mr. Gust was told he was at Liberty to spike up the Cannon, if the General thought proper; nay, he farther believes the Messenger was farther told, that he should be shewn where the Cannon were. Mr. Stewart does not remember that Captain Dalziel was ordered to have but a Third of his Guard on Duty, but believes that the whole Guard at that time were not in a Condition to do Duty, after the Fatigue they had previously undergone; the Inhabitants had before this time resolved not to stand upon their Defence; the Provost remembers nothing of the Orders said to have been given to the Trained-Bands, but believes the contrary will be proven.

As to the eleventh Article, the Provost repeats the first Part of his Answer to the preceding Article, and says, That if any of the City-Arms fell into the Hands of the Rebels, it must have proceeded from various unavoidable Causes, but cannot be imputed to any Fault of Mr. Stewart.

As to the twelfth Article, Mr. Stewart is confident there must appear, upon his Part, a zealous Attachment to the Interest of the Government, by the Uniformity of his Conduct from the Commencement of the Rebellion, until the Time that the Town fell unhappily into the Rebels Hands; for such is and must be the natural Construction of his unwearied Application to every Part of his Duty, and upon considering the Proposals made by him in Council, with the Directions given to those that acted under him.

From this Account of the Provost's Conduct, in relation to the Matters charged upon him, his Defences against the Libel are:

1^{mo}. That the Whole of the Charge is laid in a Manner too loose and general to be past to the Knowledge of an Assize.

2^{do}. That the Facts therein contained are either misrepresented, or in their Nature not criminal.

3^{io}. That no Error in point of Judgment, if any thing of that kind shall appear, ought to be made the Foundation of a criminal Prosecution, especially that he was only one of a Committee, and acted by their Direction.

Before the Pursuer proceed to recite the Arguments that were offered on behalf of the Pannel, in Support of these Defences, when the Trial came on in the Court of Justiciary on Monday the 13th current, together with the Replies made on the Part of the Pursuer to these Defences, he shall here, for the better understanding of the true Merits of the Case, first of all briefly set forth, without any Argument, the principal Facts which occurred at and about the Time libelled, such as he believes can be proved to be true, either by Authentick Writings, or by parole Evidence.

[23d August 1745. Council Record.] The Lord Provost produced in Council a Letter from one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by Direction of the Lords Justices, bearing Date 13th August 1745, giving him Notice, That they had received Intelligence that the Pretender's Son was already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, and recommending it to him the Lord Provost to exert his Care and Vigilance on this Occasion, and make use of such Precautions as he should judge necessary for preserving the publick Peace within the City of Edinburgh. And produced also a Copy of his Answer to that Letter, bearing Date 17th of August, promising, inter alia, not to sit down in Security, but to keep a watchful Eye, in order to prevent, as far as possible, every thing that might disturb the Peace of this City; of which Answer the Council approved.

The same Day the Council resolved to levy and raise the Number of thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, and recommended to the Lord Provost and Magistrates to direct and ordain the Captains and Subalterns of the Trained-Bands to make up full Lists of the Persons belonging to their several Companies, and to report the same to the Magistrates against Wednesday then next.

At the same time another Order was made, for directing the Constables of the City, to make out Lists of all the Inhabitants and Residents within their several Bounds and Districts, and that they be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen, from Time to Time, to come within this City, and lodge within their several Districts; and that all Inn-keepers, Stablers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, should from Time to Time, and as oft as any Strangers shall lodge with them, give in to the Captain of the City-Guard, a Note of their Names and Designations at their Arrival, and of the Time of their Departure from thence, and order the Captain of the Guard to report to the Magistrates in Writing, every Morning, Lists of the Particulars that should be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

[Tuesday, 27th August 1745.] These Resolutions were reported by the Lord Provost, and the other Magistrates, with the Conveener of the Trades, to a Meeting of substantial and well-affected Burgesses, which it had been proposed to summon to give Advice on the present Occasion. This Proposal was made to the Lord Provost on the Saturday preceding, being the 24th of that Month, by a Citizen of Edinburgh, who had been some time a Magistrate, and had been commissioned by other well-affected Citizens to propose such Meeting to the Provost, as had been formerly practised on important Occasions, and which he represented as what they judged necessary at this Time, in order to take Measures for putting the City in a Posture of Defence. This Proposition the Provost received at first with a Sneer or Laugh; but, upon the other's pressing him, as being the Opinion and the Wish of many substantial Burgesses, and what had been formerly practised on the like Occasion, the Provost at last consented that there should be such Meeting; but said it could not be that Day, being Saturday, as many of the Burghers would be out of Town; and accordingly it was not held till the Tuesday following.

At this Meeting, which was held in the New Church Isle at Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, consisting of a great Number of the most respectful Burgesses, of undoubted Loyalty to his Majesty, they unanimously approved of the Steps already taken, and offered their Advice as to the farther Steps to be taken, and particularly That the City should be forthwith put in a Posture of Defence, and a Body of Men raised and armed for the Defence thereof and the Service of the Government. The former of these could be of little Use without the latter; and to the latter the Provost objected, that the same would be treasonable or illegal, without special Warrant from the Crown. They replied, That if a Warrant was necessary, That might be applied for and obtained. Then the Provost said, That, supposing they should get a Warrant, he doubted much if Money could be raised by Subscription for paying them. To which last Objection it was answered by some Citizens of considerable Wealth and Credit there present, That they were ready to undertake and oblige themselves to find Money to pay a Regiment for three Months. Upon this it was resolved, that a Committee should be named, out of the Council and of the other Burgesses, to consult with and take the Advice of the Lord Justice-Clerk, and such of the other Judges as could be found in Town, and his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor, with regard to what farther Steps the Magistrates and Council and Community could legally take for preserving the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the Designs of the Rebels; and next Day the Council named their Committee accordingly; the Result of which was, that Application was made to his Majesty, in order to remove all Doubts, for his special Warrant and Licence to raise such Regiment.

[Saturday, August 31st, 1745.] Advice was received at Edinburgh, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, instead of marching directly to the Rebels, as he had proposed, and was expected, had, upon his March at Dalwinnie, the Place where the Fort-Augustus and Inverness Roads meet, marched forward towards Inverness, whereby the Rebels were now got to the southward of the King's Army, when there was no Force left to oppose their marching southward where they should think fit, which gave no small Alarm to the Cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and all the Country to the southward of the Rivers of Forth and Clyde.

[Monday, September 2.] The Council of Edinburgh ordered the Town-Guard to be augmented to the full Number of 126 Men, Officers, Sergeants, and Drums included.

[Eodem die. The decess Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Accounts from the North becoming more and more unfavourable, above twenty Gentlemen of known good Affection to his Majesty and the Government, met at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, and agreed to apply to the Lord Provost, that he would give Orders for putting the Town in as good a State of Defence as possible with all Expedition. It was complained of in this Meeting, that an Application which had been made the Week before to his Lordship had not met with due Encouragement, but that the Persons who waited on his Lordship, and their Zeal, had been ridiculed, and made the Subject of insipid Jokes. The Company (however) resolved, that, whatever Discouragements they might meet with from those whose Duty it was to have animated them, they should meet frequently, and promote, to the utmost of their Power, whatever may tend to the Defence of the Town: In the mean time they appointed two of their Number, a Gentleman who had formerly been a Bailly, and Mr. Mac Laurin, to wait on the Provost next Morning, with a general Instruction to beg he would see to the Defence of the Town, and offer their Assistance; and three particular Instructions, first, That he would order making Moulds for Bullets, it having been found on Trial that all in the Shops had been bought up of late by Cadies, (or Link Boys) who had been sent for them. 2^{dly}. That the Sluice of the North Loch, by which the Water issues from it, should be shut and secured, that it might fill up. 3^{dly}. That they should propose to his Lordship the making a Distinction betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection, and such as were suspected, when he came to intrust them with the Town's Arms, and and take proper Measures that the City should not be in Danger from within, as (had been taken) in 1715.

Lord Provost did give a satisfactory Answer to the two first of these, but as to the third, he did not give the Satisfaction desired; but, after a good deal of Reasoning, he said, That, if the Town came to be attacked, he would so far make a Distinction as to intrust the Town's Arms with the most substantial Burghers; he said, That, if a thousand Men had a mind to get into this Town, he could not see how he could hinder them. In answer to this, the Number of Trades-Lads in Edinburgh, of the Gentlemen who would associate to save the Town, the Unskillfulness the Highlanders had always shewn in attacking Stone-Walls, their Want of Artillery, and being ill-armed, with the Assistance that would be got from the Dragoons, in all Probability, were urged: It was insisted, our doing something was requisite to save the Reputation of the Town, to divert the Enemy from coming this Way, and to raise a Spirit in the Country.

To this he answered, That, to pretend to do when we could do little, was to expose us to Ridicule. Other discouraging Expressions were used; but, at the End, he said he would be glad of Advice from sensible Burghers, and have regard to it.

[Thursday, Sept. 5th.] Little material past till September the 5th, when the same Company, with some Addition of other Gentlemen, met at the same Place; and now the Danger appearing more imminent, they entered into an Association, as Volunteers, to serve for the Defence of the City at the Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes, under the Direction of the Lord Provost. This was signed by all present, and by a hundred before Twelve the next Day. They appointed some of their Number to present this to the Lord Provost, to desire they might be allowed to chuse their Officers, and that he would apply to General Gust for Arms to them: They were likewise ordered to intreat that the Parapet of the Town-Wall might be cleared, which, in many Places, had been stopp'd up with Stone and Lime to prevent smuggling; that Stairs should be made for getting up to it at proper Distances; that Cannon should be got from the Ships to be placed on the Flanks and Gates.

This Spirit for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence was so generally prevalent amongst the well-affected, and even the least warlike Part of the Inhabitants, that, of this Date, a Representation to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council, was signed by the Principal and Professor of Divinity, and Twelve more of the Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, of whom the total Number is Sixteen, so that three only were absent or wanting; which Representation sets forth, that they have seen and considered a Petition to their Lordship and Honours, subscribed by a considerable Number of the Inhabitants of this City, well-affected to his Majesty's Person and Government, praying, that the City may be put in a proper Posture of Defence against the common Enemy; that they, the Ministers of Edinburgh, judged it their Duty to testify their hearty Approbation of such Design, and their firm Resolution to promote the same in their Sphere and Station, and thereby engage cheerfully to contribute for defraying the necessary Expence with their Fellow-Citizens.

The Ministers were as good as their Word as to this Article; for, out of their moderate Stipends, they joined in subscribing for the Pay of one hundred Men out of the thousand proposed to be raised.

The Lord Provost, however, found also considerable Difficulties as to the Legality of this Measure, which was pressed upon him, of raising the Volunteers, and did not give way to it until he had first one signed Opinion of his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor, 'That it was lawful for the Magistrates to authorize the Subscribers, and other well-affected Inhabitants, to take up Arms in Defence of the City, and Support of the Government.' And the Provost, it seems, not being fully satisfied with this Opinion, there was subjoined to it, and signed by the same Gentlemen, a farther Opinion, [Eodem die, Sept. 6th.] 'That it was lawful, and not treasonable, for the Magistrates to comply with the Desire of the said Petition of the Volunteers.'

[Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Lord Provost declared now, and always afterwards, 'That he would insist on the Privileges of his Office, and did not leave the Nomination of the Officers to the Volunteers, but allowed them to make up a List of 30 or 40, or more, from which he would chuse them. He walked with some of the Magistrates and Volunteers about a Part of the Town-Wall; he then said, he could not see but if two thousand Men had a mind to get into the Town, they must succeed; after looking at a Part of the Wall, he desired Mr. Mac Laurin, one of the Volunteers, to take the Trouble to make a Plan of it; which he promised to do.

It was thought proper to draw up an Article of News concerning this Association, to encourage others to join, and rouse the lethargick Spirit of the Country: After it was written, it was thought decent and dutiful to shew it to the Provost; the Words, That this Proposal was accepted by the Lord Provost, were altered by him; he would have it, that the Lord Provost acquiesced in this Proposal. This Alteration was much regretted by those who were sincerely zealous in this Cause, being sensible, that, in so critical a Time, more than acquiescing was requisite in the Magistrates, to animate the Burghers, and foreseeing, as it happened, that the Trades would not be warm when the Magistrates were so cool. The Volunteers however soon rose to 400. The Expences of the Works proposed were much talked and complained of, at this Time and afterwards.

[Saturday, Sept. 7th.] The Lord Provost moved in Council, that an Address should be drawn up and presented to his Majesty, which was unanimously agreed to; and accordingly a very dutiful Address was made out and signed; and that same Day it was resolved in Council to authorize the Magistrates and Conveener to employ Persons, with all possible Speed, to put the City in a Posture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.

[Eodem die, Sept. 7th, Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Plan of the Wall was made ready, and presented to the Council at Six o'Clock; the weak Places were pointed out, and what was most necessary to be done proposed. The Lord Provost desired an Estimate might be made of the Expence; but it was answered, That it could not easily be done, and would require Time. It was proposed the Flanks should be first taken care of, as the Time which the Rebels would take to come to Edinburgh was uncertain; that the doing as much as we could did not hinder the capitulating, if necessary; that there was a double Chance for Relief, either from Sir John Cope, or the Dutch, so that holding out one Day or two might save the Town; but that Dispatch was necessary above all things, and all the Workmen that could be got ought to be employed.'

[Sunday, Sept. 8th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Workmen cleared a Part of the Parapet; but the Number was very small for this Day, and indeed for the whole Week, till September 15th. Of this Complaints were made every Night, but to little or no Purpose; sometimes there were only two Dozen, when there ought to have been as many Hundreds; for now the Rebels were at Perth. It was found that the Parapet, when cleared, was too narrow in several Places, and that it was necessary to add to it by Scaffolding. This was done in some Places, but so few Men were employed, that in others it was not executed.'

[Monday, Sept. 9th. Council Record.] The Lord Provost produced in Council a Sign-Manual from his Majesty, addressed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, reciting: 'That it had been represented to his Majesty, that the Lord Provost, Magistrates, Town-Council, Burghesses, and others of the City of Edinburgh, from their great Loyalty and Affection to his Person and Government, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raise and maintain, at their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subscription and Contribution, one thousand Foot for the Defence of the said City and the Support of his Government, and that they were desirous of obtaining his Royal Licence and Authority for the same: His Majesty does grant the same accordingly; and does farther ordain and command, that the said one thousand Men shall be under the Direction of the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh.'

This Warrant having been read and considered by the Magistrates and Council, 'They appointed, as a Committee, the present and old Magistrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Porteous, or any five of them, the Lord Provost being always one; and, in case of his Absence, any Nine of them to be a Quorum, to consider what is most proper to be done upon this Occasion, for levying the said 1000 Foot, and particularly to take in the Subscriptions of such of the Inhabitants as are willing to contribute for levying and maintaining the said 1000 Foot, with their proper Officers to be named, for the Purposes mentioned in the said Sign-Manual, for the space of three Months after they shall be so insisted; as also to consider what is proper to be done farther for the Safety of the City, and for Support of the Government; which Committee shall meet at the Goldsmiths Hall twice each Day, at the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in the Afternoon; and recommended to the said Committee to keep a Book, into which all their Proceedings and Actings shall be regularly ingrossed, to the end the same may be reported to the Council from Time to Time.

And the Magistrates and Council nominate and appoint the Lord Provost to be Colonel and Commander of the said 1000 Foot, with Power to his Lordship to conduct and direct them, and the other Officers who shall be named to command under him, as the Council shall think proper, or as the Exigencies of Matters shall require.'

[Eodem die, Sept. 9th. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'The Work went on but slowly; some of the Embrazures in the Flanks for the Cannon, and in the Curtain for the Musqueteers, were opened.'

[Eodem die.] 'A Letter was delivered to the Lord Provost, signed by three old Provosts, Drummond, Mac Aulay, Osburn; and three old Bailies, Nimmo, Blackwood, Wilson; on Behalf of themselves and the other Volunteers, praying his Lordship to apply to the Commander in Chief for 200 Stand of Arms; and that he would appoint a Place where the Volunteers might be instructed in the Use of the Firelock and Bayonet.'

[Sept. 10th. Council Record.] 'The Council appointed Allan Burns, late of the Lord Rothes's Regiment, to be Adjutant to the 1000 Foot commanded by the Lord Provost, which were now levying, and recommended to his Lordship to find out proper Persons to be Officers, to command each hundred Men under his Lordship.'

[Eodem die. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] 'A Scheme of what was most necessary to be done was drawn up by a Volunteer above-mentioned, and shewn to General Gust, and at his Desire to an old Officer of the Dragoons; being approved by him, it was presented to the Lord Provost. It was insisted, that a high House, which takes a Part of the Wall near the Potter-Row Port, should be possessed by a Party, and a Communication made from the Wall to the House, to relieve or bring off the Men as Occasion might require; but this, so much insisted on, was not yielded till September 16th, when Captain Murray approved of it; and then, though it was begun, there was not Time to finish it.

Unhappily at this Time the Elections of their Deacons so much employed the Trades, that few came to work on the Wall; and it never appeared, that, after repeated Complaints, proper Authority was employed to oblige them to work in this Time of the greatest Danger.'

The Lord Provost reported, That he had procured from General Gust an Order to David Lyon, Store-Keeper of the Castle, to deliver to his Lordship, or his Order, upon Receipt, two hundred Muskets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, and the like Number of Flints, with one Barrel of Powder, and an equal Proportion of Ball, which are to be distributed among the Gentlemen Volunteers.

The Council also authorized the Bailies of Potter-Row and Portsburgh to give Receipts for sixty Stand of Arms, to be by them distributed amongst the Inhabitants on proper Receipts.

The Council appointed the respective Deacons to make Choice of six Persons out of each of their Incorporations, to be given in to the Council on Friday next, that, out of the same Lists of six, three may be chosen by the Council, to the Effect the Corporations may elect their several Deacons for the Year ensuing.

[Eodem Die, Sept. 11th.] The Committee above-mentioned, appointed by the Council on the 9th, met for the first Time, the Lord Provost present, when they gave their Opinion concerning some Things to be done for the Reparation of the Walls, that the same should be forthwith executed so far as hitherto undone.

[Eodem Die, Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] Some Cannon were got from Ships; and it having been earnestly recommended to the Lord Provost, that some Hand Granadoes should be got, and the City-Guard and Volunteers taught to use them, a Message was sent to the General, and by him to the Castle; but it was answered, That they had not above two hundred, and could not spare them. Afterwards, however, one of the Volunteers, surprised that there should be so few in such a Garrison, so well provided with Stores, made a Visit to the Castle, and was told by the Store-Keeper, that he had five times that Number, and was desired to tell the Provost, that he had a hundred at his Service, if he had a mind for them. The Message was delivered, but the Granadoes never appeared. We found twenty-three that had lain in a Chest since 1715, in the Town's Armoury, but they were never examined.

A Ditch that had been ordered at Wallace's Tower, had been carried on right for some time, but was afterwards, by some Mistake, or bad Advice, cast on the wrong Side of the Dyke. This Day this was stoppt, and a Remedy proposed, but not executed for want of Time.

[September 12. A. M.] The Committee above named, came to some farther Resolutions about fortifying the City-Walls, and, inter alia, recommended to Mr. Mac Laurin to go along with the Tradelmen to explain the tenth Article of his Memorial, in relation to the putting the Wall at Leith-Wynd in a better Posture of Defence.

[Committee's Record.] In pursuance of the Lord Provost's Recommendation, the Committee resolved, That it be recommended to some of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they do learn the Exercise of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

[Eodem Die, P. M.] The Committee resolve, That the Council should invite those who have any Quantities of Grain at Leith, or other Parts near to the Town, to bring the same into this City, to be lodged in the City's Granaries, to be kept therein from the Enemy, Rent-free.

[September 13. Council Record.] The Provost reported, That, on the 12th current, he had given Receipt to the Store-Keeper of the Castle for a hundred Muskets, Bayonets, and Cartouch-Boxes, with half a Barrel of Powder, and Ball in proportion, for the Use of the Volunteers of this City; and also that he had given Receipt for two hundred Stand of more Arms to the Use of the City's Regiment.

The Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City-Regiment, and forwarding the necessary Steps to be taken for the Safety and Defence of the Place, named the 9th current, were read over, and unanimously approved by the Council, which recommended to the Committee to continue in their Diligence.

The Council then proceeded to make the short Leets for the Election of new Deacons; after which there is nothing entered in the Council Record, till the 18th of September, the Day after the Rebels got Possession of the Town, when there were some Proceedings relating to the annual Election, which did not take effect.

[Eodem Die, Minutes of the Committee.] The Lord Provost, and other Members of the Committee present, recommended to Bailie Robert Baillie, and his Committee upon the publick Works, and such of this Committee as pleased to attend, or any three of them, Bailie Baillie being always one, to see the whole Particulars contained in the former Minutes fully executed, without Loss of Time, and to take the Advice and Direction of such proper Persons without Doors, as they shall judge necessary for executing the whole Particulars: with Power to the said Committee to prefs such Workmen as shall be judged proper for compleating the whole Works before specified.

[September 13. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Day of the Election of the Deacons there was very little done on the Wall; the Deacons could not be got; some Houses in St. Mary's Wynd, that had large Windows into the Town, were shewn to some Magistrates, and afterwards to the Provost; but no Orders were given about them. This Day the Carriages of the Cannon were examined, and any necessary Reparation ordered.

[Saturday, September 14th, Committee Record.] The Lord Provost in the Committee reported, That he had this Day signed an Order for Payment of 1000 l. Sterling to the Receiver General, to Account of the Cess due by the City.

The Committee resolve, That the Cess Books, and those by which the Annuity and Poor's Money is collected, shall be transported from the several Collectors Offices to the Castle of Edinburgh for Preservation; and the Provost wrote a Letter to General Preston, the Governor of the Castle, praying him to receive the said Books, and keep them for the Use of the City.

This is the last Entry made in the Register of the Proceedings of this Committee, which does not appear to have met again after this Saturday the 14th.

[Eodem Die, Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] Little Work on the Walls and Scaffoldings, the Cannon were all proved and the Shot got ready.

[Sept. 15. dit. Journal.] The Lord Provost brought Captain Murray to Town to give his Advice, and, not till this Day, he ordered some Works within the Gates, which were begun immediately. There were more Men employed this Day than ever before; and every body seemed to exert themselves: But the Lord Provost having never named the Field-Officers to the Volunteers, they were now nine independent Companies; and, upon a Motion to go out with Colonel Gardner, they unhappily divided in Opinion, which produced some Heat amongst them. A most unlucky Signal was pitched on to call them to their Arms, the ringing of the Fire-Bell, which never fails to raise a Panick in Edinburgh. This happened in time of divine Service; the Churches dismissed in Confusion and Terror: And this was the first Appearance of Fear in the Place: This Signal ought not to have been proposed or allowed by the Magistrates at such a Time, the Rebels not being far from us.

This Day most of the Cannon were carried to the Flanks, and in this as much Regard as possible was had to the weakest Places; so that there were three on St. Mary's Wynd, which raked in. About Six, one of the Volunteers, with the Chief of the Bombardiers, came to the Provost, to have an Order to load them; he kept them waiting till Eight, and then desired another to sign the Order for him. They began, though in the Night; but, after they came to the Bristle Port, they were obliged to wait from Half an Hour after Ten, till near One, for want of a Centinel to place on the loaded Gun, though they sent Messages for Centinels to the Guard and Council. This put a Stop to their Progress that Night; the Guns were all loaded with small Shot, and, as they flanked the Curtains and Gates, it was the more dangerous to leave them without Centinels during all that Time, while the rest of the Wall was guarded, and, All is well, was heard go round regularly; there were no Centinels from Bristle Port to the West Port, but one or two below.

On the Evening of this 15th of September, when the Rebels were within a few Miles of the City, and it was apprehended that they might have come up to it during that Night, it was resolved at a Meeting with the Lord Provost, and others of the Council, with the Captains of the Volunteers, That 700 Men should be upon Duty all Night, to guard the Walls all round the Town, who were to consist of 400 Trained Bands, 40 of the new Regiment, 100 Volunteers, 90 Seceders, 40 Dalkeith Volunteers, 30 Excise-Officers.

[Monday, September 16. Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal.] The Works went on cheerfully till Four or Five at Night; a Work was thrown up to defend the Pass to Mountfry, some Gates were shut up, some more Cannon were got, and carried to the Bastions and Gates; we were told that only five Gunners were got at One o'Clock, but were promised that Pains should be taken to get more.

Between Two and Three o'Clock, some Burghers were said to be carrying about for Subscriptions a Petition to the Magistrates, praying the Town should capitulate. The Alarm being great at the West Port, the Guns there were loaded, and the other Works pressed on, so that they were almost finished, when an Account came, that a Meeting in the New Church had agreed to capitulate. One of the Volunteers called for the Provost, to know what was to be done to the Cannon; but was told, that his Lordship had not Time to speak to him. The Call of, All is well, did not go round the Wall this Night as the former, and the Town seemed to be quite off its Defence; the Volunteers delivered their Arms into the Castle.

Here Mr. Mac Laurin's Journal ends, which is all in his own Hand-Writing; and, as he was himself a Volunteer, and served the Town as a chief Engineer, to devise and direct the Methods of fortifying the same; as he was a Person of great and eminent Abilities, of excellent Judgment as well as great Learning, and of perfect Probity and Veracity; as he had Opportunity to know all the Facts which he relates, and which he set down in Writing recently after they happened, with great Distinctness and Precision; and as the Pursuer has reason to believe that his Relation will be confirmed by the Testimony of living Witnesses, he has chosen, in this Deduction of the Facts, in order to make the Charge and the Defence better understood, to make use of the very Words of Professor Mac Laurin, as the most accurate and genuine Relation of the Facts that could be made, so far as he goes.

The Events of Monday the 16th, when, after so much Preparation for a Defence, the City of Edinburgh was in effect surrendered, and opened its Gates to the Rebels, were various, and deserve to be more minutely recited. In the Morning of that Day Provost Stewart received a Message from the Camp of the Rebels, which was delivered to him by Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, importing, That the City of Edinburgh would be ill-treated by them, unless it should be readily or speedily surrendered. Upon receiving which, the Provost did not commit the said Andrew Alves to Prison, neither did he give Notice of this Incident to any other of the King's Officers, Civil or Military, nor did he so much as advise or charge Mr. Alves to forbear repeating or relating that Message of his in the Town, who went directly from the Provost to the Street, and repeated his Story to a Circle of People who came round him, amongst whom one Gentleman advised Mr. Alves to go and tell what he had been relating to his Majesty's Advocate; upon his doing which, the Advocate advised the Lord Provost to commit Mr. Alves to Prison, which was now done too late to prevent the disclosing or spreading the threatening Message which he had brought.

About Two o'Clock in the Afternoon of that Day, a Petition was set on foot, which was put into the Lord Provost's Hands about Three, addressed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council, and intitled, Representation of the under-subscribing Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh, and it is signed by 48 Persons, setting forth, 'That being deeply affected with a Sense of the great Danger to which the City is presently exposed, by a rebellious Army marching up thereto in order to attack it, and being, at the same time, sensible of our Inability to make such a Defence as with any Probability may defeat their Design of entering the same, without endangering the Lives and Properties of the Inhabitants, and exposing the City to Rapine and Plunder, in the Event of our being obliged to surrender, and that there is but small, if any Prospect of Assistance from the Military; therefore praying them, who are the Governors of the City, that, before they come to any Resolution, either of defending or giving up the Town, they will call a Meeting of all the principal Inhabitants and Heritors at present in the Place, to consult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of so great Importance.'

About the very time that this Petition was going forward, a Letter was signed by the Lord Provost, together with his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor, addressed to the honourable Lieutenant-General Guesf, in the Words following. 'Edinburgh, 16th September 1745. Sir, We are of Opinion, that it would be for his Majesty's Service, that one hundred of the Dragoons should be ordered in to the Town of Edinburgh, to assist in defending this Town.'

A little after this, and betwixt the Hours of Three and Four of the Afternoon of this Day, Mr. Walter Grefet was sent by the Lord Justice-Clerk to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, to know whether he the Provost intended to defend the Town or not, to prefs the Defence thereof, and to assure him, that, if he resolved to defend it, not only the 100 Dragoons he had applied for, but as many more as he pleased to desire, should forthwith be ordered in to his Assistance. Mr. Grosset, in his Way to Edinburgh, met the Lord Advocate coming from the Town, and having acquainted him with the Message Lord Justice-Clerk had sent by him Grosset to the Provost, he the Advocate approved thereof, and desired Mr. Grosset to make all possible Haste in delivering the same, and getting the Provost's Answer.

Mr. Grosset found the Lord Provost in the Goldsmiths-Hall, delivered to him the above Message, and insisted for a direct Answer, and that, to prevent Mistakes, the same might be put in Writing; which, after some Conversation on the Subject, the Provost gave him in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and the Lord Justice-Clerk, in the following Words: 'You know the Councils I was Witness to: Was I to desire his Majesty's Troops to come into the Town now, I might be upbraided, after that, for having laid a Snare for his Majesty's Forces; should I refuse them, I may afterwards be accused for tamely delivering up the Town of Edinburgh: I desire your Lordships to be explicit, and tell me whether it is your Opinion or not they should come in; and send your Orders in Writing.'

Upon Mr. Grosset's receiving this Answer, he told the Lord Provost, that he had already assured him, that it was the Lord Justice-Clerk's Opinion, that the Town should be defended, and that therefore he must answer for the Consequences of this unnecessary Delay; and as for the Lord Advocate's Opinion, That had already been given in Writing an Hour or two before, when he, along with the Lord Provost himself, had signed a Letter to General Gues, requesting 100 Dragoons to assist in defending the City.

About Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, that is, about an Hour after the Petition above-recited was presented to the Lord Provost, praying for a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to consult or deliberate with the Magistrates and Council, whether to defend or give up the Town; such Meeting was accordingly held in the New Church Isle, the Lord Provost being in the Chair, and presiding.

At this Meeting there happened to be present some of the Reverend Ministers of the City of Edinburgh, and some other Persons of known good Affection to his Majesty and his Government, according to whose Observation, the far greater Part of the Persons there assembled were reputed of a quite contrary Character; and indeed it was impracticable, at this Meeting, to gather the true Sense of the Citizens in general, supposing it had been now seasonable or fit to deliberate in a popular Assembly, when to give up or pursue the Defence of the City, for which hitherto so many Preparations had been making, because the greater Part of the most substantial and well-affected Burgesses, who were in Arms as Volunteers, had no Notice of this Meeting, or the Intent of it, and could not possibly attend it, being at that very Time under Arms with their respective Officers, waiting for Orders from the Lord Provost or Colonel, in what Manner they should be disposed of, or act for the Defence of the City.

At the Meeting thus assembled, and thus composed, the general Cry was for giving up the City without making any Defence; and the Reverend Mr. Logan Minister, and others, who attempted to speak in Opposition to this Measure, were borne down with Clamour and Noise.

During this Meeting Mr. Lindsay, Deputy Secretary of War, came with a Message from General Gues to the Lord Provost, upon the General's hearing the Rumour that there was a Meeting of the Inhabitants to deliberate about giving up the Town to the Rebels, to ask the Provost if he continued to be of Opinion that the Dragoons should come into the Town. To which the Provost answered, That he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. Upon which Mr. Lindsay very naturally asked him, how he came to scruple about giving Directions concerning the Dragoons, when he had an Hour or two before sent a written Request to the General to obtain them. To which the Provost answered, That he had only signed that Request at the Desire of the Lord Advocate.

Towards the Close of this general Meeting, there was brought into it, in a Manner that appeared somewhat mysterious, being handed in from the Door, from one Person to another, in the Crowd, a Letter addressed, For the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town-Council of Edinburgh, signed Charles P. R. bearing Date, From our Camp this 16th September, 1745, and in the following Words:

'Being now in a Condition to make our Way into the Capital of his Majesty's ancient Kingdom of Scotland, we hereby summon you to receive us, as you are in Duty bound to do; and, in order to it, we hereby require you, upon Receipt of this, to summon the Town-council, and take proper Measures in it for securing the Peace and Quiet of the City, which we are very desirous to protect: But if you suffer any of the Usurper's Troops to enter the Town, or any of the Cannon, Arms, or Ammunition now in it, whether belonging to the Publick, or to private Persons, to be carried off, we shall take it as a Breach of your Duty, and a heinous Offence against the King and us, and shall resent it accordingly. We promise to preserve all the Rights and Liberties of the City, and the particular Property of every one of his Majesty's Subjects: But if any Opposition be made to us, we cannot answer for the Consequences, being firmly resolved at any Rate to enter the City; and, in that Case, if any of the Inhabitants are found in Arms against us, they must not expect to be treated as Prisoners of War.'

This Letter was not read out in the general Meeting in the Church; for, as soon as the Subscription to the same was read, the Meeting broke up, and the Lord Provost, with the Members of Council there present, returned to their Council-Chamber, where this Letter was again produced and read; after which it was moved, or agreed to by the Provost, that an Answer should be sent to it, which was accordingly sent, first by one, and then by another Deputation from the Council, who went out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, who was then about two Miles to the South-West of the City, upon the Water of Leith, in the Parish of Colinton. The Return, brought in Writing, to the first of these Deputations, was in the Words following: 'His R. H. the Prince Regent thinks his Majesty, and the King his Father's Declaration already published, are a sufficient Capitulation for all his Majesty's Subjects to accept of with Joy. His present Demands are, to be received into the City as the Son and Representative of the King his Father, and obeyed as such when he is there. His R. H. supposes, that since the Receipt of his Letter to the Provost, no Arms or Ammunition have been suffered to be carried off or concealed, and will expect a particular Account of all Things of that Nature. Lastly, He expects a positive Answer to this before Two o'Clock in the Morning, otherwise he will think himself obliged to take Measures conform. At Gray's-Mill, 16th September, 1745. By his Highness's Command, (Signed) J. MURRAY.

It is proper here to observe, that after the first Deputation was sent out to the Camp of the Pretender's Son, Notice was brought to the Lord Provost, and the others assembled with him in the Council-Chamber, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, was arrived off Dunbar. This News was brought by Mr. Walter Grosset, who brought the original Letters from Dunbar, giving Notice of this Event, together with a Letter from the Lord Advocate, who was then at Musselburgh, certifying, that these were the original Letters. All these Mr. Grosset delivered to the Lord Provost in the Council-Chamber; upon perusing which the Provost said, This News had come too late, for they had come to a Resolution to capitulate, and had sent a Deputation to the Camp of the Rebels for that Purpose, and shewed to Mr. Grosset the Letter above-recited from the Pretender's Son, as the Occasion of that Resolution. Mr. Grosset then proposed to send after the Deputies to bring them back; and for that Purpose another Member of the Council was accordingly sent, but he did not overtake them.

About this Time Mr. Drummond and Mr. Mac Aulay, Captains of the Volunteers, and who had been both formerly Provosts of Edinburgh, (as the former now is) upon hearing of Sir John Cope's Arrival, came to the Council-House, and insisted that the Defence of the Town should be now resumed, as there was so near a Prospect of their obtaining Relief, and proposed the ringing of the Alarm-Bell, as a Signal to bring every Body back to their Posts.

To this the Provost answered, That he must be careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants; and that, as certain of their Number had been sent out as Deputies to treat, should they be in the Hands of the Rebels whilst the Alarm-Bell was rung, they, the Deputies, might be ill used by the Rebels; and also urged the former Objections, of the Difficulty and Danger of defending the Town. To this Mr. Grosset replied, That he knew the Situation of the Town so well, and the Condition of those who were to come against it, who had no Cannon and few Arms, that he would undertake to be one of Fifty that should defend the weakest Place of it, till the Troops should come to their Relief. To which one of the Council assenting, the Lord Provost seemed to give Way to the Resolution of defending the Town, provided General Gues would agree to let them have from the Castle what Arms should be wanted. This Mr. Grosset undertook to procure, and went directly, accompanied by Provost Counts, one of the Council, to General Gues in the Castle; who told him for Answer, That he was glad the Provost had come to a Resolution to defend the Town, who might depend upon the utmost Assistance that he the General could give them; and that as soon as the City Arms should be put into proper Hands for that Purpose, what farther Arms were wanting should be ready to be delivered to them from the Castle.

Upon their Return to the Provost, and reporting the General's Answer, Mr. Grosset was told, 'That as the Person who had been sent to bring back the Deputies had not overtaken them, the Provost and Council, as they had entered upon a Treaty, had come to a Resolution not to defend the Town.'

It was then proposed and insisted on, that the Cannon and Arms should be delivered into the Castle. For Answer to which the Provost referred to the Letter from the Pretender's Son, and observed the Danger which the Town would incur, if they should remove their Arms. To which Provost Drummond replied, That if they, by giving up the Town, assisted the Rebels with Arms to fight against the King's Troops, would not they, upon retaking the Town, be apt to look upon the Inhabitants as Enemies, and use them accordingly?

After Receipt of the above Answer to the first Deputation, the Council agreed to send out a second Deputation, in order, if possible, to gain some more Time. The Answer to which second was also brought in Writing, though not signed, as the former was, and in the following Words: 'His Royal Highness has already given all the Assurances he can, that he intends to exact nothing of the City in general, nor of any in particular, but what his Character of Regent entitles him to: This he repeats, and renews his Summons to the Magistrates to receive him as such.'

This second Deputation returned to Edinburgh early in the Morning of Tuesday the 17th of September, in a Hackney-Coach, which entered the City at the West Port, and set down the Deputies at Mrs. Clark's Tavern, where the Lord Provost and others of the Council were waiting for them, to receive their Report, and then the Coach drove down the Street towards the Cannongate; and at the Netherbow Port, which was then kept by a Serjeant's Command of the City-Guard, the Gate was opened to let out the Hackney-Coach, and a Body of Rebels, who were waiting without the Gate, headed by Sullivan and Lochiel, rushed in at the Gate, and became at once Masters of this Capital.

The Rebels, immediately after their becoming Masters of the City, seized all the Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition belonging to it; and the Day following, being Wednesday the 18th, they issued a Proclamation, requiring all Persons in the Shire of Edinburgh, forthwith to deliver up, at the Palace of Holy-Rood-House, all the Arms and Ammunition they had in their Custody, on Pain of being treated as Rebels. And on Thursday the 19th, they sent a Message in Writing to the City of Edinburgh, requiring, on Pain of military Execution, that one thousand Tents, two thousand Targets, six thousand Pairs of Shoes, and a proportional Number of Water-Cantines, should be furnished to their Army against the 23d, and promising Payment as soon as the present Troubles should be over. All which were accordingly furnished; and for that Purpose a Tax laid upon the Inhabitants of 2s. 6d. upon each Pound of their real Rent, within the City, Cannongate, and Leith.

Thus was the City of Edinburgh, which had, in their Address to the King of the 7th of this very Month, said with great Truth, 'That this City hath both always distinguished itself by a firm and steady Attachment to Revolution and Whig Principles; and a hearty Abhorrence of all Popish and arbitrary Government; and particularly, that, during the Rebellion in the Year 1715, their Zeal for his late Majesty was equalled by few, and surpassed by none; and, at the same Time, assured his present Majesty, that, at this Time, they would stand by him with their Lives and Fortunes, and employ every Power they were possessed of, and all the Means his Majesty should put in their Hands, to disappoint the Attempts of France and the Pretender. This City, which had given so many Reasons to expect better Things of it, was, after mighty Preparations for a vigorous Defence, thus poorly delivered up, without striking one Blow, to an half-armed Rabble, at a Time when the King's Army was within a Day's March of the City, to the great Discredit and Reproach of the City itself, in the Eyes of the World, who were ignorant of the particular Circumstances and Causes of so strange an Appearance, to the hearty Grief and Sorrow of all its well-affected Inhabitants, who are by far the greater Part of them, to the Triumph of the Pretender's Son and his Adherents, to the Ruin of many unfortunate Persons, who, by this Appearance of Success, were encouraged to engage in the Rebellion, to the real and high Detriment, not of the City itself only, but of the Publick; the Rebels, by this Capture, having been there furnished with Arms, Tents, and Provisions of all Kinds, which contributed chiefly to their obtaining the Victory at Presston-Pans a few Days after; and that again, to the Continuance and farther Progress of the Rebellion, to the immense Addition to the Expence of the Publick, the great Interruption of Commerce and Credit, the Progress of his Majesty's Enemies abroad, and the Interruption of the internal Tranquillity of this Kingdom, until that was happily restored by the Conduct and Success of his Royal Highness the Duke.

It was natural for all the World, at first Sight, to lay the Blame of an Event, which has brought on and contributed to so many and great Mischiefs, principally on the Lord Provost of Edinburgh for the Time, being the chief Magistrate and Governor of the City; and the Question now brought to Trial is, Whether he was, or was not guilty or culpable in his Department in that high Office, during the Transactions libelled, and above more particularly recited? The Libel charges, That he was guilty of gross Neglect of Duty, and Misbehaviour in his Office on that Occasion; and whether he was or not, must depend upon a due Comparison of the Duty of his Office, with his actual Behaviour, to see how far the one comes up to the other, and wherein he was alledged to be deficient; and to have counteracted his Duty, the Libel fairly and particularly sets forth, and thereby gives him the better Opportunity to clear himself, if he be able.

Upon the Libel being read in Court on the 13th current, and the Pannel being asked by the Court, as usual, what he had to say for himself, he said, in effect, that he was not guilty, and that his Conduct, upon the Occasion libelled, had been agreeable to his Duty; and then left it to his Counsel to offer and make good his Defence at large; of whom five were accordingly heard at great Length, and the Substance of their Arguments, as far as the Pursuer could observe and recollect them, was as follows.

They took Notice that the Pannel had already suffered very great Hardships by his long Confinement, for the Space of fourteen Months, without being brought to Trial, which, to a Man engaged, as he is, in considerable Trade and Business, they said was a Punishment greater than he merited, supposing all that is alledged in this Libel were true. They said, that the Source of this hard Usage was the Malice of certain Enemies of the Pannel in the City of Edinburgh, who, in order to ruin his Credit and Interest in this City, had set themselves to find Fault with his Conduct during the Rebellion, had industriously misrepresented that Conduct, and raised a popular Clamour against him, which, having reached the Seat of Government, had produced the Severities he has already met with.

That he was however now glad of an Opportunity of having his Conduct brought to Trial by the certain Test of judicial Evidence, hoping that he would now be declared innocent upon Examination, who, by popular Clamour, had been pronounced guilty without Examination.

At the same Time it was also urged, though not very consistently with this last Declaration, that the Pannel could not competently be brought to Trial at all in this Court upon this Libel; that the particular Statute of King James the Second, upon which it is laid, was almost three hundred Years old, and was gone into Disuetude; that, whilst it was in force, it was never meant to concern any more than the Behaviour of Magistrates in their judicial Capacity, or ordinary Administration on such Occasions as commonly or yearly occur, but never to concern the extraordinary Office of Magistrates in Time of War or open Rebellion, when it may be very incident to them to err or commit Mistakes, as many an honest Burgess may be very well qualified to discharge the Duty of Provost, or other Magistrate of his Burgh, in quiet and peaceable Times, from whom it cannot be expected, that, in such an Exigency as an open Rebellion, he should be able to act the Part of an expert military Commander or Governor of a Town, and that the Department of the Provost on such Occasion, could not be tried at all at common Law; that it was an improper Question to be tried by a Jury, who might very properly try a single Issue, as whether a Man was guilty of Murder, Robbery, or the like, but very unfit to give Judgment upon a Series of Facts relating to the Department of a Provost, whether it was or was not agreeable to his Duty; and therefore it was said, that the only competent Method, by the Constitution of this Kingdom, for trying and punishing Trespases such as those alledged in this Libel, was by the Authority of the Legislature itself, in such Manner as had been practised in the Case of Alexander Wilson, who had been Lord Provost of Edinburgh at the Time of the Murder of Captain John Porteous.

It was farther said, by way of more particular Answer to the Matters charged in this Libel, that the same contained nothing criminal; that, as to the first Article, concerning the raising of the Edinburgh Regiment, it was no Crime in the Provost to entertain a Doubt concerning the Legality thereof, and to hesitate to commit what he apprehended might have been treasonable, and that he was justified in his Doubt by the ablest Advice given for applying for his Majesty's special Warrant, which was accordingly obtained.

That, as to the second, concerning the Volunteers, he had the same Reason to doubt concerning the Legality of that Measure, and it was no Crime in him that he could not perceive any Difference between authorizing a Body of armed Men who were to serve without Pay, and another Body who were to receive Pay; or that the one might be authorized without his Majesty's special Warrant, which had been advised to be necessary or proper in respect of the other; that, more particularly, as to this Article, the Provost had Reason to take Offence, that the Measure was so far concerted and carried on by the Volunteers, as that they brought him a Petition, signed by ninety or a hundred Persons, without his Privy, or previously consulting with him: This he had Reason to consider as a designed Neglect and Insult upon him; and yet, as soon as he was advised that the Thing might be lawfully done, he gave way to it; and it was a very slender Circumstance to be charged as a Crime, that he chose to have it said that he acquiesced in that Measure, rather than that he heartily approved it, or that he should be charged with a Defect of Civility or good Manners towards these Volunteers.

As to the Third, concerning the Repairs of the City Walls, it was observed in general, That the Provost was not the sole Person answerable for any Slowness or Defect of Care and Diligence in this respect, though he had been singled out, and made the sole Object of this Prosecution. He was but one of many, who behaved to act by the Authority of his Council, and of the Committee appointed to take the special Direction of what concerned the Defence of the City; and that all his Conduct was agreeable to the Sense of these two Bodies, and approved by them, and without them he could do nothing; for that the King's Warrant concerning the Regiment, being addressed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council, and having ordered that the Regiment should be under the Direction of them all, and the Council having appointed a Committee for that Purpose, and to consider what farther should be done for the Safety of the City, the Provost was thus limited in the legal Exercise of the known Duty of his Office; that, however, the Committee, whereof he was one, had given the necessary Orders for the Repairs, and Warrants for impressing Workmen for that Purpose; that the Cannon upon the Walls were actually loaded on Sunday the 15th, and Applications were made to procure Gunners for managing them.

To the fourth Article it was said, That no Proposition could be accepted or rejected by the Provost alone, but by the whole Council; that as to the Proposition in the Article mentioned concerning the Trained Bands, of the purging that Body of disaffected or suspected Persons, it was true that the Provost was averse to it, and chose rather to undergo any Hazard, than take upon him to fix such Mark of Infamy upon a Number of his Fellow-Citizens, without any certain Ground of Charge against them.

To the fifth Article, That here again the Pannel was charged with Defect of Civility or good Manners (a very unusual Point of Dittay); and that supposing the Fact true, of the Conversation with Sir Robert Dickson, it was not unreasonable, nor could justly give Offence, for the Provost to propose such Method for finding Subsistence to the ordinary Men, as insisting them in the Edinburgh Regiment, which would also be a Means to insure their Attendance and Service for a limited Time, so as they might not be at Liberty to withdraw at Pleasure, and this perhaps when the City should be under the most pressing Exigency.

To the sixth, That the only Thing here imputed to the Pannel as an Offence, was his not immediately committing Andrew Alves to Prison, the doing which might have been of bad Consequence, to deter others from bringing Intelligence to the Provost concerning the Rebels or their Designs; and that at best it was not a very clear Case, that it was at all lawful or competent to commit Mr. Alves for only repeating to the Provost what the Rebels had said to him, when they seized him and made him their Prisoner; that his receiving the Message, or hearing what Mr. Alves said, could be no Crime; and, as soon as he heard it, he repaired to the Council-Chamber, then held in the Goldsmiths Hall, where he imparted this Piece of Intelligence to some others of the Council, who agreed that it should be concealed, lest it should intimidate the Inhabitants that, however, soon after, the Lord Provost saw the Lord Advocate, and, in pursuance of his Advice, actually committed Mr. Alves.

To the seventh and eighth Articles it was said, That Monday the 16th of September 1745, was a Day of universal Distraction in the City of Edinburgh; that the two Regiments of Dragoons of Hamilton and Gardner, who, with the whole City-Guard, had been posted at the Coltbridge, a Mile West from Edinburgh, about three Afternoon, retreated, and past by the North Side of the Town, Eastward, which greatly heightened the Pannick of the Citizens, being thus abandoned by the only military Force they had in their Neighbourhood, and no News of Sir John Cope or his Army was now come, and at the same Time the chief civil Officers of the Crown had left the City; and yet, in this Situation, the Lord Provost, in the Goldsmiths Hall, where many of the Council and other Inhabitants were assembled, declared himself ready to act his Part for the Defence of the Town; but that he was now seconded by few: But at this Juncture, one Mr. Groset arrived, and delivered a Message to the Provost, that he should send for, or consent to receive a Party of Dragoons; at which he, the Provost, was surprised, having been present the Night before at a Council of War, where it was resolved to be improper to bring any of the Dragoons into the City; upon which he gave his Answer in Writing to that Message, which is above recited: That the Inhabitants, anxious to know the Resolutions of the Council, pressed into the Room in a Crowd; and then Somebody else, not the Provost, proposed to adjourn to the New-Church Isle; that, on the Way thither, a Gentleman on Horseback told loudly, that the Rebels were near eight thousand strong, which still heightened the Pannick; that yet, in the New-Church Isle, the Lord Provost spoke as he had in the Council-Room, declaring himself ready, if the Citizens were so disposed, to do his Part for Defence of the City; that at this Meeting, the Letter from the Pretender's Son was brought in, to the Reading of which he, the Provost, objected, and thereupon returned with his Council to the Goldsmiths Hall.

That the Inhabitants had now the Direction of Affairs in their Hands, and they were governed by their Fears and Terrors; that the higher Civil Officers

Officers of the Crown being gone, the Magistrates sent to their own Adversaries for Advice; but they also were all gone, excepting one, who declined giving any explicit Opinion on such high Matters; upon which the Letter was read, and found to be to the same Purpose with Alva's Message, and then they thought themselves under an unavoidable Necessity to send out a Deputation, in order to procure a Delay, and gain some Time for the expected Relief to come.

To the ninth and tenth it was said, That the Defence of the Town was now given up as impracticable; and that upon serious Deliberation it was the unanimous Opinion of the Council, that no direct Order should be given by the Lord Provost concerning the Arms of the Volunteers, or the Cannon upon the City-Walls, for fear of incensing the lawless Multitude of Rebels to put their Threats in Execution.

The same Answer was given to the eleventh Article relating to the City-Arms, to which there was now added, and not till now, a Matter of Fact never formerly alledged by the Pannel, neither in his Examination before the Committee of the Privy-Council, on the 7th December 1745, nor in the signed Answers returned by him to his Libel, and it must appear very strange, if it was true, that the most plausible Answer he had to make to this very heavy Article should never have been once mentioned till now, being, that he the Provost could prove that he sent a Message to General Guesb, proposing that he should send a Party of Soldiers to take away the City-Arms and carry them up to the Castle.

Upon the twelfth Article it was said, That the Opinion of the Citizens of Edinburgh, or any Number of them, concerning the Pannel, could afford no Evidence that he was actually guilty; and that, upon the whole, the Surrender of the City was owing to a Train of unavoidable Accidents, for which he the Provost was not blameable.

Notice was also taken more than once, by the Pannel's Counsel, that he himself had a very large Property, consisting of a Stock of Wines, lying in his Cellars at Leith, which would be exposed to the Discretion of the Rebels in case of their coming to Edinburgh; but the Conclusion drawn from this Fact was not, to the Pursuer's Observation, distinctly spoke out or explained by his Counsel; so that the Pursuer is still at a Loss to know what Use was meant to be made of that Observation, whether by way of Argument to evince the Sincerity of Mr. Stewart, in desiring to keep the Rebels at a Distance, that his own moveable Estate, of so great Value, might not come under their Power; or if it was meant to be offered by way of Excuse for him, that he was afraid of giving offence to the Rebels, by opposing them with Vigour and Zeal, because they might have it in their Power to hurt him deeply in his private Fortune or Effects; and therefore the Pursuer must leave it to them to explain their own Meaning or Intent, in alledging and insisting on this Matter of Fact.

It was farther observed for the Pannel, though not very consistently with the Allegation, that there was nothing material relevant or criminal charged upon him in these Articles; that the Charge therein contained, if it amounted to any Crime at all, was no less than that of High-Treason; for that such, no doubt, it was, if he pursued Measures that had no other Tendency than to betray the City, whereof he was chief Magistrate, into the Hands of the Rebels: It would have been this Crime in case the Provost had acted with that ill Intention, which is the essential Requisite to render the Actions of Men at all criminal or punishable; and if the Provost had no such Intention, then, supposing he had committed several Errors in his Conduct, these were no more than Errors in Judgment, and such Mistakes in Matters prudential, in difficult and dangerous Times, when a Magistrate must act one Way or other, ought never to be imputed to him as a Crime; for though the Part he chuses do not prove successful, the opposite Conduct might have been no more so, and, in that Case, that very opposite Conduct might, with the same Facility, have been laid hold of as the Ground of a Prosecution: For Example, if he had brought in the Dragoons into the City, and these afterwards had fallen into the Hands of the Rebels; or, suppose he had found Means to suppress the threatening Letter from the Pretender's Son, and the Inhabitants had stood to their Defence, and yet the Town had been stormed, and the Rebels had then cut the Throats of the Inhabitants, supposing he had escaped the Massacre, it is easy to imagine what a heavy Charge might have been formed against him, as having been the Author or Cause of such Calamities: And therefore, since his Conduct is not alledged to have been directly treasonable, it proceeded at worst from Mistake, or Errors in Judgment, which is no Crime at all that is punishable by the Law in a free Country, such as this is.

It was farther observed, that the Pannel was not so much as charged in the Libel with Disaffection to his Majesty's Government; and that however the Facts libelled might be apt to make some Impression, in maintaining a Charge of that Sort, they could not be combined or laid together to an End or Purpose that was not directly libelled; that the Facts alledged in the Libel might indeed amount to a Proof of this Proposition, that the Provost was in his Judgment averse to the Measure of defending the City of Edinburgh, as a thing that was impracticable, and therefore not eligible or prudent to be attempted; and it was contended, that this was not even an Error in Judgment, for that he was in the right in being of that Opinion, for that the City of Edinburgh is no strong or fortified Place; and though it is surrounded by an old Wall, and a Lake upon one Side, and that the Rebels had no Artillery, it had been very practicable for them to have made their Way into the Town; they might have blown up the Gates, or a Part of the Wall, with Gun-Powder, or have set Fire to the Houses on the West-Side of St. Mary's Wynd, that enter from without, and yet are a Part of, and adjoining to the Town.

All this was, so far as the Pursuer could observe or recollect, the Substance of what was urged by the several Counsel for the Pannel in his Defence; and in reply to these Things, it was, and is now, on behalf of his Majesty, and for the publick Interest, observed as follows:

It is admitted for the Pursuer, that the Counsel for the Pannel have rightly observed, that the Facts charged upon him, if it had been charged that they were done dolose & malo animo, of set Purpose or Design, to have put the City of Edinburgh into the Hands of the Rebels, would have amounted to High-Treason; for the Lord Hale says, in his Pleas of the Crown, Vol. I. p. 168. 'If a Captain, or other Officer that hath the Custody of any of the King's Castles or Garrisons, shall treacherously, by Combination with the King's Enemies, or by Bribery, or for Reward, deliver them up, this is Adherence to the King's Enemies.' And again, p. 169. he says, 'The Truth is, if it were delivered up by Bribery or Treachery, it might be Treason: But if delivered up upon Cowardice or Imprudence, without any Treachery, though it were an Offence against the Laws of War, and the Party subject to a Sentence of Death by Martial Law; yet it is not Treason by the Common Law, unless it was done by Treachery.'

And if the Pannel, without being engaged in the Interest of the Pretender, or without receiving any direct Bribe from him or his Adherents, did even suffer himself to be moved by the Fear of their hurting his private Property in his Wine-Cellars at Leith, to neglect or counteract any Part of his Duty as Lord Provost of Edinburgh, this was at least bordering extremely near upon High-Treason.

The Atrocity and the Nature of High-Treason is excellently described in the Digests of the Civil Law, in the Title Ad legem Juliam majestatis, l. 1. in these Words: Proximum sacrilegio crimen est, quod majestatis delictum, § 1. majestatis autem crimen illud est, quod adversus populum Romanum, vel adversus securitatem ejus committitur, quo tenetur is, cujus opera, dolo malo, concilium initum erat,—quo armati homines cum telis lapidibusve in urbe sint, convenienter adversus rempublicam; locave occupentur, vel templa; quove cætus conventusve fiat, hominesve ad seditionem convocentur:—Quove quis contra rempublicam arma ferat: quique hostibus populi Romani nuntium literasve miserit, signumve dederit, feceritve dolo malo, quo hostes populi Romani concilio juventur adversus Rempublicam.

It is true, that, in this Description, the dolus malus, or the ill Design, is an essential Ingredient; and it is in general true concerning all Crimes, as it is well expressed in the Rescript of the Emperor Hadrian, l. 14. ad legem Cornelianam de sicariis,—in maleficiis voluntas spectatur, non exitus: But the voluntas, or the dolus malus, is to be gathered from the Facts by the Judgment of the Court or the Jury, by whom the Party is tried, against whom the Facts are charged, which may very possibly have proceeded from a treasonable Design against the Crown or the Publick.

The King, however, may, if he be so graciously pleased, waive the insisting against a Criminal for the highest Crime with which he may be possibly chargeable; so the Lord Hale, p. 374. 'All Treason is Misprision of Treason and more; and therefore, he that is assisting to a Treason, may be indicted of Misprision of Treason, if the King please.' Stanf. P. C. 37. 6. Co. P. C. 36. 2 R. III. 10. 6.

The Judgment in Case of Misprision of Treason, is Loss of the Profits of his Lands during his Life, Forfeiture of Goods, and Imprisonment during Life.

And the same Lord Hale, p. 143. reports 'a Case, where there was a Consultation of the Judges, where he was present, in the Year 1675. relating to the Weavers in and about London, being offended at the Engine-Looms for making of Ribbons, who rose in great Numbers to destroy those Engines in different Counties, and did Damage to the Value of several Thousand Pounds.

Five of the Judges seemed to be of Opinion, that this was Treason within the Act 25th Edward III. upon the Clause of levying War against the King; or at least upon the Clause of the Statute of the 13th Charles II. Chap. 1.

The other five Judges were not satisfied that this was Treason within either of these Statutes.

Many of them therefore concluded, that if Mr. Attorney should think fit to proceed as for a Treason, the Matter might be specially found, and so left to farther Advice—

Upon the Conclusion of this Debate,—Mr. Attorney, upon Consideration of the whole Matter, it seems, thought fit to proceed for a Riot, and caused many of them to be indicted for Riots, for which they were convicted, and had great Fines set upon them, and were committed in Execution, and adjudged to stand upon the Pillory.'

In the present Case, the Doubt is not concerning the Tendency of the Facts charged upon this Pannel, namely, That it was to give up the City of Edinburgh, the Capital of North-Britain, not to the King's Enemies only, but to a Pretender to his Crown; and the Doubt is only, quo animo this was done, whether with a treasonable Intent, or through Cowardice, or Negligence, or Imprudence; and this might have been left to the Jury to judge, in case he had been charged with High-Treason. It is therefore one signal Instance of the Mildness and Benignity of his Majesty's Government, that the Pursuer has been ordered to prosecute this Pannel, 'not for High-Treason, but for a High Misdemeanour, in having many Ways acted contrary to his Duty, and thereby suffered the City of Edinburgh, with the Cannon, Arms, Ammunition, and Provisions, to fall into the Hands of the Rebels;' and when the Pannel's own Counsel are sensible that the Facts charged upon him are such, as, at least, border so near upon High-Treason, and might have been charged as such, they cannot be permitted at the same Time to plead, or, at least, they ought not to be listened to when they plead, that the Facts here charged have no Relevancy in them, or do not amount to any Crime or Offence whatsoever.

The other Observations above recited were extremely groundless, That this Libel does not charge the Pannel with Disaffection to the Government, and that the Opinion of the well-affected Citizens, mentioned in the 12th Article, That he was secretly in the Interest of the Pretender, cannot infer his being actually guilty of any Crime whatever, for Disaffection is not the Name of a Crime known in the Law; no Man can be tried for that Disposition of his Mind, but for the Effects which it produces; and, if the Facts here charged had been alledged to have been done by the Pannel through Disaffection to his Majesty and his Government, that would have been in Reality, or in Effect, a Charge of High-Treason, which was not the Thing intended in the present Case.

And as for the other Remark, it was far from the Meaning of the Pursuer to alledge, that any Man can be punished merely for the Opinion of others concerning him: But that Fact is mentioned in the Libel for this Reason, That, when the main Question, moved by this Trial, is, Whether the Pannel was, or was not culpable or negligent in the Execution of his Office as Lord Provost of Edinburgh, during the Rebellion, it is a Fact or Circumstance strongly tending to evince that he was so guilty, if it be true that the whole Tenor of his Behaviour was such, as to induce a general Suspicion or Belief amongst the well-affected Inhabitants, that their Provost was secretly in the Interest of the Pretender; for, whether they were or were not in the right in that Suspicion or Belief, they, being so immediately and so deeply interested, could not fail to be constantly attentive to the Conduct of their Provost; and, if that was such as produced in them such Apprehension or Belief, that very Thing is one Demonstration, supposing that they carried their Conclusion too far, that his Conduct was not such as became a faithful, vigilant, and zealous Magistrate upon that Occasion.

The Nature of the Office of Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh is well known to this Court. It is partly the same that belongs to the chief Magistrate of every Royal Burgh in the Kingdom, and partly arises from the particular Grants to the City of Edinburgh; they are Sheriffs within themselves; the Lord Provost is the High Sheriff, and, of late Years, as well as formerly, has acted as such, and tried Causes even capital, and the Bailies are, ex officio, his Deputy Sheriffs.

The Lord Provost is the King's Lieutenant within the City, he is Colonel of the City-Guard by the Act of Parliament authorising that, and he is chief Commander of the City Trained-Bands or Militia; and this very Provost claimed, and was allowed to be the Colonel of the Volunteers, and was by the Council declared to be Colonel of the Edinburgh Regiment of 1000 Men, that was to be raised and paid by the voluntary Subscriptions of the Inhabitants: In short, the whole military Power within the City was in him, and the chief executive Power, in all Respects.

Neither is it true, that the Order in the King's Sign-Manual for the Regiment, that the same should be under the Direction of the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council of Edinburgh, was either intended, or had the Effect to derogate in the least from the legal Powers and Privileges of the Lord Provost; that Warrant was granted on the Application of the whole Council of Edinburgh, the Regiment was to be maintained by them and their Fellow-Citizens, the End proposed by it was the Defence of his Majesty's Government, but more especially the Preservation of the City of Edinburgh against the Rebels; it was therefore very properly and graciously declared, that this Regiment should be under the Direction of the Magistrates and Council of Edinburgh; that is, it should not be withdrawn from the immediate Service of that City, or sent elsewhere, like the rest of his Majesty's Troops, at the Discretion of his Generals, where it might be of Use for his Service, without the Consent of the Magistrates and Council of Edinburgh. But this did not hinder the Lord Provost from being, according to the Constitution of the City, the Colonel or chief Commander of that Regiment, as well as of all the other Military Force within the City. It cannot be supposed to have been the Sense of his Majesty's Order, that the whole Town-Council, consisting of thirty-three Persons, should act the Part of a Colonel, or have the immediate Command of a Regiment; the utmost Effect that Order could have, was, that the whole Council should have Power to give general Orders as to the Manner of employing the Regiment, such as every Prince or State are daily known to give to the Generals or Commanders of their Armies, who are not the less vested with the Powers of Commanders, that they are subject to such Direction or Controul.

Neither is it true, that the Appointment of a Committee, in the Terms above-recited, was an Obstruction or Hindrance to the Provost's acting in the Manner that the Libel requires of him, unless he can say, which he has not done, nor can do by any Thing that appears on Record, that either the Council or the Committee resisted his Will, or that they opposed or over-ruled him, by Majority of Voices, in any one Thing that he proposed to be done towards the Preservation of the City.

His Station, therefore, gave him Power sufficient, and rendered it his Duty to be the chief Person to devise, order, and execute every Thing that was proper for preserving his own City from the Rebels; and, if the Facts be true that are in this Libel charged, it is left to the Judgment of this Court, whether his Conduct was agreeable to his Duty; or if he was not, on the contrary, faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office, and guilty of manifold Misbehaviours in it on the Occasion libelled.

That Occasion called for the most earnest, vigilant, and active Discharge of the Duty of chief Magistrate, vested with such Powers as he had; and, to illustrate this, the Pursuer begs Leave to quote a Passage from a learned Author, Aerodii rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum pandectae, in the Title, De officio praefecti vigilum, whereof the Rubrick is in these Words: Negligentiam, in iis qui ad summum reipublicae pertinent, esse capitale, cap. 1. M. Militius, Cn. Lolius, L. Sextilius, triumviri nocturni, cum incendiis arrendi causa, quod Romae in sacra via exortum esset, cum hamis & dolabris, omnique familia publica evocati, tardius advenissent: a tribuno plebis die dicta ad populum, damnati sunt: leves ob causas, inquit Valerius: sed disciplina necessaria.

Idem fere apud nos, senatus judicio, cum adhuc illic essemus advocati, Gabastoni, praefecto vigilum, accidit: qui vocatus ad sedendam scholarium de suo prato seditionem, non venit. Nam indignum esse, qui, ut excubet reipublicae, ab omnibus aliis muneribus excusatur, & praesens vice est absentis: is in tanta necessitati, ubi minima mora summi momenti est, segnem, tardum ac negligentem se praebeat, aut (quod minus quoque est ferendum) contumacem.—Et quando omnibus viribus opus est, nulla causa, nulla excusatio proficit.

Cap. 2. P. Bilius quoque triumvir nocturnus, à P. Aquilio, tribuno plebis accusatus, quod vigilas negligentius circumisset, populi judicio concidit. Nam quod levius sit in aliis causis: in his, ut in re militari, capitale esse. Quia puncto saepe temporis, maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur: neque in hujusmodi his errare fas est, aut dicere, Non putabam.

It was upon the same Principles that are here set forth, and followed in Practice in the Roman Republick, as well as the French Monarchy, that our old Statute 1457, in the Libel recited, was made, for the Punition of negligent Officers, and namely, 'Provosts of Burghs, and others, who should be found faulty and negligent in the Execution of their Offices, and it may be lawfully proved on them, or notoriously known; but with this Difference indeed, that every Offence of this Kind is not made capital, as missioe pena nobis semper placuit; but only that they be punished, in their Persons and Goods, after the Quantity of their 'Trespass, at the King's Will.' This is such a Statute as hardly enacts any thing positive, or other than what is included in the Common Law of this and all other civilized Nations, and therefore never can go into Disuetude. And it seems unnecessary to offer any Answer to the groundless Distinction advanced by the Pannel's Counsel, betwixt the Duty of a Provost, or other Magistrate, upon common or ordinary, and extraordinary Occasions; there is neither Law nor Reason for that Distinction. No Man should undertake the Office of a Pilot, who can only hold the Helm in his Hand in serene Weather, and is incapable to do his Duty when a Storm rises. And the Allegation of this Distinction ill becomes the Pannel, who is a Gentleman by Birth and Education, and, as such, superior to the ordinary Rank of Burghesses, who may be, and often are raised to the Office of chief Magistrates.

Such, for Instance, was the Character of Provost Wilson, a Brewer in Edinburgh, who was Lord Provost of that City when Captain Porteous was murdered, who, upon the same Principles that are above-mentioned, was punished by an Act of the roth of his Majesty, merely for being faulty or negligent in the Execution of his Office; for the Act recites the Murder of Captain Porteous, 'And that, for some Time before the committing the said Murder and Riot, it was commonly reported in the said City of Edinburgh, that some such atrocious Fact would be attempted, which, by proper Care in the Magistrates, Citizens and Inhabitants of the said City, might have been prevented; notwithstanding which, Alexander Wilson, Provost of the said City, and then actually resident therein, and fully apprised of the said wicked Design, did not take any Precautions to prevent the said Murder and Riot, nor use the proper or necessary Means to suppress the same, or to preserve the Peace of the said City, or, after the Perpetration of the said Fact, to discover, apprehend, or secure the Authors, Actors or Abettors thereof, in manifest Violation of the Trust and Duty of his Office of Chief Magistrate of the said City.—And to the End that the said enormous Misbehaviours and Neglects of Duty may not go unpunished, and that other Persons may not presume, through Hopes of Impunity, to be guilty of the like for the future, it is enacted, that the said Alexander Wilson be disabled from holding any Office of Magistracy, &c.'

Here the Conviction by the Parliament itself proceeds altogether upon Negatives, or Neglects of Duty in the Provost or chief Magistrate, upon a very singular and extraordinary Occasion; and so far it is a Precedent in point to the present Case, which in other respects appears to be vastly more atrocious than what Provost Wilson was guilty of, who, it seems, did not give Credit to the Reports that were current before that extraordinary Attempt was made, and suffered himself to be surprised and disconcerted, when the Mob was suddenly raised which committed that Murder; instead of which, here was long Warning, and many Precautions seemingly taken by the Provost, heartily intended by many of the Citizens, to avert Evil of a much higher Nature, tending to overthrow the Constitution and Establishment of this united Kingdom.

It appears quite unnecessary to answer the Allegation offered for the Pannel from this Precedent, which has surely not the least Tendency to prove, that the Offence, which was here punished by the Legislature itself, was no ways punishable by the Common Law, or the general Statutes of this Realm.

And as little can it avail the Pannel to enter now into an Argument upon the Expediency of the Resolution in general, of putting the City of Edinburgh in a Posture of Defence against the Rebels; for though it be true, that before any Resolution was taken upon this Question, it was very lawful and competent for the Lord Provost to declare his Opinion, if it was such, for the Negative; yet, after it was a Resolution formed by the Council of the City, with the Consent and Approbation of the most considerable Citizens of all Ranks, many of whom had previously solicited that such Measures should be taken; and after he, the Lord Provost, had seemingly concurred, and given way to the general Sense of the Citizens, as well as of the Council, it surely then became his Duty as the first Magistrate, who had the chief executive Power in his Hands, to exert himself, bona fide, for the Execution of the general Measure that had been thus resolved; for better indeed had it been never to attempt such Defence, than not to go through with it until actually overpowered by superior Force; or that, to the great Expence and Discredit of the City, after many Preparations to provide a Force for its Defence, and Application to the Crown, which was readily granted, for a Warrant to authorize the Regiment, and to the Inhabitants for a Subscription to pay it, which was filled up with great Alacrity, and many of the chief of them pressed for Leave to venture their Persons, as well as contribute their Money for the Cause which they had so much at Heart, when, to furnish Arms, the King's Arsenal in the Castle was at their Command, and a considerable Force assembled, that the Provost should so manage Matters, as that the Defence should be thrown up just at the Time that it became needful to make use of all these Preparations.

This will require some better Excuse, than that the Provost, in his private Opinion, was averse to the Measure in general of defending the City, or that he was afraid of provoking the Rebels to rob his Wine-Cellars at Leith, (if that be meant by taking notice of his great Property there) for it is certain the Provost professed to concur with the general Sense of the City, to provide for and resolve to make a Defence; and, even upon Monday the 16th of September, in the Afternoon, in the Council-Chamber, and at the general Meeting in the New-Church, it has been alledged, as a Part of his Defence, that he still declared stoutly for adhering to that Resolution; and in these Circumstances, for his Counsel to say for him, by way of Apology for his Conduct in the Articles libelled, that the same proceeds from, or is to be accounted for, by his disapproving in his Judgment of the general Measure of making any Defence, and offering Reasons now in support of the Justice of that Opinion, instead of excusing him, is in reality to accuse him very deeply of acting all along with a Duplicity, which must have been highly criminal, professing to concur in the Execution of a Measure, which which in his Heart he disliked, and, as the Execution of it chiefly belonged to him in virtue of his Office, managing that in such a Manner as to defeat the Design.

As to that Design itself, the most sanguine Promoters of it never pretended to maintain that the City of Edinburgh was capable of holding out a regular or a long Siege; the very Number of the Inhabitants, and the Mouths to be fed, must render this impracticable; but, as the Circumstance which exposed them to be at all visited by the Rebels, was the Misfortune of Sir John Cope's getting to the Northward of the Rebel Army in the Higlands, and as he was known to be returning from Inverness, through the low Country, along the Eastern Coast, and as other Succours were daily expected from Holland, it was very reasonably concluded, that the Pressure upon the City of Edinburgh could be but of short Endurance, and that, very possibly, keeping out the Rebels a single Day might save the City altogether from falling into their Hands; and the Event in a great measure justified the Expectation; for, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th September, when the first Deputies were sent out by the Provost and others to the Rebels Camp, to treat about the Surrender, demanded by the Letter from the Pretender's Son, those Deputies had not yet reached that Camp, when authentick Advice came, that Sir John Cope, with his Army, was arrived at Dunbar, which is but twenty Miles from Edinburgh: A very signal Instance of the Truth of what is said in the Passage above quoted from Erodian, Quod puncto saepe temporis maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur.

What then was the Occasion, or whence arose the Necessity that obliged the Pannel, on the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, to abandon the Defence of the City, for which so many Preparations had been made and continued till this very Hour, and when, though the Enemy was at hand, there was all the Reason in the World to believe that Succour and Relief from the King's Troops was not far off, as the Event that very Evening accordingly proved, by the actual Arrival of Sir John Cope off Dunbar, and authentick Notice thereof being sent to Edinburgh at the Juncture of Time already mentioned.

The Answer to these Questions made for the Pannel, in the Debate upon his Libel, have been, 'That, on the Afternoon of this Monday, the 16th of September 1745, the City of Edinburgh was in great Consternation, occasioned by the Approach of the Rebels, and the threatening Messages sent from them, by the Retreat of the Dragoons from Glasgow, and the withdrawing of the Civil Officers of the Crown from the City; that, in these Circumstances, the general Cry of the Inhabitants, at a publick Meeting assembled, was for abandoning the Defence of the City; after which the Fears of the Inhabitants was the governing Principle, the Multitude had the Power in their Hands, and there was no longer any Regard paid to Magistrates or legal Authority.'

But to this it is replied, That the Retreat of the Dragoons the Pursuer does not take upon him to approve or justify; very possibly it was made sooner and farther than it was necessary, though it cannot be said that the two Regiments of Dragoons, with the City-Guard of Edinburgh, if the whole Rebel Army had come up to them, ill armed as it was, would have been a Match for such a Superiority of Numbers: But when the Resolution was taken to defend the City of Edinburgh, they did not, nor could reckon upon these two Regiments of Dragoons, as what they could rely upon, or promise themselves to be always attending for their Assistance; and when the Defence of the City was abandoned, they were no farther removed than Musselburgh, which is but four Miles off, and an Offer was made to the Lord Provost to bring them back, or any Number of them he should desire, to assist in the Defence of the City.

That the withdrawing of the Civil Officers could afford no just Cause for abandoning that Defence; the Lord Justice-Clerk had only gone from Edinburgh that Day about Noon, to dine at his own House about three Miles off, and was returning in the Afternoon to the City, when he got Notice by the Way, that the Rebels were by that Time at the West Port of the City, which was not true, but afforded a very just Reason for his returning to his own House; and though the Lord Advocate at this Time also withdrew from the City, and went as far East as Musselburgh, yet, before he left the Town, he had concurred with the Provost and the Solicitor, in procuring an Order from General Guest, for one hundred Dragoons to march into the City, to encourage and support the loyal Inhabitants in Defence of the Town. And he renewed his Advice by Mr. Groft, whom he met going into the City in the Afternoon, with a Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk relating to those Dragoons. And of what use could a single Civil Officer be in the Case of a Siege? Or, to what purpose should he shut himself up within the Walls, and expose himself, in case of the Town's being taken, to become a Prisoner in the Hands of the Rebels?

And as for the affrighted Multitude, who are said to have got the Government into their Hands, it was the Fault of the Lord Provost if he permitted this to be: None of the Forces under his Command were withdrawn, and he had still at least twelve hundred well-armed Men under his Command, the Walls of the City repaired and planted with Cannon, and the Castle and its Garrison ready to assist him: And, in this Situation, why did he suffer himself to be despoiled of his Authority, or to be governed by the real, or by the affected Terrors of the timorous, or of the disaffected Multitude? Why did he give way to a general Meeting, in the Church, of an Assembly so composed? Why did he not tell them that the City had already taken its Measures and its Resolution to stand upon its Defence, and order all who did not chuse to depart the City, or to act in its Defence, to repair to their respective Houses, and keep within Doors? He had still the legal Authority in him, and the Means in his Hands to make that to be respected, when he had so great a Body of Men in Arms under his Command.

In these Circumstances, the Methods he pursued demonstrated the End which he had in View, namely, to deliver up, instead of defending the City; for, in order to justify himself in abandoning that Defence, he ought to have gone another Way to work, than to assemble a promiscuous Multitude in the Church, exclusive of the Volunteers. If there was truly any Change of Circumstances occurred, that made it reasonable now to lay aside Thoughts of that Defence which had been so long provided for and pursued, he should have summoned a Council of the same, or the like Persons with those who had first contributed to the Resolutions of making any Defence at all, that is, his own Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, with the Chief Officers of the Volunteers and Trained-Bands, and deliberated with them upon the supposed Change of Circumstances; and if, in such Council, it had been debated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be now impracticable, or inexpedient to persist any longer in the Measure formerly concerted, of defending the City, that Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but nothing of this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself. He consulted with a disaffected Multitude, as some of the Persons present in it, of undoubted Credit, say it was: And there is no Record of any Resolution of the Town-Council, or of the Committee above-mentioned, of Monday the 16th of September, when this Change of Measures was brought about, nor any Record of the Council after Friday the 13th, before the Rebels entered the City, nor of the Committee after Saturday the 14th.

As for the particular Facts or Articles charged upon the Pannel, the Pursuer has Reason to believe he can prove every one of them; but he now says, that neither the separate Relevancy, nor the Proof of every one of them, is essential to the Conclusion of this Libel, whereof the general Scope and Averment is, That the Pannel, at the Time and upon the Occasion libelled, was faulty and negligent, or guilty of Malversation in the Discharge of his Duty; and, for making out this, particular Articles are specified: And altho' every one of these shall not appear separately material, or shall not be proved, it is no Matter, if enough be proved to make out or support the general Charge.

The Case is of the same Nature as if a civil Action were brought, for Instance, for removing a suspected Tutor by the Kindred of the Infant, in order to which a Number of Articles of Misbehaviour were alledged in the Libel; in which Case, tho' some of these Articles should not be proved, or well accounted for by the Defender, yet, if any Number should be made good and accounted for, the general Allegation of the Libel would be proved, and the Pursuers behoved to prevail in the Conclusion of their Action.

At the same time, to touch briefly at the particular Articles, it is replied to the Answer to the first, That it is not the Pannel's Doubt concerning the Point of Law that is charged as a Crime, but his urging that Doubt, inter alia, demonstrates his Backwardness to pursue any Measures for Defence of the City, for the Doubt itself was extremely groundless. There are sundry old Laws against private Leagues or Bonds among the Subjects, which have nothing to do with the present Case; but the only Law, upon which the Pannel's Objection, that it would have been High-Treason to arm without Authority from the Crown, can be founded, is the 5th Act of the Restoration Parliament 1661, intitled, Act asserting his Majesty's Royal Prerogative in the Militia, and in making Peace and War, &c. which Act declares, 'That it is and shall be High-Treason to the Subjects of this Kingdom, or any Number of them more or less, upon any Ground or Pretext whatsoever, to rise or continue in Arms, to maintain any Forts, Strengths or Garrisons, to make Peace or War, or to make any Treaties or Leagues with foreign Princes or Estates, or among themselves, without his Majesty's special Authority and Approbation first interposed thereto.'

Now, in the first place, whilst this Act continued in force, it surely could never be meant to comprehend the Case of the King's Subjects being called out, by the Magistrates acting under his Authority, to take Arms for his Service; for Instance, if the Militia of any County should be called out by the High Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to resist a foreign Enemy, or a domestick Rebel: And the chief Magistrate of a Burgh, within his District, has the like Power to the Sheriff, or Lord Lieutenant, to defend the Burgh over which he presides.

But, 2dly. This Act, upon which the Doubt is singly founded, is repealed by the Act of the 7th of Queen Anne, Chap. 21. which provides, That nothing shall thereafter be High-Treason in Scotland, but what is such in England. And farther provides concerning certain Crimes therein mentioned, viz. Theft in landed Men, Murder under Trust, Fire-raising and Assassination, which were declared to be Treason by particular Statutes in Scotland, shall hereafter be adjudged and deemed to be capital Offences. But concerning the Fact which is made Treason by this Act 1661, no such Provision is made.

The Pursuer's Replies concerning the other Articles are already in Substance made in the foregoing Argument, and he shall not prolong this Paper to go through them minutely, and shall only farther observe, That, as to the new Defence offered to the eleventh Article, concerning the City-Arms, that though it comes with a bad Grace to be now for the first Time proposed, the Pursuer does not oppose the Pannel's being allowed to prove this Allegation, and all other Facts and Circumstances that have been by him alledged for his Vindication or Defence against the Charge contained in this Libel.

In respect whereof, &c.

WILL. GRANT.

July 28, 1747.

INFORMATION for ARCHIBALD STEWART, of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel or Defendant,

AGAINST

His MAJESTY'S ADVOCATE for his Majesty's Interest, Pursuer

BEFORE entering upon the Objections to the Relevancy of this Libel, it may not be improper, first of all, to lay before the Court a genuine and succinct Account of every Fact and Circumstance which any way concerns the Conduct of the Pannel, or can give any Light to form a Judgment of it during the Period mentioned in the Libel.

Upon the 17th of August 1745, the Pannel, then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, had the Honour to receive a Letter from the Marquis of Tweeddale, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State of the 13th current, acquainting him, 'That their Excellencies the Lords Justices, having received Intelligence, that the Pretender's Son was already landed, or intended to land in Scotland, had recommended it to him him to give Notice to the Provost thereof, that he might exert his Care and Vigilance on this Occasion; and make use of such Precautions as he should judge necessary for preserving the publick Peace within the Bounds of his Jurisdiction.

To this Letter the Lord Provost wrote an Answer on the 17th, as follows: 'It is with Pleasure I assure your Lordship, that this Town was never better affected, nor more peaceable than at present. Nothing shall be neglected on my Part to preserve People in their Duty towards their King and their Country; and we trust in God that no threatened Dangers shall ever reach us; at the same Time, we are not to sit down in Security, but will keep a watchful Eye, in order to prevent, as far as it is in our Power, every thing that may disturb the Peace of this Place.'

The above Letter was laid before the Magistrates when it came to Hand, and the Answer was approved of by the Town-Council, at a Meeting on the 22d of August, and, in pursuance of these Resolutions taken by the Lord Provost and Council, the following Orders were forthwith issued.

August 23. Orders were given to levy and raise thirty Centinels to be added to the City-Guard, agreeable to the Powers given them by Act of Parliament, and to provide them with Clothing and all other Necessaries.

Recommended to the Lord Provost and Magistrates to direct the Captains and Officers of the Trained-Bands, forthwith to make up full Lists of all the Persons belonging to their several Companies, and to report the same to the Magistrates against Saturday next; and that the Captains warn and premonish them all to be ready, in case of any Disturbance, to appear with their best Arms, upon an Hour's Warning, at the ordinary Places of Rendezvous.

Orders were given for directing the Constables of the City to make out full and ample Lists of all the Inhabitants and Residents within their Districts, and report the same to the Magistrates; and to be diligent in inquiring and finding out what Strangers may happen from time to time to come within the City, and lodge within their several Districts.

Orders for a Proclamation, requiring and ordaining all Inn-Keepers, Strangers, and others, who lodge and entertain Strangers, from time to time, and as oft as any Stranger shall lodge with them, to give in to the Captain of the City-Guard a Note of their Names and Designations at their Arrival; and of the Time of their Departure, under a Penalty for each Transgression; and the Captains of the Guard ordered duly to report to the Magistrates, in Writing, every Morning, Lists of the Particulars that should be delivered in to them by the Inhabitants.

These Orders, most of which proceeded upon Motions made by the Lord Provost, were all agreed to by the Magistrates and Council, and signed by him in their Presence; and Care was taken of the due and punctual Execution of them all, without any Loss of Time.

The next Day, being Saturday, August 24th, it was suggested to the Lord Provost that it might be fit to call a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, to consider what was to be done on this Occasion; to which he agreed, and communicated the Proposal to the Council at their next Meeting on Monday, August 26. who also approved of it; and accordingly the Meeting was ordered, and the most substantial and well-affected Burgesses were invited to assist with their Counsel and Advice; and at the Meeting, which could not be convened sooner than next Day, August 27. the above Resolutions and Orders were reported to them by the Lord Provost; and the Meeting unanimously approved thereof, and gave his Lordship and the Council their hearty Thanks for the wise and prudent Measures they had already taken; and, farther, offered it as their Advice to the Magistrates and Council, to name some of their own Number, and such other of the Burgesses as they should think fit, as a joint Committee to consult with and take the Advice of the Lord Justice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, Mr. Solicitor, and such of the Lords of Session as can be found in Town, with regard to what farther Steps the Magistrates, Council and Community can legally take for preserving the Peace of the City, and contributing to defeat the dangerous and wicked Designs of the Enemies to his sacred Majesty, his Royal Family, and present happy Constitution.

August 28. The Committee were accordingly named by the Council next Day, and that very Evening met with the King's Counsel, and such of the Judges as were in Town, at the Lord Justice-Clerk's House, where it was proposed, that a Regiment of a thousand Men should be levied for the Defence of the Town, and Service of the Government, to be subsisted, for three Months, on the Charges of such of the Inhabitants as were willing to sign an Association for that Purpose. And as it had been, for some time, a general Subject of Conversation and Debate without Doors, how far it was legal to levy such Regiment without a special Order from his Majesty, the Opinion of the learned and honourable Persons present was asked upon this Point, and they all agreed, that it could not be legally done without his Majesty's Warrant. Upon which it was resolved that the Lord Advocate should make Application for such Warrant; and that, in the mean Time, Trial should be made of the Inclinations of the Inhabitants to concur in this Measure, how soon the Warrant should be obtained from his Majesty.

August 30. The Lord Provost and Magistrates were employed in receiving Proposals for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence; and the Lord Provost wrote Letters to the Magistrates of Boroughs, and Ministers, for about the Distance of fourteen Miles round the City, begging that they would send as early Intelligence as possible, by Express on Horseback, of any Bodies of armed Men they could discover marching towards this City.

August 31. About the same time many different Orders were given by the Lord Provost to proper Persons, with a View to put the Town in a Posture of Defence, which were afterwards executed, particularly for clearing the Town Wall, building Stairs to get up to the Wall, making Communications from one Place to another, raising a Work at Wallace's Tower, to prevent the Communication by the Back of the Castle. This last Work had been directed at first in a very proper Manner by Bailie Robert Baillie, Overseer of the publick Works for this Year; but Bailie Gavin Hamilton afterwards stopt it, and gave a different Direction, by which that Work was for some time retarded.

Monday, September 2. The Lord Provost signed an Order in Council for augmenting the Town-Guard to the Number of 126 Men.

September 3. Bailie James Stewart and Mr. Colin Mac Laurin applied to the Lord Provost, with a Message from some Gentlemen who had met the Evening before, desiring in general that he would see to the Defence of the Town; and particularly, 1st, That he would order Moulds to be made for casting Bullets. 2^{dly}, That the Sluices of the North-Loch should be filled up. And, 3^{dly}, That a Distinction should be made betwixt the Inhabitants of known good Affection and others, before he came to intrust them with the Town's Arms.

The Lord Provost agreed to the first two Proposals, and ordered the immediate Execution of them; but as to the third, he demurred. He observed to them the Inconvenience of making Distinctions amongst Inhabitants upon bare Suspicions, especially about the Time of an approaching Election, when Parties were forming, which would lead them to spread Calumnies against one another upon By-Views; that this might occasion Heats and Dissentions dangerous to the Peace of the Town, and even strengthen the Disaffected by combining them together; that, where any real Ground of Complaint could be condescended, he was ready, not only to exclude such Persons from serving in the Trained-Bands, but also to oblige them to find Security for their good Behaviour. After this Reasoning the Gentlemen did not insist farther upon that Part of their Proposal, nor lay it before the Council, who were the proper Judges of the Expediency of such Measures, had they thought it fit to be insisted on.

September 4. The Lord Provost met with the same two Gentlemen, and several other Burgesses, in a Tavern, and, after a good deal of Conversation upon the several Expedients proposed for Defence of the Town, he desired they would digest their Proposals, and give them in, in Writing, which he would either immediately comply with, or give them an Answer in Writing. This they seemed cheerfully to agree to, and promised to give him in their Proposals, but never did it.

September 6. Some of the same Gentlemen presented to the Provost a Petition signed by about 80 or 90 of the Inhabitants, offering to serve as Volunteers for Defence of the City against any Attack; and particularly in contributing to erect the necessary and proper Barricado's for defending the Ports and several Avenues to the City, and praying that the City-Wall might be instantly repaired, and Stairs put up, &c. to appoint proper Places of Rendezvous, furnish them with necessary Arms, and allow them to name their Officers.

The Provost told the Gentlemen who had met with him two Days before, That, after what had past at that Meeting, he expected they would have communicated to him their Intentions, as they promised; but he never would mind any personal Neglect in a Matter where the publick Safety was concerned, and therefore should take care to present their Petition to the Magistrates without Delay, and return their Answer.

September 7. He did accordingly order a Meeting of the Magistrates to be summoned against Eleven next Forenoon; and, that there might be no unnecessary Delay from any Doubtfulness concerning the Legality of this Measure, the Provost advised with the Lord Advocate upon that Point in his Way to the Meeting; and, having got his and the Solicitor's Opinion of the Lawfulness of it, he forthwith met with the Magistrates, and laid the Petition and Opinion before them; upon which they cheerfully approved of the Proposal, and applauded the Zeal of the Petitioners.

Immediately after the Provost went to the Volunteers, who were met in the New Church Isle, and told them their Petition was to be complied with in every Particular, except the Nomination of their Officers: But, notwithstanding that did of Right belong to him, yet, as he wished of all Things they might have such Officers as they inclined to obey, if they would give him a List of 20 or 30 of their Number, he would confine his Nomination to that List. They complied. He named six of the fittest Persons in the List for Captains, with whom they were highly pleased, and he left the Nomination of the Subalterns to themselves, for which they returned him Thanks.

The same Day the Lord Provost moved in Council, that an Address should be drawn up and presented to his Majesty, which was unanimously agreed to; and a dutiful Address was accordingly drawn out, approved and signed; after which it was resolved, 'To authorize the Magistrates and Conveener to employ Persons with all possible Speed to put the City in a Posture of Defence, and particularly the Walls thereof.'

In consequence of this, Workmen were immediately sent for, and the Lord Provost ordered them forthwith to fall to work, under the Direction of Mr. Mac Laurin, and to work Night and Day, Sundays not excepted, till all was finished, and gave Warrants for impressing Workmen.

September 8. The Provost, of his own Accord, ordered all the Powder that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Castle; which was so punctually executed, that he behoved afterwards to take from the Castle what was necessary for the Service of the Town.

About the same Time he wrote an Order to Robert Davidson, Tackman of the Meal-Market, to clean out the Granaries, and provide Meal.

September 9. This Morning the Provost having occasionally heard that his Majesty's Sign-Manual, authorizing to levy the Regiment proposed, had come the Day before to the Lord Advocate's Hand, he went and waited on his Lordship, and, upon receiving the Sign-Manual, he immediately called a Council, and produced the same, which was addressed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and recites, 'That it had been represented to his Majesty, that the Lord Provost, Magistrates, Town-Council, Burgesses, and others of his City of Edinburgh, from the great Loyalty and Affection to his Person and Government, were at this Juncture willing and ready to raise and maintain, at their own proper Charge and Expence, by voluntary Subscription and Contribution, One thousand Foot for the Defence of the said City, and the Support of his Government; and they were desirous of obtaining his Royal Licence and Authority for the same: His Majesty therefore, reposing intire Trust and Confidence in the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of his said City, did thereby authorize and empower them to raise, form and discipline One thousand Foot to be employed for the Purposes above-mentioned; and his Majesty did thereby farther order and command, that the said One thousand Men shall be under the Direction of the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh: For the doing whereof this shall be a sufficient Warrant.'

As by this Warrant the Direction of the Regiment was placed in the Magistrates and Town-Council, so, as soon as it was read, they took the Direction into their own Hands, and appointed, as a Committee, the present and old Magistrates, Conveener, Deacons Lauder and Per- son, or any five of them, the Lord Provost being always one, and, in case of his Absence, any Nine of them, to be a Quorum, to consider what is most proper to be done upon this Occasion for levying the said Thousand Foot; and particularly to take in the Subscription of such of the Inhabitants as are willing to contribute for levying and maintaining the said Thousand Foot, with their proper Officers, to be named for the Purposes mentioned in the said Sign-Manual, for the Space of three Months after they shall be so intitled; as also to consider what is proper farther to be done for the Safety of this City, and for Support of the Government; which Committee shall meet at the Goldsmiths-Hall, twice each Day, at the Hours of Eleven in the Forenoon, and Four in the Afternoon; and recommended to the said Committee, to keep a Book, into which all their Proceedings and Actings shall be regularly introlled, to the end the same may be reported to the Council from Time to Time.

At the same Time, the Council ordered the Serjeants, Corporals and Drums of the City-Guard to beat up for Volunteers to compleat the Thousand Foot; and they nominated the Lord Provost to be Colonel and Commander of the said Thousand Foot, with Power to him to conduct and direct them, and the other Officers who shall be named to command under him, as the Council shall think proper, or as the Exigencies of Matters shall require.

And the Lord Provost shewed his chearful Concurrence in this Measure, by a Subscription far beyond any other that was made to this Regiment.

September 10 to 13. From this Day, to the 13th of September, there are daily Proceedings of the Council and Committee above named, who went on with all Diligence in raising the Men, taking in Subscriptions, providing Arms, Grain, and other Necessaries, and doing every thing that was judged proper for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence. It is unnecessary to trouble the Lords with reciting minutely every Particular which appears to this Purpose from the Records of the Council, and the Minutes of the Committee, which regularly met for carrying on the Business intrusted to them; and the Lord Provost appears, by their Minutes, to have been present at every Sederunt.

The Pannel is desirous to abridge the Trouble of the Court, in reading a long Story, as much as possible; and therefore shall but just mention a few of the many Instances of his Care and Concern in carrying on the general Measure now resolved on, for the Defence of the Town, about this Period.

That whenever any Complaints were made of the Slowness of the Workmen, that they were not going on with that Diligence they ought, the Lord Provost severely reprimanded them, and gave fresh Warrants to press Men and Carts, with strict Orders to lose no Time.

That Bailie Robert Baillie, who had the Inspection of the publick Works, with his Committee, were ordered to see that every thing was done that was necessary for the Defence and Preservation of the Town; and he had the Charge of impressing Workmen and Carts, and exercising all the Authority that was necessary for carrying on the publick Works with the utmost Dispatch.

That the Provost, on the 10th of September, wrote a Letter to Captain John Dalrymple, and also applied to Captain James Murray, to take upon them the Command of the Volunteers: But they both refused to accept of a Command of Men who had not been accustomed to military Discipline.

That the Provost moved in the Committee, to recommend to some of the City-Guard, Edinburgh Regiment, and Gentlemen Volunteers, that they should learn the Exercise of throwing the Hand-Granadoes.

That, in order to preserve the publick Money from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, the Provost called a Council, and proposed, that what was owing of the King's Cess should be paid up to the Receiver-General, though it had not been paid by the Inhabitants to the Collector; and for that Purpose the Provost forthwith signed an Order on the Cash Account for 1000*l.* Sterling, payable to the Receiver-General, to Account of the Cess due by the City, which was delivered to the Receiver-General.

September 13. That the Proceedings of the Committee for levying the City's Regiment, and forwarding the necessary Steps to be taken for the Safety and Defence of the Place, were read over in Presence of, and considered by the Council, and unanimously approved of, and the Council recommended to the Committee to continue in their Diligence.

September 14. Notice having come to Town this Morning, that the Rebels had passed the Forth some Miles above Stirling, and were directing their March towards Edinburgh, and Colonel Gairdner's Dragoons were retiring before them, the Lord Justice-Clerk sent a Message to the Provost, desiring he would meet with him, and some Lords and Gentlemen of the Army, and others, whom he was to bring from the Country, in order to concert what was to be done in this Exigence. The Provost immediately went to Lord Justice-Clerk's House, and told his Lordship he was sensible how much he stood in need of such Advice; that he would always be ready to follow it, and would be sure to attend them whenever called for.

He went on still in doing every thing that could be thought of as necessary to provide for the Defence of the Place. He signed a Warrant this Day, along with Lord Somerville as Justice of Peace, to press Men and Carts for carrying Sand and other Materials to the Ramparts and Works about the Walls, which was accordingly executed; and also to bring in Hay, Corn, and Provisions into the Town, and John Walker and William Mercer were sent to Leith for that Purpose.

This Day also the Provost ordered twenty-four Men to attend Captain Bryden in mounting the Cannon upon the Walls;

And granted Warrant to bring into the Town all the Ladders, Arms and Ammunition, which were in the Cannongate, Potter-Row, and other Suburbs adjacent to the Town, that they might not be seized by the Rebels.

Sunday, September 15. We are now come to Sunday the 15th of September; and as the Proceedings of this Day, and the next, are greatly misrepresented, as well as curtailed in the Pursuer's Information, it is necessary to be a little more particular in reciting them.

Upon Sunday Morning, when the Committee were met in the Goldsmiths-Hall, a Gentleman came with a Message from General Guest, to acquaint them, that when it was proposed, at a Meeting at his House, to order Hamilton's Regiment of Dragoons to join Gairdner's, and make a Stand against the Rebels, the General made a Difficulty, in regard he had no Body of Foot to sustain them. Upon which a Captain of the Volunteers undertook, that, at least, two hundred and fifty of these Gentlemen would be ready to march upon any Service the General would order them; he believed more would, but he could answer for two hundred and fifty, providing the Provost would allow Fifty of the Town-Guard to go along with them; and the Gentleman desired to know if the Provost would consent.

On first hearing of this Proposal, the Provost had some Difficulty to part with the Town-Guard, as being the Body of Men he could most depend upon, in case of any Occasion, to defend the Town; on which Bailie Robert Baillie said, he thought fifty of the Town-Guard could not be better employed than in supporting so many of the Volunteers, if they marched out; and instantly the Provost, upon Recollection, agreed, and answered, 'Mr. Baillie, you are in the right; in place of Fifty, they shall have the whole Town-Guard, and as many of the Edinburgh Regiment as are capable of doing Service.'

The Provost immediately went down in a Coach, along with the Gentleman who had brought the Message, and told the General the Resolution of the Committee as to sending out the Town-Guard and the Edinburgh Regiment; upon which the General sent Orders to Hamilton's Regiment to march through the Town and join Colonel Gairdner's.

The Provost came up to Town from the General's in a Coach, along with Provost Drummond, the first Captain of the Volunteers, and by the Way met two of their Officers, who came into the Coach, and told them, they were sure the Volunteers would not comply with the Measure proposed, and that they were now separated, and had gone home.

The Provost asked Mr. Drummond what would be the best Signal to bring the Volunteers together? He said they had only two, three Guns from the Castle, or ringing the Alarm-Bell. The first, says the Provost, is not in our Power, as the Castle is shut; and the other, in Time of divine Service, may alarm the Town. No help for it, says Mr. Drummond, the Bell must be rung.

The Bell was accordingly rung, which alarmed the People, and made them leave the Church. The Volunteers, convened in the Lawn-Market, and huzza'd Hamilton's Dragoons as they past along. Their Officers applied to the Provost, and asked if he had ordered them to go out and join the Dragoons? He told them, he had no Power to order them any where out of Town; but he had consented, that as many as were inclined should go out with the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, to sustain the Dragoons in opposing the Rebels. The Measure was generally not liked by the Volunteers, and was imputed to the Provost as if he had been the first Proposer, as one of their Officers told him with a good deal of Warmth.

After many Expostulations among themselves, at last Mr. Drummond marched up on the Head of his Company, and some others followed. They went the Length of the West Port and then returned.

Two of their Officers went forward to stop the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment, who had marched on to sustain the Dragoons, and found them between the Coltbridge and Brucehill: But the Provost being informed of this, sent Orders that the City Regiment and Town-Guard should march forward, and take their Orders from the commanding Officer. General Guest, when he heard of the Return of the Volunteers, was vexed at the Disappointment, and said, if he had expected it, he would not have ordered Hamilton's Regiment to go out to join the other in Defence of the Town.

The Provost sent up Mr. Stewart, chief Constable, to the Castle, with a signed Order for a Number of Matches for the Use of the Cannon mounted on the Town-Walls, which were accordingly delivered, and brought down to the Goldsmiths-Hall.

The Provost convened the Trained-Bands under their proper Colours and Officers, and gave them Notice to hold themselves in Readiness upon a Minute's Warning, and three Companies of them were ordered to mount Guard.

He also ordered the Constables to search Houses, of which there was any Suspicion, for Arms and treasonable Papers.

This Afternoon Brigadier Fowkes came to Town, and the Provost was called in the Evening to Lord Justice-Clerk's, where Lord Advocate, General Guest, Brigadier Fowkes, and several other Gentlemen of the Army were present. A Proposal was made, that the Dragoons might be brought into Town, with a View to give them some Rest and Refreshment, and have their Horses fed on the Street: But after the Thing was debated among the Gentlemen of the Military, who considered that the Avenues of the Town might be taken Possession of by the Rebels, the Streets barricadoed, and the Houses lined, and that the Dragoons might very probably, by this Means, fall into the Hands of the Rebels, it was agreed to be a Thing not to be attempted.

From this the Provost went along with Major Cochran, Captain Murray, Provost Drummond, and others, to the House of Mrs. Clark Vintner, where a Disposition was made of the several Corps of armed Men into different Quarters of the Town, particular Guards assigned them, and Places for their Alarm-Post condescended on, where each of them should appear on the proper Signals; Copies of which were given to the commanding Officers of the different Corps.

This Afternoon the Provost met with Sir Robert Dickson upon the Street, who had come in with a considerable Number of Volunteers; he received him with great Civility, as both his personal Character and Errand deserved; immediately gave Orders that his Men should be lodged in the Kirk, and that a sufficient Quantity of Bread and Ale should be carried there for a Refreshment to them without Delay.

About this Time Messages were sent to the Castle and Leith, to procure Gunners for loading the Cannon. Mr. Guest could afford us none out of the Castle; Bailie Scot made search over all Leith, assisted by David Dryburgh, Charles and Alexander Sheriffs, and sent us up what could be found found there; Application was also made to the Uffs Man of War, and the Answer returned, That the Captain could send none.

By Orders from the Lord Provost, the great Guns upon the Walls were begun to be charged on Sunday Evening, and the Gunners employed continued to charge them till Two o'Clock next Morning.

The Provost this Evening sent up an Officer of the Town-Guard to beg the General would order a Signal to be put up in the Castle, to discover the Road the Rebels should take to Edinburgh, that Measures might be taken to turn the whole Force as much as possible to that Side; and an Answer was returned, That his Request should be complied with.

All this Sunday Evening, from Seven to Twelve, the Provost was constantly employed, either in the Goldsmiths-Hall, or at the different Guards of the Town, conversing with the Military Men about Orders, or with the Captains of the Trained-Bands. At Twelve at Night he began the grand Round, which lasted till about Four o'Clock in the Morning.

Monday, September 16. Having gone home for an Hour or two, he was upon the Streets again at Six in the Morning, reviewing the Barricades that were making at the Ports, and superintending the other public Works about the Town.

At Nine o'Clock, He ordered Bread and Ale to be carried out to the Dragoons; and upon Mr. Powles's applying to him for the Town-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment to be sent out to join the Dragoons, he immediately ordered them to parade in the Parliament-Cloise, and march out, which they did.

He next gave orders that Mutton, Beef, &c. should be bought, and boiled in all the Taverns in Town, for the Use of the Dragoons; and went through several of the Taverns with Mr. Baillie and Mr. Hamilton, and gave Directions thereabout.

Being informed by Colonel Clayton, that the Provisions first sent out were not sufficient, he expressed his Displeasure that his first Orders had not been fully obeyed, sent to the Bakers and Brewers, and caused press Carts to carry out Provisions.

Between Ten and Eleven o'Clock, When sitting in a Closet in the Coffee-House with Commissary Listie, Andrew Alves came in to them, and said, That in his Way to Town, he happened to ride near the Rebels; that the Duke of Perth knew him, and ordered him to come nearer; and upon hearing he was going to Edinburgh, said, I understand the Provost and Magistrates are making great Preparations against us, but we are resolved to pay them a Visit; if they will keep their Arms in their Possession, and allow us to come peaceably into Town, they shall be civilly dealt with; if not, they must pay their Account with Military Execution, or Words to that Purpose: And turning to a young Man he called the Prince, he asked him, Whether or not that was his Pleasure? Which the other seemed to assent to. The Provost said, Mr. Alves, this is a very extraordinary Message; but they will find we are not to be intimidated by Threats.

The Provost went immediately over to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and acquainted two Gentlemen of the Committee of what Mr. Alves had said, and consulted with them what was proper to be done. They were of Opinion it was most proper to neglect it, and take no Step that might publish to the Inhabitants the Threatening they had received.

The Provost, after reviewing some of the Works about the Town, on his Return to the Street, was informed, that Andrew Alves had adventured to repeat to others what had passed betwixt him and the Rebels; upon which he went straight to the Lord Advocate to ask his Advice, where he found Mr. Alves; and, by the Advocate's Advice, he signed a Warrant for committing him.

Monday, September 16th, Afternoon about Three o'Clock, The Provost being then in Mrs. Wilson's, was called out from the Company by Mr. Baillie and Mr. Perreft, who acquainted him, that a Petition to the Magistrates was banding about among the Inhabitants, desiring they might be consulted upon what was proper to be done upon this juncture. At this the Provost was surprised, as well as vexed: However, as soon as he came out to go to the Goldsmiths-Hall, he was met by a great Crowd of Inhabitants, who delivered to him the Petition, which is produced in Process, praying, That the Magistrates, before they came to any Resolution, either of defending or giving up the Town, would call a Meeting of all the principal Inhabitants and Heritors, at present in the Place, to consult with them what is proper to be done in an Affair of so great Importance. Upon this the Provost immediately went to the Goldsmiths-Hall; they followed him, and endeavoured to crowd in: Upon which he was provoked, and asked, If they meant to enforce their Petition by Numbers; begged they would be gone, and leave it to the Magistrates, who were to consider what was most expedient to be done with respect to the Place; and immediately he caused the Drum to go about, and order the Inhabitants to retire from the Streets, who were all in an Uproar upon hearing that the Dragoons had retreated from the Rebels.

The Provost, in his Way to the Ports, met with the Lord Advocate and Solicitor, who asked him, If he did not think 100 Dragoons might be of Use to be brought into the Town; and he agreeing that they might, the Advocate asked him to sign a Letter in Conjunction with him and the Solicitor, to General Guest, to send in 100 Dragoons; which the Provost immediately did, and then went on to see the Gates barricadoed.

After the Gates were barricadoed, he ordered Mr. Stewart the Constable to mount the Walls, and look out for the Dragoons; and so soon as he should see them come near the Walls, to open the Gates and let them in: He had before provided a large Quantity of Hay for the Use of their Horses.

As he was returning up the Westbow, a Citizen of very considerable Substance, and undoubted Loyalty, came to him, and said, He applied to him in Name of himself, and many of the most considerable Citizens, to expostulate and beg, that the Defence of the Town might not be insisted on, which could only tend to expose the Lives of the Citizens. To which the Provost answered, That his Request could not be granted.

In returning to the Goldsmiths-Hall, the Provost gave Captain Hamilton Orders with respect to the City-Guard, 20 of them to remain at the West-Port, 20 to go to Bristo Port, 20 to the Netherbow, and 40 of them to remain in the Guard, to move to any Place where they should be most needed, which was allowed to be a very proper Disposition.

During all the Way in his Return, the Cries of the People were heard on every Side: What, would he have them all murdered, by defending the Town after the Dragoons had run away? And other Words to that Purpose.

As soon as he was returned to the Hall, where the Committee was met, he sent Bailie Hamilton, Robert Baillie, and John Perreft, for the Lord Justice-Clerk, Lord Advocate, and the Solicitor, to beg they would come and assist them with their Counsel, saying, He chafed to be determined only by their Advice. They returned, and reported that they had all gone out of Town.

The Provost expressed great Concern when he found himself destitute of the Advice he most relied upon at so critical a Juncture, and then desired that the Officers of the Army should be sent for, and the Officers of the Volunteers who were convened at their Posts by the ringing of the Alarm-Bell: Most of the Captains, and some other Officers of the Volunteers came; but no other Military Men were found in Town, except Captain James Murray and Major Coburn. The Lord Provost addressed himself to them, and said, That, for his Part, he was willing to counter any Danger for the Defence of the Town: He hoped the Inhabitants would do their Duty, and hoped the Enemy might be kept out until Assistance should come to their Relief; and asked Mr. Murray what was his Opinion? Who said, he pitied him, but was at a Loss what Advice to give: And being farther pressed by the Provost, he answered, That if the Volunteers, Trained-Bands, and other armed Men within the Town, were disposed to do their utmost, he believed they might make a good Defence; but if they were not disposed to fight, he would advise the sending the Government's Arms to the Castle.

The Provost said, He hoped those Gentlemen who had undertaken the Defence of the Town, would not now abandon it when the Danger drew near, but remember what Expence the Town had been at, what Assurance they had given to his Majesty, and what they had promised to perform, when the Danger was at a greater Distance. He then asked all the Captains and Officers of the Volunteers that were present, what he could expect from them? One said, he did not find any Disposition in his Men to fight: Another told, That there did not remain fifteen of the Company to which he belonged; but as he had promised to risk his Life in Defence of the Town, he would still do it; though he was sure not five of the fifteen would follow him: And others of them declined to make any Answer at all.

About this Time Walter Graft came into the Goldsmiths-Hall, and he said he was sent by the Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Advocate, to desire the Provost would send an Order to General Powles to bring the Dragoons into Town. To which he answered, That he was surprised at the Message, after what had passed the Night before; that he would sign no Order, as he had no Power over the Dragoons; but if they pleased to send them in, they should be made very welcome, and we should join them in Defence of the Town.

Mr. Graft said, That the Lord Advocate and Justice-Clerk thought it proper that the Provost should sign the Order. To which he answered, That he did not chuse to make himself accountable for the Dragoons, after what he had heard in the Lord Justice-Clerk's last Night; but thought it more proper that they should send their Orders, if they had altered their Way of Thinking about that Matter. Mr. Graft desired to have the Provost's Answer in Writing, with which he readily complied.

About this Time the Fears of the Inhabitants had brought a great Crowd into the Goldsmiths-Hall, and about the Door of it, who all cried out against the Madness of defending the Town, when all the Officers Civil and Military had left it, which shewed they understood it could not be defended. The Crowd still increasing, a Member of the Council proposed they should go to the New Kirk Isle, as they were like to be smothered in that narrow Place: Upon which the Lord Provost left the Hall, and went out to the Parliament-Cloise, where great Numbers came up to him, remonstrating, in the strongest Terms, against attempting any Defence, which could have no other Effect, but to expose them to Military Execution.

The Provost did all he could to reanimate the People; but when he was talking to them, Mr. Cunningham of Gairdner's Dragoons came up to him on Horseback, with a Message from Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney, desiring he would order the Dragoons Baggage to be forthwith sent out to them, because they were going to Haddington; that they found they had been greatly deceived in the Number of the Rebels; for now they computed them to be near Eight Thousand. This Account, which was given by Mr. Cunningham in the Hearing of the Crowd, did greatly contribute to increase the Terror of the Inhabitants, who were heard crying every where, What a Madness it was to pretend to stand out against such a Number.

The Provost expostulated with them in the New Kirk Isle, That he hoped they would not now abandon the Defence of the Town; that he was ready to concur in it to the utmost of his Power, and expected the Danger would not be so great as some Men's Fears made it. But upon this such a Noise was raised, that nothing could be heard but a general Cry for giving up the Town, not above two or three of the whole Multitude present appearing to be of a different Opinion.

About this Time a Letter was thrown in, directed to the Lord Provost and Magistrates, which was opened by Walter Orrock; and when he told it was signed by Charles P. R. the Provost stooped him, and said, he would not witness the reading such a Letter: Upon which many calling out to read, he said he had been too long there, and with Difficulty got to the Door, and returned to the Goldsmiths-Hall, where the Magistrates also came, and a great Number of the Inhabitants, and immediately they sent to convene the Town's Assesors; but only one of the four was to be found: They asked his Opinion what was to be done with respect to the Letter, and whether it should be read? But he having declined to give any Opinion, and the Inhabitants expressing the utmost Uneasiness both within and without Doors, the Letter was read without any Authority from the Provost, and contained a Threatening of their highest Resentment, in case any Opposition was made to their Entry, or that any of the Cannon or Arms were allowed to be carried off.

After

After this nothing was to be heard but loud Cries against a fruitless Opposition, and against Delivery up of the Town's Arms to the Castle, which, it was said, would occasion Destruction to the City; and many in the Hall insisted that a Deputation should be sent out, to beg that Hostilities might not be commenced against the City until they had time to deliberate what Answer they should return; and, as it was believed the Enemy was at the Gates, the Deputation was immediately hurried away, viz. Bailies Gavin Hamilton, John Yett, David Inglis, and Convener Nerrie.

The Volunteers in the mean time did, without applying to the Lord Provost for Orders or Directions, of their own Accord, take a Resolution to give up their Arms to the Castle, which they forthwith executed, and thereby dismist themselves from the Service.

One of their principal Officers, whose Zeal or Bravery was never at any time called in question, upon his Return from the Castle, was met on the Street by a Gentleman, who told him, the Rebels were not near so numerous or formidable as they had imagined; and that it would be a Shame to surrender the Town to them. But the Officer answered, it might be so; but it could not now be helped; that Information had come too late.

And, some Hours before, another Gentleman of the same Corps had sent a Message to his Wife, begging her not to be under any Fear about him, for the Town was to be given up.

At this Time a Message came from the Castle, by Robert Griffith a Gunner, desiring that the Cannon on the Town-Walls might be nailed up; it was the Opinion of the Committee, that the Provost should give no Orders in these Matters, after what had past; but he told the Messenger, that Mr. Guesf was at Liberty to do what he thought best for the Service of the Government, and nothing hindered him to spike up the Cannon, if he thought fit: And he was also told, that the Town-Officers would shew him where the Cannon were, for that Purpose.

About the same time the Adjutant of the City Regiment wanted to know what should be done with the Arms under his Care; and was told, that it was not thought proper the Provost should give Orders thereunto; that the Council was afraid the City might suffer from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and even that they themselves might suffer from the Populace, if such Orders were given; but, at the same time, that the Soldiers of the new-levied Regiment, possess of those Arms, should be privately acquainted to return them to the Castle; and by this means the whole Arms of the City-Regiment were returned, except those of the Men upon Guard.

But it was not practicable to get the Arms of the Trained-Bands conveyed to the Castle in this Manner. These Arms were in possession of the substantial Burgesses and Householders of the Town, who considered them as their own Property, having been bought with their own Money when admitted Burgesses: And as most of them had not only their Wives and Children, but the greatest Part of their Substance within the Town, they would not consent to expose all that is dear to them to the Rage of an incensed Enemy, for the sake of keeping those Arms out of their Hands, especially as they were in themselves of very little Value, being generally old Guns without Bayonets, bought at Half-a-Crown or three Shillings a-piece, more for Shew than Use, as they were never otherwise employed than at a Birth-Day Parade.

But, of little Value as they were, the Provost was desirous, if possible, they should be saved out of the Hands of the Rebels; and as neither he nor the Council were able of themselves to compel the Inhabitants to part with them, he thought of the only Expedient that could be taken in such a Case, which was, to send a Message to the Castle to inform Mr. Guesf of the Situation of the Town, and the general Conformation of the Inhabitants, and to beg that he would send a Party down to take up their Arms, as the Council was not at liberty to give Orders, for fear of the Consequences with regard to the Town. This Message was delivered to General Guesf, but was not complied with.

From the Goldsmiths-Hall the Committee went to the Council-House, and were alarmed with the Cry, that the Rebels had broke into the Town. This was owing to the Fright of a Party of Dragoons, who guarded their Baggage at the Netherbow Port, and when the Port was opened to let out the Baggage, a great Crowd burst in, which the Dragoons imagined were the Rebels, and rode off as hard as they could, in great Terror, to the Castle.

Upon this Alarm the Commandant put the Provost in mind of the Threatning sent to the Town, that every Man who was found in Arms should be put to death; and asked the Provost what the Trained-Bands should do at the Weigh-House and West Port, when the Rebels had already burst in at the other End of the Town? The only Answer any Man alive could give, in such Circumstances, was, they should quit their Arms to avoid being massacred.

After this Alarm was over, Mr. Grosf arrived with Accounts that Sir John Cope had been seen off Dunbar, and, as the Wind was unfavourable for bringing them up the Frith, it was thought he would land that Night at Dunbar, and might soon come to their Relief. Upon which Bailie James Mansfield was immediately dispatched to call back the Deputies, and a Town Officer was also sent to run the shortest Way and stop them; but neither could overtake them.

It being now again resolved, upon this Prospect of Relief, to put the Town in a State of Defence, Mr. Grosf, and Mr. Lindsay Secretary at War, went up to the Castle along with Provost Coutts, and acquainted the General with the good News of Sir John Cope's Arrival, and asked if he would think it proper to order the Dragoons back for the Defence of the City, and whether he would deliver back the Arms that had been returned to the Castle. General Guesf's Answer was, That he did not think it for his Majesty's Service to order the Dragoons back to Edinburgh, it being more fit they should join Sir John Cope's small Army: That the Gentlemen of the Council might put the Burghers Arms into the best Hands; and if, thereafter, the Lord Provost should find a Disposition in the Inhabitants to defend the Town, he might let him know: And added, that he would send down a Message to the Serjeant that was nailing up the Cannon on the Walls, to stop him.

After the Gentlemen had returned from the Castle, it was proposed in Council, by a Captain of the Volunteers, that the Alarm-Bell should be rung: But it was objected by some of the Members, that nothing of that Kind ought to be done till the Deputies were returned, lest the Rebels, who were apprehended to be very near, should thereby be enraged, and make them suffer for it. One of the Reverend Ministers of the City, who had been most active and zealous in the Service of the Government, and some other well-affected Burgesses, agreed in this Opinion; and all of them were positive that nothing could be done for Defence of the City, unless the Dragoons were brought back: Upon which Mr. Grosf rose up, and said he would go and endeavour to bring them back; and Provost Drummond and he went off upon that Errand, but did not again return.

Mr. Lindsay, the Secretary at War, asked the Lord Provost, if he would send an Order to General Guesf to re-deliver the Arms which had been sent up to the Castle. Had the Provost been capable of any Degree of the bad Intention the Pursuer would now suppose, it was easy to comply with this Request, for one-tenth Part of those Arms would have been of more Value to the Rebels, than the whole Arms that were in the Hands of the Burghers: But, as his constant Intention was to bring no Arms or Ammunition from the Castle, but as there was necessary Occasion for them, lest they should fall into the Hands of the Rebels, so agreeably to his Intention, he answered Mr. Lindsay, 'That, before he gave such Orders, he behaved to see a better Disposition in the Inhabitants to defend the City.'

For, since the Alarm of the Rebels bursting into the Town, most of the Inhabitants, dreading the Execution of their Threats against such as should be found in Arms, had quitted their Arms and gone home.

The Gentlemen who had gone to the Rebel Camp returned, and brought their Answer, requiring the City to receive their Prince as Prince Regent, and that no Arms or Ammunition should be suffered to be carried off or concealed; and demanding an Answer against Two o'Clock in the Morning, their Camp being then at Gray's Mill, about two Miles distant from the City. After receiving this Answer, the Gentlemen of the Council, with some other Citizens, continued together deliberating what was to be done, till Two o'Clock in the Morning, many of them expecting Relief from the Dragoons, which Provost Drummond and Mr. Grosf had been sent some time before to bring back, if possible, to their Assistance.

When the Clock struck Two, and no Relief came, it was proposed to send a second Deputation, in order to gain a further Time, which was unanimously agreed to; and Bailie Robert Bailie, Provost Coutts, with two or three other Counsellors, were sent off to beg a Delay till nine or ten o'Clock, by reason the Burghers were all in Bed, and could not be convened for several Hours: At the same time they were authorized by the Provost to say, 'That he would rather die than comply with the Condition of receiving their Prince as Regent of Scotland.'

Messages were at the same time sent to the principal Inhabitants and Citizens, to come and meet with the Council, and concert what was proper to be done; but few of them had come, when the Deputies returned with an Answer much to the same Purpose with the former; and soon after Notice was brought, that a Part of the Rebel Army had rushed in at the Netherbow Port, and made themselves Masters of the City Guard, who had been so harrassed with the extraordinary Duty all the preceding Week, and by being out under Arms for two Days before along with the Dragoons, that they were hardly fit to do any Duty, far less able to oppose an Army of Rebels, who were numerous and hardy enough to defeat a regular disciplined Body of the King's Forces a few Days after.

From the above Narrative, which is in every Particular strictly agreeable to the Fact as it happened, it appears in what manner this City had the Misfortune to fall into the Possession of the Rebels, after all possible Care taken by the Provost, Magistrates and Council, to prevent it. Some of them indeed were of Opinion, as well as many other of the wisest and best-affected Citizens in the Town, that the Scheme of defending the City, against an Attack, was in itself impracticable. The old Walls are hardly sufficient to keep out smuggled Goods, but by no means able to endure any Siege or Attack: Besides, there were so many other obvious Ways the Town might be forced to surrender, by throwing in Fire, burning the Houses which adjoin to the Town in some Places where there is no Wall, cutting the Water-Pipes, which would starve the Town in a Day, &c. that a great many well-affected Burgesses thought the best thing could be done for the Service of the Government, was to dispose of any thing that could be of use to the Rebels, and leave the Gates of the City open.

But, though this was the Opinion of the Provost, as well as many of the Council and most substantial Citizens, yet, when the other Scheme was resolved, the Provost exerted all the Vigilance he was capable of to make it effectual, as appears from the Circumstances above related. He spent his whole Time in the publick Service, from Six o'Clock in the Morning to Twelve at Night, sometimes till Four next Morning, going about viewing the publick Works, giving Orders, advising Expedients, taking and desiring to have the best Advice: And, at last, when the Thing came to the Push, he was ashamed to see many, who had appeared keen for the Scheme in the Beginning, unwilling to carry it to the last Execution; and that, in general, the Inhabitants were so terrified by the frightful Notion they had got of the Rebels, that he could find no Concurrence to make an Opposition, and keep out the City, not even from those who had first taken Arms in its Defence. He expressed his Sentiments in as strong a Manner in time of Danger, as the Prosecutors can now declaim at Ease, of the Reproach it would be to the City to be surrendered without Defence, after all the Preparations that had been made, and the Assurances they had given his Majesty to that Purpose; and declared himself ready to mount the Walls with the smallest Number of Men that could support him: But the Terror they were in from the Cruelty of the Rebels, and the little Prospect they had of making an effectual Defence, without farther Assistance than they had within the Town, prevailed over his Expostulations, and rendered his Design abortive, which he was willing to have prosecuted at the Hazard of his Life.

At the same Time it is obvious, that the Prosecutors set this Event in a very false Light, when they suppose, 'That the King's Army was within a Day's March of the City when it was taken by the Rebels, and that it was possible to have kept out the Town till the Army had come up to its Relief.' For it is a certain undisputed Fact, that General Cope's Army was still on Ship-board when the Rebels took Possession of the City, and very uncertain when they would disembark; and that, after all the Haste they could possibly make to approach the City, they could not get within Six Miles of it sooner than the Friday Evening, near four Days after the City was taken: Even the Pursuers do not maintain that the City could, by any Defence, have been kept out the Half of that Time. In fact, it is certain that it could not have been kept out many Hours. And therefore, take the Case in any View, it is highly unjust to lay the Blame of the bad Consequences, which afterwards followed, upon an Event which appears, in the Nature of Things, to have been unavoidable, as Circumstances then stood, and are admitted on all hands.

It is not properly the Pannel's Business to make an Answer to the Pursuer's Declaration upon the Consequences of this Event, which, were they founded, could not affect him, who did the utmost in his Power to prevent them. But the Exaggerations are too obvious to take with the most credulous. It will never go down with any body, that the Victory obtained by the Rebels at Prefton-Pans was owing to the Tents or Furniture they got out of the City three Weeks after it was fought, or to the broken Guns that were dropt by the Burghers, when it is notorious that greater Numbers of the Rebels came armed to Edinburgh than were engaged in that Action. None of the Broad-swords, which were the Instruments of the Mischief done on that Day, were found in Edinburgh. Every one who considers the Matter coolly, will own that the Case must have been the same, had they met with Sir John Cope's Army the Day before they came to Edinburgh, as three Days after it. All depended on the Conduct and Behaviour of the two Armies, and this City behaved in course to fall to the Victor.

Were Conjectures of this Nature to be indulged, it would be more just to impute the taking of this City to General Cope's not having guarded the Passes on the Forth, or fought the Rebels when they were in the North in much smaller Numbers; by either of which their Progress would have been stopt from coming Southwards. But, to suppose that a Town, which, without any Siege, could be laid in Ashes by any Enemy from without in a few Hours, should be able to put a Stop to the Progress of a Rebellion, which was strong enough to stand a pitched Battle against the whole Forces in this Part of the united Kingdom, and defeat them, is a Stretch of Imagination too wild to be listened to even by the Vulgar, far less to be insisted on before any Court.

It was however the Misfortune of the Pannel, after all his Pains, Labour and Diligence, and the Hazards he was ready to undergo, to be attacked by Suspensions, as if he had failed in his Duty. To this several different Causes contributed, which frequently arise on such Occasions. In extraordinary Emergents of this Kind, Zeal in some, and Fear in others, never miss to set various Passions a-working: A third Source occurred, not so blameless as either of the other two. When the Accounts first came of a Rebellion stirring in the Northern Parts, the Approach of the annual Elections, and Steps thereto preparative, was what chiefly employed the Thoughts of the Inhabitants of this Town. The Danger then was distant, and it was hoped would approach no nearer: But it was a good Opportunity for such as looked with an envious Eye upon the present Magistracy, as having been too long in Possession of the good Opinion of the People, to undermine them, by working upon the Fears and Credulity of others. Surmises and Jealousies are easily spread when People are under Terror: And, by proposing contrary Schemes, they had a good Chance, either to bring the Magistrates into Disrepute with the People, if they opposed them; or to load them with the Blame, if, when they yielded, the Execution of them should, as in all Probability it would, in the Event, prove impracticable.

By such Attempts of the interested and designing, it can hardly fail that many of the honest and well-meaning will be led away, when their Fears and Jealousies are so strongly raised as to get the better of their Reason: And this was much increased by Reports artificially spread with the same View thro' the News-Papers in different Parts of the Kingdom, of Facts now notoriously known to be false, but which were easy to gain Belief at a Time when Men's Minds were in a Ferment, jealous of the Conduct of one another, and ready to catch at every remotest Suspicion.

Under these undeservedly unlucky Circumstances, the Pannel, conscious of his Innocence, set out for London to attend his Duty in Parliament; and, as soon as he came there, wrote to one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State to acquaint him of his Arrival, and that, as he understood many scandalous Reports had been spread to his Disadvantage, he was ready to wait on his Lordship, or any of his Majesty's Ministers, to give them Satisfaction with respect to his Conduct.

Two Days after, he was taken into Custody at his own House, and carried to a Messenger's House, where he remained for some Time: After that he underwent an Examination before the Cabinet Council, which lasted for several Hours, in which he gave full and particular Answers to every Question that was asked him, and strictly agreeable to the true State of the Fact as above set forth; but the malicious Reports of his Enemies had gained so much Ground, that he was after this sent to the Tower, and kept a close Prisoner for three Months. Thereafter, as the Credit of these Slanders, supported by no Evidence, began to abate, his Confinement was relaxed; but still continued 'till the 23d of January 1747, when he was admitted to Bail before one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon a Recognizance to the Extent of fifteen thousand Pounds Sterling, to appear before his Majesty's Court of Justiciary at Edinburgh, at the first Sitting of the said Court after the 20th Day of March then next.

During his long Confinement he made many Applications, expressing his Willingness to meet his Trial; and, as soon as he was liberated and came down to Scotland, he applied to the High Court of Justiciary at their first Meeting after the 20th of March; and now, at the Distance of above a Year and a Half from his first Confinement, he has been at last seised with a Libel at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate; and, upon the 13th instant, Counsel on both Sides were heard before the Court upon the Relevancy of the Libel, and the Court has been pleased to order Informations to be given in.

The Counsel for the Pannel, in Answer to this Libel, after setting forth the several Steps of the Pannel's Conduct, and his Care, Diligence and Activity in the Discharge of his Office, as above represented, did in the first Place, observe, That although a Prosecution of this Kind against a Magistrate, not for any criminal Fact alleged to be committed, but for supposed Neglects, Mistakes, or Errors in the Execution of his Office, is pretty new and extraordinary, and, it is believed, will hardly meet with any Precedent before a Court of Justice, yet the Pannel would not decline the Jurisdiction of the Court in any Trial that can be brought: he is sure his Conduct will stand the strictest Test of Inquiry; and therefore was willing cheerfully to submit the Case to the Judgment of the Court.

At the same Time it was observed, That, after all the Pains that had been taken to find Fault with the Pannel, and to lay upon him the Load of the Misfortunes which beset the City of Edinburgh during the late Rebellion; yet it is very remarkable, that now, when the Libel appears, drawn out with the greatest Art and Skill for that Purpose, it does not contain any one Fact that is in itself criminal: And even the Ommissions charged upon the Pannel, are such as are either merely trifling, or at least of a very ambiguous Nature, and such as his Conduct would have been equally liable to be misconstrued in, had he followed the opposite Course, or done the Reverse of what he is charged with in the Libel.

That, if such are supposed to be relevant Grounds of Accusation against a Magistrate, his Situation must be very singularly unhappy, especially when Times of Danger and Difficulty occur: The Office he cannot decline to accept of, he can as little decline to act; he cannot stop, but must determine himself one Way or other; and, after he has honestly determined, and acted to the best of his Judgment, if he is liable, upon the Event's turning out unsuccessful, to be tried as a Criminal, why he did not take a different Course, it is impossible for any Man, who has the Misfortune to be placed in such Circumstances, let him take what Course he will, to avoid Punishment: And this is the more applicable to the present Case that, 2do, This Libel does not charge the Pannel with any Disaffection to his Majesty, or our present happy Establishment, far less does it offer to prove any Fact that can infer it; nor is it alleged that any of the Articles charged in the Libel happened ex proposito, or ex male animo. The natural Presumption therefore lies for Innocence, when the Facts are such as can admit of that Construction. In this Case the Presumption is confirmed from the whole Tenor of the Pannel's Conduct in his past Life, as well as from his Situation in the World. As he is a Gentleman of a pretty considerable Property in this Country, and who deals in Trade to a very large Extent, it cannot be supposed he would wish to see Confusions arise in his Country, or the Laws to be put to Silence by lawless Force. That such Disorders must in every Event affect him deeply, by ruining his Debtors, and hurting his Interest in many different Respects; and therefore, unless he were supposed to be destitute of common Sense, there can lie no Probability that he would wilfully do any thing that should tend to increase such Disorders, highly mischievous to himself, as well as to his Country.

And, 3tio, It was in general observed, That, in the present Case, the Pannel had not the sole Direction of any one of the Articles referred to in the Libel: That, as Lord Provost of this City, he was only the Head of a numerous Body of Magistrates and Town-Council, and behaved to act by their Direction. That, by his Majesty's Sign-Manual, the Direction of the City-Regiment was also expressly given to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; that accordingly the Town-Council did forthwith take the Direction into their Hands; and named a Committee, which was to meet twice a Day, to consider and order what was proper to be done for the Safety of the City and Support of the Government; and though the Provost was named Colonel of the Regiment, yet, by his Nomination, he was limited to conduct and direct them in such Manner as the Council should think proper.

That the Pannel did accordingly act in every Particular by the Direction and Concurrence of the Council, and the Committee by them named; that no Instance can be given where he opposed their Resolutions and Orders, or followed his own Will or Judgment in Opposition to theirs; and in such Circumstances it seems impossible to assign a Reason why a Charge of Guilt should be fixed upon the Pannel, when the Council, by whose Direction he acted, are admitted to be innocent, and to have all along behaved dutifully to his Majesty and his Government.

And, more particularly, with respect to the several Articles of the Libel, it was insisted, That, neither separately nor jointly, can they amount to the Charge of a Crime against the Pannel.

The first Article begins with 'setting forth, & That he did nothing of his own Accord towards providing for Defence of the City.' But it is evident this, if true, could be no Point of Dittay. Had the Pannel been of Opinion that it was not expedient for the Service of the Government to attempt a Defence of the City, which was the Opinion of many well-affected Councillors and Citizens; or if he had been of the contrary Opinion, but every thing he could suggest for its Defence should happen to be proposed by some other Member of the Council or Committee; in either of these Cases the Proposition here alleged might have been true, and yet the Pannel intirely blameless. At the same time, that nothing can be more contrary to Truth, evidently appears from Numbers of Instances in the above Narrative, where the Pannel, of his own Motion and Accord, suggested and executed many Expedients of great Importance, towards providing effectually for the Safety of the Town.

And as to the second Branch of this Article, 'That the Pannel stirred affected Doubts concerning the Legality of the Proposition for raising the City-Regiment,' which Doubts the Pursuer, in his Information, endeavours to remove, by observing, 'That the Act 1661, upon which they were founded, is repealed by the Act 7mo Anne, which provides, 'That nothing thereafter shall be High Treason in Scotland, but what is such by the Law of England.'

It is answered, That the Doubt upon this Point is not singly founded upon the Statute 1661, but upon the Common Law, by which the Power of Arms is one of the King's undoubted Prerogatives, and the encroaching upon it has been declared highly criminal, by Statutes anterior to the year 1601, particularly by the Act 75th, Parl. 1563, which forbids any Person of whatsoever Quality, Estate, Condition or Degree, to raise Men in Arms without special Licence, in Writ had from the Crown, under the Pain of Death. This Act has never been repealed by any subsequent Law, either expressly or by Implication; and it makes no Exception of Magistrates of Burghs, but extends to all Subjects of whatever Condition or Degree, nor of raising Men upon Pretence of the King's Service. It is well known no such Exception was intended to be implied, either in this Statute, or the after Laws made in the Reign of Charles II; for the Disturbances which happened in those Times, and which these Laws were intended to prevent, were frequently occasioned by raising Men upon such Pretences.

But it is unnecessary for the Pannel to enlarge on this Argument. Were a Doubt, in any Case, to be constructed as a Crime, for which, it is believed, no Precedent can be alledged, the Pannel must be fully justified in this Case, by the Authority already mentioned, of the honourable Judges and his Majesty's Counsel, learned in the Law, who agreed in Opinion, that the levying this Regiment without his Majesty's express Warrant would be illegal.

And it is still as extraordinary, that it should be made a Point of Dittay in the second Article, That Objections were made to the Legality of the Association of the Volunteers: They were associated in Arms for the precise same Purposes for which the Regiment was to be raised, viz. for the Defence of the City and Support of the Government: And the Counsel for the Pannel must confess, they cannot observe any solid Distinction that should make the one legal when the other is illegal and blameable: And therefore it is somewhat surprizing it should be laid as a Crime against the Pannel, that he did not at first View discover such Distinction, especially as he acquiesced instantly in the Opinion he got upon that Point, and, without the Delay of a Moment, proceeded to authorize the Volunteers to go on in their Association.

This shews that the Pannel had no Reluctancy or Aversion to this Measure, as the Libel would suppose. He took the very first Opportunity to inform himself of the Legality of it, and cheerfully followed the Information he got. Had he demurred a little more, upon a Distinction by no means obvious, he could not have been liable to Blame, far less to Punishment. And it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the rest of this Article, which the Pursuer, in his Information, does not insist upon, as indeed it is apparently too trifling to enter into a criminal Libel.

As to the third Article, concerning the Repair of the City-Walls, it has already appeared, from the Record of the Council, that the Direction of these Repairs was intrusted to a Committee under Bailie Robert Baillie; that they were often enjoined, from Time to Time, to carry on the Works with the utmost Dispatch; that the Provost frequently visited the Works; and, whenever it appeared there was any Want of Workmen, he always granted new Warrants to impress them. The Ditch at Wallace's Tower, which Mr. Mac Laurin complains, that, after being carried on right for some time, was, by Mistake or bad Advice, cast on the wrong Side of the Dyke, was owing to a Direction given by Bailie Gavin Hamilton, who altered the Orders given by Mr. Baillie the Overseer, and, by Mistake, caused cast the Ditch upon the wrong Side of the Dyke: And the other Delay he complains, in not beginning the Communication he proposed betwixt the Wall of the Town and the high House without the Potter-Row Port, in due time, was owing to an Objection made to the Proposal, that such Communication might very probably afford an Opportunity to the Rebels to enter the Town; upon which Mr. Mac Laurin himself, at that time, agreed it was fit to drop it. And as to all the other Works, even by Mr. Mac Laurin's Account, which the Pursuer refers to in his Information, it appears they were carried on in due Time; for he admits they were almost finished on Monday Afternoon, when they were told of the Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church.

And as to the Complaint of the Neglect in providing Gunners, and giving Orders to load the Cannon, the Lords have already been informed of the Pannel's Diligence, in conveying Men to assist at mounting them on the Walls, and sending every where to provide Gunners, and ordering Matches in due Time to light them. They were loaded when the Rebels were at six Miles Distance from the Town, which was rather too early, as it is well known that Cannon do not serve so well after they have been long loaded.

But then, what Relevancy is there in all this, supposing the Facts true as laid in the Libel? Is it possible to plead that the Provost should be answerable for the Execution of Works, which, by the Council, appear to have been committed to another Committee under a proper Overseer? Or will it be laid as a Charge against him, that he did not think the Sailors proper Persons to be employed as Gunners, if other Gunners could be had elsewhere? Or that he did not give Orders to load the Cannon on Sunday Morning, when it is allowed they were loaded that Evening, and too soon for any Use that could possibly be made of them against the Rebels?

The salutary Proposition which the fourth Article charges the Provost with rejecting, will appear to every one, who coolly considers it, a most pernicious one. To make Distinctions among the Inhabitants, from Surmises their Enemies might throw out against them without any Ground, when their Minds are heated and divided into Factions, might contribute to set them by the Ears together, but never to unite or strengthen their Hands in the Defence of the City, or Service of the Government. The Pursuer's Information says, that the Answer given to this Proposal was, that the Town's Arms should be put into the Hands of the most substantial Burghers. This Answer, if given, was solid and judicious: Men of Substance and Property are the fittest to be intrusted with the Defence of the Laws, on which the Preservation of their Properties depends: And it is truly surprizing that the Libel, upon this Article, should prefer to this a Scheme of arming a Number of Tradesmen's Servants, who were to be allured to come into this Service by the Bait of a Guinea to be given to each of them; which is stated as another salutary Proposal offered to the Provost at this Time. Such Proposals could only proceed from wrong-headed or sinister Views. Had the Provost intrusted the City-Arms to such low People, whose Principles could not be known, and denied them to the most substantial Burghers, whose Interest was principally concerned in Defence of the Town, he might justly have been charged with the Blame of the Consequences: And therefore it is hardly necessary to observe, that, were there any Colour of Relevancy in this Article, it could not affect the Pannel, as it is not pretended that the Proposers ever laid it before the Council, who were the proper Judges; and their not doing so is real Evidence that they were satisfied of the Unfitness of the Scheme, from the Objections that obviously occurred against it.

The fifth Article charges the Pannel with a cold Reception given to Sir Robert Dickson, and a Proposal made to him, that his Volunteers should enlist in the Edinburgh Regiment. The first is a very extraordinary Article in a criminal Libel, and the Pannel believes will be found not to be true. The other shews, the great Anxiety of the Pursuer to find fault with the Pannel, let him hold what Conduct he will. Had he neglected these Volunteers, and refused them Meat or Pay, he might justly have been found liable to Blame; but that cannot be said: He took care to provide them with Victuals as soon as they arrived; and the Handle taken to charge him is, that he also offered them Pay. It is not said that he insisted any should enlist that did not incline, or that he refused to accept the Services of such as were disposed to assist the Town without Pay: But, that Pay should at all be proposed to these Volunteers, or enlisting in the City Regiment, though it was raised for the very same Purpose they professed to come for, viz. the Defence of the City, and were to be dismissed as soon as that End was attained; this is the Charge: And it is submitted, whether there was the least Colour to make this an Article in a criminal Accusation.

The Fact as to Andrew Alves's Message has been already explained. The receiving it could be no Crime in the Pannel: He could not avoid it, unless he had shut his Ears before he knew what Mr. Alves was to tell him; and the Measure he took upon it was in consequence of the Advice of Gentlemen of the Council, who thought it the most prudent Way to take no Notice of any thing that might dispirit the Inhabitants at that Juncture. The Ground of the Accusation is, That he did not immediately commit Mr. Alves: And if he had immediately committed him, which was the likeliest Way to spread the Message through the Town, he might with better Reason have been accused, that he had done it of purpose to intimidate the Inhabitants: So this Article, like most others in this Libel, turns stronger when it is inverted. If such Accusations are allowed against a Magistrate, he is in a bad Situation: For act he must; and whether he take the one Course or the other, he is sure to be brought to the Bar as a Criminal.

The seventh and eighth Articles charge the Pannel with receiving a Petition from the Inhabitants, keeping a Meeting with them, and hearing a Letter read from the Pretender's Son. The receiving the Petition was unavoidable, unless he had shut himself up in a Closet, and then he might have been justly blamed for keeping out of the Way in Time of public Danger. As little could the calling of a Meeting of the Inhabitants, at such a Juncture, have been faulty or blameable: But it has been already observed, he called no Meeting; but the Inhabitants, under Terror of the approaching Danger, pressed in upon him wherever he went, and would have their Complaints and Remonstrances heard, and the Pretender's Son's Letter read, after the Pannel had opposed it, and left their Company to avoid hearing it.

The Part the Provost acted at this Meeting, and the Pains he took to animate the Inhabitants to concur in Defence of the City, has been already stated, and, as it is notoriously known, must justify him in the Eyes of all Mankind against the Aspersions now endeavoured to be thrown upon him: But then, taking the Articles as stated in the Libel, there is no sort of Relevancy in them; neither the holding a Meeting of the Inhabitants, nor the suffering a Letter to be read from the Rebels, nor the sending a Deputation to them, were they supposed the Acts of this Pannel, can be said to be criminal in such a Case. When Rebels are at the Gates, and have the Lives and Properties of the Inhabitants in their Power, the great Law of Necessity, which, in the Nature of Things, must make an Exception from every human Law, legitimates any Intercourse that is necessary to save the Inhabitants from the threatened Destruction.

It is unnecessary to enlarge upon this Argument; it is evident, not only from the Reason of the Thing, but the Histories of all Countries in which Rebellions have ever been raised: It was never before pretended to be a Crime in the Subjects of any Country to treat with Rebels when their Lives were in their Power. The Laws forbidding Intercourse with Rebels, can, from the Nature of the Thing, apply only to voluntary Intercourse, and not to such as is forced by invincible Necessity, when Subjects are deprived of the Protection of the Government, and not able to defend themselves against a superior lawless Force. Nay, in this very Rebellion, has it ever been considered as a Crime, in Gentlemen who were even in the immediate Service of his Majesty, to treat with Rebels, or enter into Paroles or Engagements with them, when their Lives were in their Power? Has it been found criminal in Governors of Forts, which were built and intended for bearing Sieges, as the Town of Edinburgh never was, to enter into Capitulations with Rebels when they found it necessary? Was the Mayor of Carlisle tried as a Criminal for entering into an express Capitulation with the Rebels, to surrender a City that is properly fortified, and might be presumed to make a good Defence, or for making an express Agreement to deliver up the Arms and Ammunition? Or was he tried for going, after the Surrender, as Mayor of the City, with the Sword and Mace before him, to attend the Proclamation of the Pretender? The Intercourse this Mayor had with the Rebels was evidently of a much deeper Nature than any that is pretended to have been had by the Provost of Edinburgh: But yet so extensive has been the Influence of the Misrepresentations of his Enemies, that he has for a Year and a Half suffered, and is now brought to Trial as a Criminal, while the other passes without Blame.

The other Circumstance charged in this Article, with respect to the Pannel's refusing to order the Dragoons to come into Town, has been fully explained in stating the Fact, and it would be improper to trouble the Court with repeating it. He was desirous of the Assistance of the Dragoons, had signed an Application for them along with the Lord Advocate, had brought in Provisions to Town for sustaining their Horses: He told the very Messenger referred to in this Article, that the Dragoons would be made extremely welcome, and that all the Force he had would be ready to join with them in Defence of the Town: He ordered the Constables to mount the Walls, to observe their Approach, that the Gates might be forthwith opened to admit them. And, after all this, will it be charged as a Crime upon him, that he scrupled to sign an Order to Troops, over which he had no Power, singly by himself, which, after what had past, he could take in no other Light, but as intended to make him answerable for the Consequences that might attend this Measure; and when he had been told the Night before, by Gentlemen of undoubted Skill and Loyalty to his Majesty, that the Consequence would probably be to shut up the Dragoons, and oblige them to surrender Prisoners to the Rebels?

Great Reason has the Pannel to be thankful that he did not fall into the Snare the Pursuer here complains of him for avoiding, which might have turned out much heavier than all the Articles mulctured together in this Libel, and six times as many more. Had the Dragoons been brought in upon his Order, and taken Prisoners, as the Gentlemen of the Military foretold, there would have been another Kind of Colour to argue, than from any Thing that has been yet suggested, that the Pannel had given Occasion to the unlucky Defeat at Priffin, by shutting up the Dragoons, and depriving the other Troops of their Assistance, by which they might have been enabled to get the better of the Rebels.

Unhappy then must be the Situation of every Magistrate, if he is to be judged after this Measure. It is doubtful and difficult what Course ought to be taken. People of Skill are divided upon it. If the Magistrate take either one or the other Side, by this Way of proceeding his Fate must depend upon the Success: Nay, if he shall be yet more cautious, and decline to determine either, but leave it to others of more Skill and Judgment in these Matters, as the Pannel did in the present Case, ready to acquiesce and concur in whatever they should determine, yet it seems he cannot avoid to be held as a Criminal: He had before given his Consent to the bringing in those Dragoons, and was at all Times ready to admit them, if it was thought proper to bring them; and yet he must be accused, because he did not sign an Order, subjecting himself to the Consequences of a Measure which was judged, by People of the best Skill, to be dangerous and improper.

The ninth Article of this criminal Libel, charging the Pannel with neglecting to give Orders to the Volunteers, when they had been long standing under Arms, has been already explained in point of Fact: That, without applying for Orders, they thought fit to determine themselves to give up their Arms, and throw up the Service; which is a full Evidence of their Judgment, that the Defence of the City was an impracticable Measure; and an Evidence of so much the greater Weight, as neither their Zeal in the Undertaking, nor their Courage in going through with it, had it been found practicable, can at all be called in question.

But, next, as to the Relevancy, were the Fact supposed to be true, the Answer is too plain almost to be stated. The Volunteers, and not the Pannel, were to blame, in that they either took or executed such Resolution without Orders from the Council. If they had applied to the Pannel for Orders, as the Libel alledges, it was no Wonder, in the Situation Things then were, that they did not get an immediate Return. The Lords have observed in what Situation the Provost and Council were at that Time, surrounded by the Inhabitants, who were alarmed with terrible Accounts of the Rebels, and frightful Threatenings of which they dreaded the immediate Execution; the Provost endeavouring to animate and stir them up to the Defence of the Town, by all the Arguments he could use; the Inhabitants declining to hearken to any Defence; and new Accounts coming every Moment, which made it uncertain what Resolution to take. In such Circumstances it ought to have been no Surprize to the Volunteers, if they had been kept waiting Orders for a considerable Time; it was their Duty to have continued at their Alarm-Posts, till Orders were sent. And it cannot be laid as a Load upon the Provost or Council, that the Volunteers thought fit to take a contrary Course, and give up their Arms, without waiting the Resolutions of the Council.

The tenth Article consists of three Branches. The first is, The Refusal of Orders to spike up the Cannon. As to which the Fact has been already fully stated, and it is obvious there is no Relevancy in it, when it was equally easy for the General to cause nail them without any Orders from the Provost or Council. And it is not pretended that any Person he sent was opposed in the Execution of it, but, on the contrary, the Town-Officers were ordered to shew them where the Cannon were, and the Sergeant had actually begun to nail them, until he was stoped by a Message from the General, after he had got the Account of Sir John Cope's Arrival, as has been already observed.

The second is, 'The Orders alledged to have been given to Captain Dalziel to keep Guard on the 16th September, with One-third of the City-Guard, the usual Complement in peaceable Times.' But neither is there any Relevancy in this, when your Lordships consider the Circumstances at the Time, as confessed on both Sides. The Volunteers had given up their Arms to the Castle, so had the Men who had been levied in the City-Regiment. No Prospect of Defence of the Town, unless some Assistance should come from without. In such Circumstances, it is a very odd Complaint, why was not this whole Company of 126 Men kept on Foot to fight the Army of the Rebels, which consisted of some Thousands? It is plain the whole or a third was all the same in such a Situation: And therefore it is unnecessary to add, that the Guard had been so fatigued with the severe Duty they had undergone for some Days before, that the whole of them could not have been able to do Duty that Night, whatever Orders they had received.

The last Branch of this Article is, 'That the Pannel gave Orders to the Trained-Bands, who had been upon Guard at the several Gates of the City, to quit their Posts, and dispose of their Arms in such Places where they must be exposed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels.' This Article is too ambiguously laid to be admitted in a criminal Libel: The Crime is to be inferred from the Places where the Arms were to be left, and yet those Places are not condescended on. This is directly inconsistent with the Nature of all criminal Procedure, which requires that the Libel be laid clear and unambiguous, so as the Pannel may know every Circumstance of the Fact he is called to answer, and be prepared either to exculpate himself, or elide it by a contrary Proof.

But, 2dly, It is not conceivable what the Libel can mean, by speaking of Places where Arms would be exposed to fall into the Hands of the Rebels when they should become Masters of the City. It is evident, in that Case, in whatever Place of the City Arms were laid, they must be alike liable to fall into their Hands; an Order, under Pain of military Execution, would in a few Hours bring in all the Arms that were in any Town they became Masters of, in whose-ever Possession they were: And therefore the Libel, as to this Article, is not so conceived as to receive any distinct Meaning, or to admit of a proper Answer.

The eleventh Article sets forth, 'That it was proposed and urged in Council, that the whole City-Arms should be lodged and secured with in the Castle of Edinburgh, in order to prevent their falling into the Hands of the Rebels; but the Pannel refused or declined to give any Order for that Purpose; neither in Fact were the City-Arms so lodged and secured, but were seized by the Rebels upon their entering the City the Day following.'

But this Proposal, said to have been made in Council with respect to the Arms, is intirely new; and it is somewhat strange it should be so, if truly made, as these Matters have been so much the Subject of Conversation for almost two Years past; nor can the Pannel recal any such Proposal to his Remembrance.

The true State of the Fact, with respect to the Burghers Arms, has been already laid before the Court: That the Provost did all that was in his Power to keep those Arms, though of very little Value, out of the Hands of the Rebels: That he sent a Message to the Generals in the Castle, to send a Party to take them out of the Hands of the Inhabitants, as the Council could not, for the Reasons already mentioned, compel them to deliver them up to the Castle: And it will also be proved, if any Proof is to be brought in this Case, that when the Provost was giving Directions to the Trained-Bands, he told them, that if the Rebels approached to the Place, he hoped they would do their Duty, and behave like Men in Defence of the City; and if the Rebels should prevail, he expected that, at any Rate, they would take care to secrete their Arms, that they might not fall into their Hands.

But, abstracting from these Facts, the Pannel is advised, that there is no Relevancy in this Article of the Libel: For, first, It is said, That the Proposal was made in the Town-Council, and it is not alledged, or pretended, that the Council approved of the Proposal, or authorized the Pannel to grant the Order; and, if they did not, it was the Council, and not the Pannel, who declined to concur in this Measure; especially as the Pannel had truly no Right to dispose of the Arms, or to send them off without the Liberties of the Town, without Authority of the Council. It is a very new Ground of Accusation against the Preses of a Meeting, that, when a Proposal was made to the Meeting, and either rejected, or not approved of by them, he was guilty of a Crime, because he did not over-rule the Resolutions of the Meeting, of which he was but one Member, and act beyond or contrary to the Directions they thought fit to give him in a Matter over which he had no Power to controul them: It is believed it will be difficult to find any Instance, where an Omission of this Nature has been made the Foundation of a criminal Charge.

But, in the next place, when the Circumstances of the Case are considered, which are notorious to all the World, and confirmed by the Production made by the Pursuer in this Case, every Mortal must see why the Council could not grant or authorize such Order as is here mentioned, had it at that Time been suggested or proposed. Repeated Threatenings had been sent from the Rebels to the Town, by Writings which the Pursuer has produced, and given out with the Libel; a like threatening verbal Message was sent by Mr. Alves, all tending to the same Import, That, if the Town should send off the Arms or Ammunition in their Possession, they should be treated in the severest Manner, and suffer all kind of military Execution. The Inhabitants had no Means to defend themselves from the Execution of these Threats: And was it to be expected, that, when the Rebels were at the Gates, and the Dagger in Effect at their Throats, they would expose themselves to it for the sake of preserving Arms of whatever Consequence, much less so insignificant as these Burgher-Arms are known to have been in this Case?

It is easy for People at Ease and in Security to talk of such Distresses without much Concern; but let them put themselves in the Case of those they are to judge of, and then say, whether it is agreeable to the Nature of Mankind, to expose themselves, and all that is near and dear to them in the World, to such Sufferings, upon any Consideration whatsoever; whether it is to be expected of them, and whether they ought to be punished for not having done it.

We are not now to judge of the Terror of the Rebels from what they afterwards did, but from the Impressions People were then under of the Distresses they might suffer from them: It is well known never Enemy was received with greater Dread, or painted out in stronger Colours of Cruelty and Barbarity: From the News-Papers, from the Pulpits, from all the best Accounts, nothing was to be expected from them but what was fierce, savage, and inhuman. These Things had their good Effects; and perhaps were sometimes a little exaggerated from well-meaning Motives: They tended to create in Men's Minds a great Abhorrence to the Rebels and their Cause; but then, at the same time, they raised an immense Terror, such as struck every City in the Nation, to which they approached, with the utmost Panick and Consternation.

The black Friday is not yet out of Remembrance, and the Impression the Approach of the Rebels then made, when they were removed from the greatest City in the Island, at the Distance of more Days March than they were of Hours or Quarters from this Town, at the Period now in Question. Let it be supposed, that the Rebel Army had been marching down from Highbate-Hill, or had been at West-Smithfield, and had sent in such threatening Messages to the Lord Mayor; if he had no Army at Hand to defend the City, and had found no Disposition in the Inhabitants to defend it, would he have adventured to despise the Threatening, or to send up the Citizens Arms to the Tower, by which their Lives and Properties must be exposed to the lawless Fury and Barbarity of the Rebels? Or would he have been brought to the Bar as a Criminal, because he had been careful of the Blood of the Inhabitants, (an Expression that is laid against the Pannel in the present Case) and because he had not exposed their Substance to Plunder, and themselves and their Families to Massacre?

The Disproportion is indeed great betwixt the Instance put, and that which is the Subject of the present Question; but both must be governed by the same Rules. Every Man's Life and his All is equally dear to him; and it does not depend upon the Greatness or Smallness of a City, whether it is lawful for the Governors to expose it to the Hazard of being destroyed, but upon the Circumstances it is under at the Time, and the Prospect of Relief from the impending Danger, of which there was none in the present Case.

And, with great Submission, where is the Foundation of the Doctrine now pled for the Pursuer, in the Law, or in the Custom of any known Country in the World? When was it heard of, that, upon a Town or a Fort being obliged to surrender, whether to Enemies or to Rebels, the Garrison or the Inhabitants were bound to expose themselves to the utmost Reilment of the Enemy, for the sake of keeping their Arms out of their Hands? Has it at any Time been brought as a Charge against the Governor of a Place, that he gave up the Arms to the Enemy, when he could not keep out the Place? Were not Arms and Ammunition given up at Carlisle, and at every other Fort that has been delivered up to the Rebels, either in this or any other Rebellion? And is there any Instance where that has before been made an Article of Accufation?

It is no Answer, That, where there is no separate Castle or Citadel, or where that is given up at the same Time with the Town, the Arms must fall in consequence, as there is no Place in which they can be preserved: For the Pannel is not charged here for the Loss of the Arms, but for this, that they fell into the Hands of the Rebels. And it is well known it is in every Man's Power to break his Gun, and make it useless to the Enemy, whether he has a Castle to carry it to or not: And therefore, were there any Pretence for the Charge brought in this Case, it must equally affect the Commanders of Carlisle, and every Fort that has at any Time been given up to Rebels, why they did not at all Hazards destroy their Arms, that they might be of no Use to the Rebels. But, if such an Objection was never heard of till this Libel appeared, it is a Demonstration that the Libel in this Article is without Foundation.

And therefore it is the less necessary to observe, that, in the present Case, had it been the Duty of the Magistrates or Council, to order the Burghers Arms up to the Castle, let the Consequence be what it would to the Inhabitants, it is obvious it was not in their Power to make their Orders effectual. What Force had they to compel the Inhabitants to a Scheme so destructive to themselves? The Volunteers had already disarmed themselves, and so could be of no Use for that Purpose; the City Regiment had also given up their Arms to the Castle; the Trained-Bands were the Burghers themselves, who had their Wives, their Families, and most of them the Bulk of their Properties in Town, which they were quite averse to expose to Destruction by such a Measure: And the only Force the Magistrates had to compel them, was the Company of the Town-Guard, who, if they had been disposed to obey at such a Juncture, could very soon have been tied Neck and Heel by one hundredth Part of the Inhabitants.

And, 3dly, It is proper to consider, in this Case, the Uncertainty of the Situation to which the Magistrates and Council were reduced, during the last and most distressing Scene of this unlucky Affair; sometimes terrified with the immediate Approach of the Rebels, at other Times encouraged with some Prospect of Relief. Even towards the End of this Period, there were some Hopes of the Return of the Dragoons; Mr. Drummond and Mr. Groset had gone in quest of them: Nor was that Expectation quite over in the Meeting of the Council, until they heard the Rebels had entered the Town. Had the Dragoons returned to the City, and animated the People in its Defence, the Charge against the Pannel then would have been inverted, Why did he send up the Arms to the Castle? Why did he carry them out of the Way when they might be instantly wanted for Defence of the Town? And the near Approach of the Rebels made a Moment's Delay of great Consequence; and the Citation might have been adduced, which is misapplied in the present Case, Quod puncto sæpe temporis maximarum rerum occasiones amittuntur.

Such was the unlucky Situation of the Governors of this City at that Time, that it would appear, by what has since happened, it was impossible they could escape Accufation; the Event must make them criminal, however well-intentioned their Conduct might be: But their Answer is good, That no Law, no Custom, requires the Inhabitants of any Place to expose their Lives, the Honour of their Wives and Daughters, and all that they have dear to them in the World, to the Fury of an incensed Enemy, in order to keep Arms out of their Possession. The Law of Humanity forbids it. That, in this Case, had the Magistrates been so minded, it was not in their Power to compel the Inhabitants to comply with it: Besides, that the vacillant and uncertain State in which Matters then stood, made it very doubtful whether it was proper to have done it or not; and, in doubtful Cases, it is against common Justice to accuse or punish, because of the after Event.

These Answers would have been good to the Magistrates and Council, had they been brought to the Bar to answer for rejecting such Proposal as the Libel here supposes: They are all equally competent to the Provost, with this additional one, That he is only one Member of their Body, and cannot be accountable for omitting what the Council did not think proper to enjoin him, had they ever so much erred in their Judgment.

It would have sounded very oddly in the Ears of the World, if the Generals in the Castle had been brought under Prosecution, because they sent to forbid the nailing of the Cannon, or because they did not send a Party to seize the Burghers Arms upon the Message already mentioned: It is believed the whole Nation would have been amazed at such a Prosecution. And yet, with great Submission, there is a Difference betwixt that and the present Case: The Generals run no Risque by sending Parties to execute any thing of that Nature within the Town, as little did their Parties, or the Garrison under their Charge: But the Danger to the Inhabitants, who were committed to the Care of the Magistrates, was but too apparent, as well as too imminent, to be despised by any Sett of Men, who were as destitute of Defence and Relief as they were at that Time.

And the Pannel will be forgiven to say, that, if the whole Series of his Conduct, from the Beginning to the End of these Transactions, shall be considered, there will appear as little Reason to suspect him of any bad Intention in this Case, as any other Subject within the Kingdom. The Court has already observed, that the Pannel, of his own Accord, ordered all the Ammunition that was in the Town's Magazine to be carried to the Castle some Days before the Rebels approached, and that he caused execute this Order so punctually, that it was necessary afterwards to send to the Castle for what was wanted for the Service of the Town. It has also appeared how averse he was to bring Arms down from the Castle, when the Rebels were on their Approach to the City, unless he had the highest Probability that they were to be used in a proper Manner; and that accordingly he refused the Offer made by the Secretary at War, on the Part of the General, to send back the Arms which had been returned by the Volunteers and City Regiments, for this Reason, That he did not see a good Disposition in the Inhabitants at the Time, to defend the City; and therefore was afraid the Arms, if sent, might possibly fall into the Rebels Hands. How unjust then would it be, after such Evidence of the Pannel's sincere and upright Disposition in this Matter, to suspect him of a bad Intention, because he did not enforce an Order upon his Fellow-Citizens, which, if obeyed, might have involved them in Misery and Ruin, and which it was not in his Power to compel them to obey, and which is stated by his Accusers as proposed to the Council, to which he was subject, and is not alledged to have been by them approved or authorized?

The last Article of this Libel is full as extraordinary as any of the rest, viz. 'That, by Occasion of the several Instances of Misbehaviour above recited, it came to be very notoriously known, that he was highly faulty and negligent in the Execution of his Office, and to be farther violently suspected and believed, amongst the faithful Subjects in that City, that he was secretly in the Interest of the Pretender, by reason of the Uniformity of his Behaviour, discovering a constant Unwillingness or Backwardness to provide for, or heartily prosecute the Measures that were in a Manner forced upon him, in order to the Defence of that City; at a Time when, if he had observed a contrary Conduct, there was at least a high Probability that the City might have been preserved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels.'

But it is hardly necessary to make any additional Answer to this Article, after what has been already observed. It is hoped it is apparent to the Court, that none of the Instances recited in this Libel, were they true, as most of them are not, could infer any Degree of Misbehaviour against the Pannel: That his Conduct, from the Beginning to the End of these Transactions, has been uniform in the faithful Execution of his Duty: And that, from first to last, he never shewed any Unwillingness or Backwardness to concur in any Measure that could tend to the Service of the Government, but contributed more to forward such Measures, of his own free Motive and Accord, than can be pretended to have been done by any who may be pleased to entertain Suspicions of him, or by all of them put together.

It cannot however escape Observation, that it is an unusual Article in a criminal Libel, that a Pannel is violently suspected by others to have been guilty. The Suspicion of others can never infer Guilt, nor Evidence of Guilt, against any Man whatever, though the sinister Views, which gave rise to those affected Suspicions, had not been so apparent as they are in the present Case.

And, with Submission, it is no good Answer that is made to this in the Pursuer's Information, That altho' they should have carried their Suspicion too far, in believing the Pannel to have been in the secret Interest of the Pretender; yet still their entertaining such Apprehension or Belief, is one Demonstration, supposing that they had carried their Conclusion too far, that his Conduct was not such as became a faithful, vigilant, and zealous Magistrate on that Occasion: For an Apprehension founded upon Suspicions, at first raised from indirect Views, and thereafter artfully propagated, and more easily spread thro' the Ferment of Men's Minds, during the Times of Distracted, can never be either Demonstration or Evidence of any thing, other than the bad Origin from which they at first proceeded. Nor is it fair to lay any Stress upon them at all, when it appears they have been carried the Length of false and injurious Conclusions; the same Disposition which has been violent enough to carry them that Length, is to be presumed at first to have given Rise to them. The Pannel's Conduct speaks for itself, and stands vouched by notorious Facts, which, independent of the Suspicions either of the Wicked or of the Credulous, demonstrate him to have acted a faithful Part in the Execution of his Office, vigilant and zealous for the Safety of the Town, and careful of the Welfare of its Inhabitants, of whom he had the Oversight in those unlucky Times.

And it is truly surprising it should be alledged, 'That if the Pannel had observed a contrary Conduct, there was high Probability that the City might have been preserved from falling into the Hands of the Rebels, or that it fell into their Hands in a very strange and suspicious Manner, on the Morning of the 17th September 1745,' when it is as plain as Sunshine, from the Facts already set forth, and which are notoriously known to be true, that, without the Interposition of a Miracle, it was impossible, as Circumstances then stood, that this Town could miss to fall into the Hands of the Rebels upon the 17th September 1745. It is notorious, that the Dragoons, and all the Military Force, had then left the Town; that the Volunteers, before that Time, had thought fit to give up their Arms to the Castle; that the Edinburgh Regiment, which was then hardly One-third full, and the Men only raised a few Days before, had also given up their Arms; that the Burghers, or Trained-Bands, declined to go up and expose their Lives in keeping out the Walls, when the Military had wholly deserted them; and they had understood, by repeated Threatenings from the Rebels, that any Man that appeared in Arms would be put to death. The Court has already heard the Pains which was taken by the Pannel to animate all these different Setts of Men in the Defence of the City, and the Success: And when such was the Case, where was there any Probability that the Town could stand out against an Army of Half the Number of the Rebels? or where is there any thing strange or suspicious in the Rebels becoming Masters of the Town, when it was thus deserted? Was the Pannel to go up, with as many of the Company of the Town Guard as were able to stand, after the Fatigues they had undergone for two Days before, and make head against this Body of Rebels? Or, if he had attempted it, would the Inhabitants have permitted the Town to have been stormed and sacked, which behoved, in such a Case, to happen in less than an Hour? It seems evident, that, in such a Concurrence of Circumstances, nothing could save the Town from being taken, unless it had pleased Providence to strike the Rebels with such Dismay and Terror, as many were then un luckily struck with, whose Duty it was to have opposed them.

The Pursuer is pleased to ask, 'Why did the Pannel advise with the Inhabitants? Why did he give way to a general Meeting in the Church? Why did he not order them to keep within Doors? Why did he not advise with his Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors, or with the chief Officers of the Volunteers, and deliberate with them upon the supposed Change of Circumstances? And if, in such Council, it had been debated and resolved, by Plurality of Voices, to be impracticable or inexpedient to persist any longer in the Measure of defending the City, that Resolution might have justified or acquitted him; but that nothing of this Kind is alledged, and thereby he has taken the whole upon himself.'

But, with great Submission, it is a little surprising these Questions should be asked, after the Notoriety of the Facts already stated. It is certain Fact, nor is the contrary alledged in the Libel, that the Pannel acted in this whole Matter in Concurrence with his Fellow-Magistrates and Councillors. It cannot be said, that, from the Beginning to the End of this Affair, he ever opposed or over-ruled them in any one Article. The Officers of the Volunteers were also consulted with, and your Lordships have heard what Accounts they gave the Pannel of the Disposition of their Men with respect to the Defence of the Town; and that, in consequence of this Disposition, their Arms were all given up soon after. The Pannel ordered the Inhabitants to keep within Doors, and caused the Drum to go round for that Purpose: But what Force had he to compel them? Numbers of Instances are to be found in History, where considerable Garrisons have been forced by the Inhabitants to surrender a Town: And here it is made a Ground of Accusation against the Pannel, that he was not able to over-awe the Inhabitants of this populous City, when he had no other Assistance, either to defend the Town, or to keep them in awe, but such as had been taken a few Days before from among themselves, and who were all equally impressed with the same Terror of the Rebels, and Belief of the Impracticability of making an effectual Defence.

It is apparent the Pannel did all that any Man could do in the like Situation: He tried to animate the People, sent for the civil Officers of the Crown for Advice, and, when he found they had withdrawn, which, whatever Gloss the Pursuer may think fit to put upon it, is an Evidence of their Judgment that the Town could not be defended, he sent for the best Advice and Assistance he could get, and never parted with the Gentlemen of the Council, nor in any thing controuled their Advice, until the End of the Transactions now in question: And therefore, according even to the Doctrine laid down by the Pursuer, his Conduct falls to be justified; for it cannot be thought material, that there are no Minutes of the Town-Council or Committee remarked in the Record after the 13th or 14th of September. The two following Days were too much crowded with the many various and important Transactions above set forth, which succeeded one another every Moment, to take down Minutes regularly in Writing: But still it is sufficient for the Pannel to say, that it neither is nor can be pretended, that in any one Particular he controuled or over-ruled the Opinion of the Committee or the Council.

In order to give a greater Colour to the Charge against the Pannel in this Case, the Pursuer endeavours to represent the Office he was possessed of in this City, as superior and independent of the rest of the Magistrates and Town-Council: That he is the High-Sheriff, Colonel of the Trained-Bands, City Guard, &c. and, in a word, that the whole Government and Defence of the Town was solely devolved upon him. From which it is inferred, that he must be answerable for all Miscarriages, as if there had been no other Magistrate or Authority in the Town but what was lodged in himself.

But the Pannel is at a loss to discover upon what Authority the Pursuer builds this absolute Power he thinks fit to vest in the Lord Provost of this City; for it does not seem to have any Foundation, either in the ancient Laws, or in the late Regulations laid down by his present Majesty with respect to the Defence of the Town. By the Common Law, as well as the Statutes relative to these Matters, the whole Magistrates are considered to have an equal Concern in the Government of the Burgh. So says the Statute, Ja. IV. Parl. 6. cap. 87. and Ja. VI. Parl. 18. cap. 17. which 'forbids all Persons, of whatsoever Rank, to convocate or assemble themselves without due Intimation to the Provost or Bailies of the Burgh, and their License obtained thereto: and ordains the Inhabitants of the Boroughs to assist and concur with the Magistrates and Officers for settling the said Tumults and Turbulencies, and punishing the Authors thereof.' And, as far as the Pannel knows, the other Magistrates have a joint Right to concur with the Provost in every thing relating to the Government of the Borough.

It is of no Moment to the present Question, that the Provost is in use to sit on Trials as High-Sheriff; for it is not alledged that he acted any thing in that Capacity in the Matters now called in question before the Court.

It is true, that, by the Act of Parliament establishing the Company of the City-Guard, the Provost is appointed Captain of it; and he is also the Commander of the City Trained-Bands, as being the first Magistrate in the Town: But still, in these Commands, he has no absolute Power, but is subject to the Directions of the Council.

And so it was also regulated by the Sign-Manual granted by his Majesty, in September 1745, authorizing to levy this Regiment for the Defence of the City. It is appointed to be under the Direction of the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town-Council of Edinburgh; and the Magistrates and Council did accordingly take the Direction of it into their Hands; and though they paid the Compliment to the Provost, to name him Colonel of the Regiment, yet it was in their Power to turn him out, and name another, when they thought fit; and the Nomination bears, That he was to conduct and direct the Regiment, and the Officers who should be named to command under him, as the Council should think proper; and therefore, in this military Capacity, he acted under the Direction of the Town-Council, from whom his Authority proceeded. It is humbly submitted to the Court, how far it is at all congruous to single him out in a Trial of this Kind, when it neither is nor can be alledged, that at any time he ever varied from or opposed that Direction.

In the Information on the other Side it is observed, 'That Notice was taken by the Pannel's Counsel, that he was possessed of a very large Property, consisting of a Stock of Wines, at Leith, but that it did not appear whether they intended to mention it as an Argument to evince the Pannel's Sincerity in desiring to keep the Rebels at a Distance, or as an Excuse for his not opposing them with Vigour and Zeal, lest he might be hurt in that Part of his Property.' And upon this some Insinuations are thrown out that might have been spared.

But it was not easy to misapprehend the Meaning of the Pannel's Counsel, in the Mention they made of the large Property he was possessed of in this Country, which was no ways particularly referred to the Wines at Leith, which makes but a very small Part of it, but principally to his personal Estate, and Debts due to him, to a great Extent, by many Gentlemen in the Country, which could not fail to suffer considerably by such a Convulsion as must happen when a Rebellion arises in a Country. This was overly mentioned by the Pannel's Counsel, as a Circumstance that made it improbable, that any Gentleman of Common Sense, in this Situation, would deserve the Censure thrown out in the Libel, of secretly abetting such Disorders; but the Pannel's Counsel gave no Handle for drawing the other Inference here insinuated, which is so injurious to the Pannel's Conduct, and so disagreeable to his Character. His Conduct stands in no need of such Excuses; it will stand the Test: He has not shewn, by any thing that has ever past in this Affair, that he put an Over-value either upon his Life or his Property, when his Duty came in Competition. The Wines were of little Moment in respect of the other Risques he behoved to undergo upon such general Distress of his Country; and it is unjust to insinuate any Suspicion of such low Motive, when it is apparent he has given no Occasion for it from any Part of his Conduct, however strictly and rigorously examined.

The Pursuer is pleased to argue, 'That the Facts here charged, if done dolo animo, would have amounted to High-Treason; and therefore it is a great Lenity that the Pannel is only pursued for Misbehaviour; and Citations are brought from Sir Matthew Hale, to prove that the delivering up the King's Castles to his Enemies, through Treachery, Bribery, &c. is High-Treason; and from Ærodius, to prove that Negligence in publick Officers may be severely punished.'

But the Pannel has little Occasion to trouble the Court with enlarging upon these Authorities, because he cannot discover they have the least Connection with the present Case: he has no Occasion to dispute, that the delivering up the King's Forts to Enemies or Rebels is High-Treason; or that wilful Faults and Neglects in publick Officers may be punished: But it is, nevertheless, equally true, that when a Fort is taken by a superior Force, which could not be resisted, there is no Crime at all in the Case: Nay, in the very Page quoted in the Pursuer's Information from Sir Matthew Hale, Vol. I. p. 168, it is laid down as a Rule, That if a Subject should swear Fealty to the King's Enemies, if it is done for fear of his Life, and he returns as soon as he can to his Allegiance, he is not punishable. It is incumbent on the Pursuer to reconcile with this Authority that Part of the Charge which is so much insisted on in this Case, and to shew how the same Law that excuses a direct Adherence to the King's Enemies, when compelled by fear of Death, can punish the leaving Arms to fall into their Hands, when compelled by the same Terror; or can punish an Omission to give an Order to abstract them in such Circumstances, which is the Charge laid in this Libel.

The Pannel shall not dispute, that it is a Lenity to prosecute for a lower Crime, when a higher is incurred; but he must be forgiven to think That does by no means apply to his Case, and that the Hardships he has suffered are of a pretty singular Nature: That, after having lived so long in the World with an irreproachable Character, and served his Country in Parliament with an intire Reputation, remote from every sinister View, and thereby deserved the Esteem of his Constituents, as a Mark of which they conferred on him the Office of chief Magistrate of this City: That, because he had the Misfortune to see his Country involved in publick Confusions before the End of his Administration, and the City irresistibly overpowered by lawless Force, after all the Precautions he had taken to prevent it, the Malice of his Enemies should have so far prevailed against him, as to bring him under a Suspicion of Guilt, and subject him to the heavy Sufferings he has already undergone: And now, when after the strictest Scrutiny and Inquisition into his Conduct for above twenty Months past, the Charge appears fully drawn out, the Bulk of it consists of supposed Omissions, or Errors in point of Conduct, which, if the contrary Steps had been taken, might have been equally found fault with, as the Event turned out; and the two Articles upon which the chief Stress is laid, when the Circumstances of the Case are considered, do truly resolve into no more but that he was not able to keep out the Town when all Assistance had deserted him, nor to prevail with the Inhabitants to secrete their Arms, when they were under the immediate Terror of their Lives. These Things he hopes will not be imputed to him as a Crime, but that he will be relieved from all farther Hardships by your Lordships Justice.

in dismissing the Libel as irrelevant, and absolving him from this Prosecution.

In respect whereof, &c.

JAMES FERGUSON.

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

The Lords, after arguing upon the Libel and Informations, pronounced the following Interlocutor: 'The Lords Justice-General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the criminal Libel pursued at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, against Archibald Stewart, of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, with the foregoing Debate thereupon, they find it relevant to infer the Pains of Law, that the Pannel, at the Time and Place libelled, being then Lord Provost of the City of Edinburgh, wilfully neglected to pursue, or wilfully opposed or obstructed, when proposed by others, such Measures as were proper or necessary for the Defence of the City against the Rebels, in the Instances libelled, or so much of them as do amount to such wilful Neglect; and find it relevant, as aforesaid, separatim, That the Firelocks and Bayonets belonging to the City, or the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls, fell into the Hands of the Rebels through the wilful Neglect of the said Pannel; or that he refused or declined to take proper Measures, when required or demanded, which were in his Power, for securing or rendering useless to the Rebels the said Arms: And find relevant, as aforesaid, all such Acts charged upon the Pannel by the Libel, which shall appear to have been unnecessarily done by him, and which did manifestly tend to the preventing or weakening the Defence of the City, or the facilitating the Rebels getting Possession thereof, or their seizing the Arms therein. But allow the Pannel to prove all Facts and Circumstances alledged in his Defence for eliding or alleviating the Crimes charged upon him as above found relevant: And remit the Pannel, with the Libel as found relevant, to the Knowledge of an Assize.'

Signed,

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter a Bill was presented to the said Lords for William Grant of Prestongrange, Esquire, his Majesty's Advocate, humbly shewing, That where he brought a criminal Libel, at his Instance, before their Lordships, against Archibald Stewart, Esq. late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty and Misbehaviour in Office, as more fully enumerate and mentioned in the criminal Libel raised, and now depending at his Instance against him thereanent, that the first Diet for the Provost's Compareance being some time ago elapsed, and standing by Adjournment fixed from former Diets to this Day; and Walter Grosset, Collector of the Customs at Alloa, a material Witness in this Cause, and though given out in the List of Witnesses, along with others, to the said Archibald Stewart, being not then returned from London to Scotland, tho' daily expected, was not cited, and consequently no Execution given in against him to the Clerk of Court, whereby the Complainer would be prejudged for want of his Evidence, unless their Lordships provided a Remedy: That the Fact was, Mr. Grosset was out of the Kingdom, at least in England, and did not return to Scotland till the seventh of July last, when the Warrant in the criminal Letters for summoning Witnesses was useless, by the Elapse of the Day to which they were thereby directed to be cited, which was the third Day of the said Month of July; and as the said Archibald Stewart could qualify no Loss by allowing Mr. Grosset yet to be cited, and that, in the Prosecutor's Apprehension, it was no ways disagreeable, either to Law or Practice, to give a farther Warrant for citing the said Walter Grosset to any short Day they pleased to appoint: Therefore praying their Lordships for Letters of Diligence for summoning the said Mr. Walter Grosset, as a Witness in the said Cause, in common Form.

Which Bill being publicly read in Court, Mr. Alexander Lockhart, as Counsel for the Pannel, represented, That he had no Power from the Pannel himself to oppose this Bill, yet, as it was new and unprecedented, and might prove of dangerous Consequence in after Trials, if such a Practice was introduced in this Court, he therefore objected, that this Bill could not now pass, in regard that, by the constant and uniform Practice of this Court, all criminal Letters, with the Executions against the Party, Witnesses and Affizers, are lodged in the Hands of the Clerks of Court forty-eight Hours at least before the Trial, that the Pannel may have an Opportunity to see the same, and not only to object against the Formality thereof, but likewise to prepare himself to prove such Objections as he may have against the Witnesses that appear to be cited: That, if this Practice were allowed, it might be in the Power of a Prosecutor to protract a Process for ever; he might give a List of ten thousand Witnesses, and only return Executions against ten of these, and every now and then drop in a Bill, and tell the Lords such a Witness is a material Witness, and therefore must be cited; and, even in the midst of a Proof, supposing a relevant Objection sustained against a Witness, upon account of an Informality in the Execution, a Prosecutor has nothing to do, but to stop short, and tell the Lords this was a material Witness, and he must have a Diligence for citing him of new; and it was submitted to their Lordships, whether they would grant such an extraordinary Demand; and as little it was hoped they would comply with the present, which was altogether new and without Precedent, and might prove of such dangerous Consequence in general.

* An old Scots Law-term, signifying a Party's having stood Trial, till the Jurors did inclose, or return their Verdict.

The Lord Advocate answered, That though the Diligence now sought was new, yet it was no ways unreasonable or unjust; if the Desire of it was granted, he was willing the Pannel be indulged with a convenient Time for preparing himself to prove, or bring any Objections he might have against this Witness; that of two Remedies the easiest was to be chosen: For, as Mr. Grosset was a very material Witness, either he must be cited in this Way, or, if the Lords should not judge that proper, the Prosecutors would desert this Diet, and raise a new Prosecution, which would protract the Time; and therefore, as the Pannel could be no ways prejudged by this Demand, he hoped their Lordships would pass the Bill.

The Lords Justice-General and Commissioners of Justiciary having heard this Bill, as also Parties and their Procurators hinc inde for and against granting the Desire thereof, as above, they refuse the Bill.

Signed,

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

His Majesty's Advocate, in respect the Lords have, of this Date, judged it not competent to give Warrant of new for citing Walter Grosset, Collector of the Customs at Alloa, though he had been in the List given to the Pannel, Mr. Stewart, but omitted to be cited for the Reasons mentioned in the Bill given in for a new Diligence for that Effect, does not insist against the Pannel Archibald Stewart, pro loco & tempore, reserving Power afterwards to insist against him as accords.

Signed,

WILLIAM GRANT.

'The Lords Justice-General and Commissioners of Justiciary, in respect his Majesty's Advocate does not insist against the said Archibald Stewart, they desert the Diet against him, and dismiss him from the Bar, reserving to his Majesty's Advocate to insist against him afterwards, as he shall see Cause.'

Signed,

ARGYLL, I. P. D.

Thereafter Mr. Gilbert Elliot, Advocate, protested, that the said Archibald Stewart had fulfilled his Bond of Recognizance, by comparing from Time to Time at the several Diets of Court, and not departing this Court without Leave thereof, the Diet being now deserted, and he dismissed from the Bar, that therefore the said Bond was voided; and thereupon took Instruments in the Hands of the Clerk of Court.

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, indicted and accused at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq. his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, for the Crimes of Neglect of Duty, and Misbehaviour in Offices and Places of publick Trust, and the Violation of the Trust and Duty of such Offices, in Manner at length mentioned in the criminal Letters raised against him thereanent.

N. B. The Libel here mentioned, is the same with the former Libel, p. 11. of the first Trial.

The Libel being openly read, Mr. Archibald Stewart, Pannel, craved, That before he should be obliged to plead Guilty or Not Guilty to the Libel, he might be heard by his Counsel, whether or not he was obliged to answer to this second Libel at all?

Mr. Lockhart for the Pannel then insisted, That now, after a former Libel had been raised, the Cause debated, Informations given in, the Relevancy determined, and an Exculpatory Proof allowed to the Pannel, there could not, according to the Forms of the Court, any new Libel be raised: That any Processes of this kind, that have been deserted, and of new prosecuted, have been always considered as a Grievance upon the Subject: And by an Act of Parliament, James VI. Parl. 6. cap. 78. after repeating the many Grievances occasioned to the Subjects in the Execution of criminal Libels, and deserting of Diets when such Libels are executed, the Act directs, 'That, for the future, all Prosecutors shall find Caution to report their Letters duly execute, and insist in the Pursuit thereof, until the final End and Decision of the same, under the Penalty in the Act mentioned.' That however, in former Cases, the Crown-Lawyers have deserted Diets before pronouncing any Relevancy; yet there could not be an Instance shewn, where, after a Relevancy was determined, the Diet had been deserted; and if that were the Case, it might be in the Power of any King's Advocate, from a private Grudge, to raise a Process against a Subject, desert the Diet, raise a new Process, and so on ad infinitum; which would be equal to a Forfeiture upon the Party accused: That the Pannel did not of himself intend to make this Objection, but was advised to do so by his Lawyers; he being always unwilling to form any Objection that might in the least conduce to put off his Trial. At the same Time it was observed by his Lawyers, that it might prove of dangerous Consequence to the Lieges in general, were such a Precedent allowed of; and thereof, at the same Time that the Judgment of the Court was demanded upon this Question, represented, That he was willing to wave the Objection, provided the Pannel was reimbursed of his Expences in the former Trial, to shew their Lordships that the Pannel wanted nothing more than to have his Cause tried, and himself vindicate, by a full Trial.

The Lord Advocate answered, That the Counsel for the Pannel had mentioned no Law whereupon to found their Objection; that the Practice of the Court has been, Time out of Mind, to desert Diets, and allow of new Prosecutions; that there was no Difference of deserting a Diet before or after the Relevancy was determined. If indeed the Pannel had tholed an Assize, then he might have had Ground to object against a Trial, and to complain that it was oppressive. That the deserting the Diet formerly, was owing to the Pannel himself, who took Hold of a trivial Objection, against citing a Witness when the first Diet of Compareance was elapsed. And both this Point, and the Costs acclaimed by the Pannel, were submitted to their Lordships. At the same time, he declined entering into any Contract with the Pannel upon that Head, but depended wholly upon their Lordships Determination.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the foregoing Debate, find the Pannel, Archibald Stewart, most still answer, and plead Guilty or Not Guilty to the present Libel, notwithstanding of the Objection moved for him thereagainst, arising from what is alleged of the deserting the Diet in the former Libel, after pronouncing Interlocutor on the Relevancy thereof. Signed,

ALEX. FRASER, J. P. D.

Thereafter Mr. Stewart and the Lord Advocate both represented, That as the Defences, and Answers thereto, were fully pled, and contained in the Informations upon the former Libel, and were the same they had now to offer to the present, they agree to refer themselves to the said Informations, without giving the Court of themselves any further Trouble.

Then the Court pronounced the same Interlocutor on the Relevancy, as that pronounced the 6th August last on the first Libel; and thereafter continued the Diet till next Day at Eight o'Clock in the Morning; and ordained Parties, Witnesses, and Attorneys, then to attend, each under the Pain of Law.

Follows a List of the Writings referred to in the Libel.

1. Letter from the Pretender's Son, bearing Date from his Camp 16th September, 1745, addressed, To the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council of Edinburgh.

2. Answer from the Pretender's Son to the first Deputation sent by the Magistrates and Council to his Camp.

3. Answer from ditto, to the second Deputation from ditto.

4. Representation by the Ministers of Edinburgh, to the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council thereof, of Date 6th September, 1745, in favour of the Design of putting the City in a proper Posture of Defence.

5. Petition and Address to the Lord Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh, of certain Burgesses and Inhabitants of the City, offering to serve as Volunteers in Defence of the City against the Rebels, with two Opinions of his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor thereto annexed, of Date 7th September, 1745.

6. Application from the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and his Majesty's Advocate and Solicitor to General Gueff, on the 16th September, 1745, for a Party of Dragoons to assist in Defence of the City.

7. Representation of the Committee of Volunteers, to Archibald Stewart Lord Provost, without a Date, and unsigned, but found in the Custody of Archibald Stewart when he was apprehended.

8. Representation to the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council of Edinburgh, of certain Inhabitants of the City thereto subscribing, which bears no Date, but will be proved to have been presented to the Provost on the 16th September, 1745, and was found in his Pocket when he was apprehended.

9. Journal of what passed relating to the Defence of Edinburgh, from Monday September 2, till Monday September 16, in the Hand-writing of the now deceased Mr. Colin Maclaurin, Professor of Mathematicks in the College of Edinburgh, and found amongst his Papers after his Death.

10. Examination of Archibald Stewart, Esq. the 7th December 1745, before a Committee of the Lords of his Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

His Majesty's Advocate, and Mr. Alexander Lockhart as Counsel for the Pannel, did admit and agree, that the several Matters and Facts contained in the Records of the Town-Council, and Minutes of the Committee, both produced in Process, do contain the Facts therein stated as they truly happened; and therefore agreed to hold the said Records and Minutes as probative of the Facts therein contained.

N. B. The Matters and Facts referred to, and here admitted, are ingrossed in the two Informations.

Mr. Lockhart did further admit, that the Articles No. 1, 2, 3, 5, & 6, in the List of Writings annexed to the Libel, as produced for proving the said Libel, are the Writings referred to in the Libel itself upon the several Articles, and are genuine; but did not thereby mean to admit any Facts stated in the Libel, or Information for the Prosecutor, with relation to these Writings.

N. B. These Writings so admitted, are all ingrossed, and taken Notice of in the Informations.

Then the Lord Advocate adduced the following Witnesses for proving the Libel against the Pannel.

*I. George Drummond, Esq; present Lord Provost of Edinburgh, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice and partial Counsel, examined and interrogate, depones, That, upon Sunday the 8th of September 1745, he was sent by the then Lord Advocate to Provost Stewart the Pannel, to acquaint him, That his Majesty's Sign-manual was come down for raising the Edinburgh Regiment of a thousand Men; and, upon that Occasion, he spoke to the Pannel about the Burghers associating themselves as Volunteers: but the Pannel doubted of the Legality of such an Association, and desired to have the Lord Advocate and Solicitor's Opinion thereupon; which was afterwards procured: But who procured it, or brought it to the Pannel, the Deponent knows not; but remembers, that he had a Conversation with the Pannel upon the Subject of that Opinion, after it came to his Hand: And at that Time the Pannel excepted to it, in regard the Opinion did not expressly mention, that it was not treasonable; upon which an Addition to the former Opinion was obtained from the Advocate and Solicitor, bearing that the Association was not treasonable: And which Opinion and Addition being shewn to the Deponent, depones, That they are the same which he has above deponed upon. Depones, That after it was resolved to accept of the Volunteers, the Volunteers agreed among themselves to have a Paragraph insert in the News-papers; and which Paragraph was accordingly by them drawn up, and bore, That, upon the Receipt of his Majesty's Sign-manual, authorising the Provost and Magistrates to raise a thousand Men, and the inlisting the Volunteers, upon the King's Lawyers giving it as their Opinion, that this last might be warrantably done, the Provost cheerfully set about it: And the Deponent was sent from that Meeting, to shew this Paper to the Lord Provost; and he ordered the Deponent to strike out the Words, cheerfully set about it, and, in place thereof, insert, acquiesced in it: And it was accordingly so put in the News-papers. Depones, That, the Night preceding the Meeting in the New Church Isle, being the 9th September, the Pannel came to a Tavern where the Deponent and several other Volunteers were; and, after they had told him what they had been doing that Day, and what Success they had in carrying forward the Subscription, in order to associate the Volunteers together, it was told the Pannel, that they had judged it proper to put on a Badge, or wear a Cockade, as a Mark of Distinction of their Loyalty to his Majesty's Government: But this Proposal the Pannel heard with a Sneeze; and told them, he wished they might not expose themselves to the Ridicule of others: To which one of the Volunteers, who was the Deponent, made Answer, When we put on that Badge, we'll take Care no Man shall dare to insult us, be his Character what it will. Depones, That upon September 10, at a Meeting of the Volunteers in the New Church Isle, the Pannel came there, and a pretty large List was given him by the Volunteers, out of whom they desired to have their Officers named; and that, next Day, the Pannel delivered back the List, he having named six Captains out of it; and desired the Volunteers to name their own Subalterns: That, at the Meeting in the New Church Isle, the Pannel, by several Expressions, signified his Approbation and Satisfaction with the Zeal which the Volunteers then shewed; but, at the same Time, and upon other Occasions also, during that Week, several Things past, which denoted a Coldness in the Pannel as to the Measures which were then carrying forward. And, being interrogate by the Pannel, depones, He does not remember where it was, or who were in Company with the Pannel and him when that Conversation past betwixt them, concerning the Crown-Lawyers signed Opinion; but thinks it was on the Morning of Sunday the 8th. As to the third Article, depones, That the Deponent had several Conversations with the other Volunteers concerning the City-walls: which was occasioned by Mr. MacLaurin's Remonstrances to them, that the Work was not carried on fast enough, he being employed by the Town-Council in directing the putting these Walls in a Posture of Defence: That the Deponent went several Times, and viewed the Works as they were carrying on; and, in his Opinion, they were carried on in a slovenly and careless Manner, there being few Hands employed: And he remembers, that Mr. Joseph Williamson Advocate, was sent by the Volunteers to the Provost and Magistrates, as he thinks, with a Remonstrance, and to desire that some Things might be forwarded, as contained in a Note relative to these Works; whereof Mr. Williamson reported that severals were granted, and at the same Time told the Provost's Treatment of him was a little rough. Depones, That, upon Sunday Night, the 15th September, the Pannel, Capt. James Murray, General Receiver of the Customs, and the Deponent, being together in Mrs. Clarke's, Vintner, Mr. MacLaurin came to get Orders from the Provost to load the Cannon, in order to try them: That Mr. MacLaurin waited some Time, the Pannel being then in a good deal of Hurry; but when he was going out, he told Mr. MacLaurin, That Mr. Drummond the Deponent would give him the proper Orders. As to Article fourth, depones, That it was several Times talked of to the Pannel in the Deponent's Hearing, to lay aside the Trained-Bands; and for these two Reasons; first, That several of the Trained-Bands were believed to be disaffected; and, next, It was not convenient for the Volunteers to do double Duty, both in the Trained-Bands, and in their own Companies: That the Pannel disapproved of this Proposal, because the Trained-Bands were the old Companies of the Town; and besides, he thought it was imprudent to put a Mark of Distinction betwixt the different Inhabitants: That the Deponent remembers, that the Trained-Bands of the City were laid aside in the Year 1715, upon the Occasion of the then Rebellion; and the Care of the City given to a Body of Volunteers, who had associate themselves much in the same Manner as those did upon Occasion of the last Rebellion. Depones, That he remembers a Proposal made among the Volunteers, for employing a Number of able-bodied Lads, upon the Reward of a Guinea to be given to each of them, in order to fill up the Edinburgh Regiment; but knows not whether this Proposal was made to the Provost or not. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he knows not whether that Proposal for laying aside the Trained-Bands, was ever laid before the Council. As to Article fifth, depones, That he remembers, that, upon Sunday the 15th September, there was come to the Town of Edinburgh, of Volunteers, 42 from Dalkeith, 100 from Musselburgh, 180 Seceders, and 70 Excise-Officers; which, conjoined with above 400 Volunteers in the Town of Edinburgh, 200 of the Edinburgh Regiment, and 126 of the Town-Guard, made in all 1118 Men in the Town of Edinburgh, besides the Trained-Bands. As to the seventh Article, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September, he heard from Lord Home, there was a Petition, such as is mentioned in the said Article, going forward; but he did not see it that Day: That, about Four o'Clock of that Afternoon, the Fire-bell rung, which was the Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their respective Posts; and which the Deponent accordingly did, by repairing to his Post in the Lawn-market. As to Article eighth, depones, That, previous to the ringing of the Fire-bell above-mentioned, the Deponent came into a Meeting of the Magistrates and Council in Goldsmiths-Hall, where Mr. Grosset was, who had come there to make offer of a Body of Dragoons being sent into the Town, in case they were required: That, upon his coming in, he found the Council deliberating what was proper to be done upon that Occasion: That the Pannel called to the Deponent, to give his Opinion concerning the giving up or defending the Town; the Deponent made answer, That there was no Occasion to ask his Opinion upon that Point, as he had given it formerly, and by his Actions testified his Inclination to defend the Town. That thereafter Provost Coutts came into the Meeting, and falling into Conversation with the Deponent, he frequently pressed the Deponent to speak: At last the Deponent carried him to a Corner, and said to him, 'Why should I speak, considering the Lord Home told me, That he heard you say, on Saturday last, as you was coming up the New Bank Close, and when he was looking out of the Lord Justice-Clerk's Dining-Room Window, That all the Bustle and Work they were now making about defending the Town of Edinburgh, was idle, and Nonsense; for that the Provost had in his Pocket, three Days ago, the Terms settled in Writing upon which the Town was to be given up?' And Provost Coutts seemed concerned, and did not flatly deny it, but avoided owning it. Depones, That a little Time after he left this Meeting, he heard the Fire-bell ring; which made him go to his Post in the Lawn-market, as above deponed upon; and, after remaining with the Volunteers for about three Quarters of an Hour under Arms, and getting no Orders, the Officers amongst themselves thought proper to advise what was to be done; and at last came to this Resolution, as they saw they could be of no Use to the Town, to return their Arms to the Government, from whom they had them; which was accordingly execute by the Volunteers, the Country Militia, the Seceders, and Excisemen; who all marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms, except two Companies of Volunteers, who remained upon Guard at the Northbow Port, and when they returned from the Castle, it was about half an Hour after Sunset. Depones, That, after coming from the Castle,

* Partial Counsel, by the Law of Scotland, is, the instigating the Prosecution, or offering the Party to depone in his Favours; or being present with Lawyers at the Consultation, where it might be shewn what was necessary to be proved.—And every Witness, by that Law, is obliged upon Oath to swear, that he did neither of these Particulars, which is called purged of partial Counsel.

he went to some Place in the Town, where he expected to get Horſes brought him; and, while he was there, Word came to him, That Mr. Groſe was come from the Country, with an Account, that Sir John Cope was landed at Dunbar; and that he was gone to inform the Magiſtrates of it: And upon this the Defendant went to the Council-Chamber, where he met with the Provost, and Council, and Mr. Groſe. That Mr. Groſe, upon his coming in, put into the Deponent's Hand Lord Advocate's Letter, with one directed to the Provost, as the Deponent thinks, and another from Mr. Fall in Dunbar, directed to Lord Advocate, telling of Sir John Cope's Arrival off Dunbar. That, upon this, the Deponent told the Pannel, that he hoped he would now think of defending the Town, and ring the Fire-bell, to bring the People to their different Poſts: To which the Pannel made Answer, That we muſt be tender of the Blood of our Inhabitants; that they had ſent out ſome of their Magiſtrates to treat; and, ſhould the Rebels hear the Noiſe of the Fire-bell, they might hang them up. Then the Deponent propoſed, that a Drum ſhould be beat through the Town; but the Provost made Answer, That the Volunteers, and others, had delivered up their Arms, and the Military had left them; and they could not defend the Town by themſelves. The Deponent likewiſe told him, it was proper, ſince the Town could not be defended, that the Cannon which were mounted upon the Walls, and the Arms which the Inhabitants had, might be ſo ſecured, as that they ſhould not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. Upon this the Pannel handed over to the Deponent the Letter given in with the Libel, Number 1. and, upon reading it, the Deponent told the Pannel, That he did not know, but if they gave up the Town to the Rebels To-morrow, that the next Day the King's Troops might think they had a Right to uſe it as a Town taken from the Rebels. As to the eleventh Article, depones, beſides what is already ſaid, That the Number of Firelocks and Bayonets which were in the Town-magazine in the Years 1726 and 1727, when the Deponent was Provost, were about 1200; and that the Deponent believes the Trained-Bands uſed to be ſupplied out of that Magazine. And the Representation given out with the Libel, Number Seven, being ſhewn to the Deponent; and he being interrogate, whether he knows any thing of the ſaid Representation? depones, He remembers it to have been drawn up at one of the Meetings of the Volunteers where he was preſent; that it was read over to them, and afterwards ſent to the Pannel by Mr. Wilkinton, one of their Number. And, being read to the Deponent, depones, That it is the Remonſtrance before-mentioned in his Oath. And being interrogate by the Pannel, whether or not the Deponent knows that Orders were given for all theſe Particulars by the Provost? depones, That the Representation contains four Articles, viz. the firſt, concerning the Guards of the Town, of which the Deponent never heard afterwards any Complaint; the ſecond, concerning Ladders; and the third, concerning the inbringing of Meal; both which he believes were complied with, and immediately done; the fourth concerned the Wrights and Maſons being ſet to work; as to which, the Deponent knows, that Bailie Robert Baillie had the Town-Council's Orders, and their full Power veſted in him, to ſee to the Execution of theſe things relating to the City Walls: And the Deponent does not doubt but theſe Orders were given, though in fact very few more Workmen were employed, and ſet to Work. Causa ſcientie patet. And this is Truth, as he ſhall answer to God.

II. Mr James Leſlie Advocate, and one of the Commiſſaries of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September 1745, about Ten o'Clock Forenoon, the Deponent having ſome Buſineſs with Mr. Gordon Merchant, and not meeting with him, and ſeeing the Pannel, he deſired the Pannel to go into Loch's Coffee-houſe, and have it ended with him; and as they were going in, Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, followed them, and went in with them; who told them, That he had been out at Linlithgow the Day before, where he ſaw the Rebel or Highland Army, and ſeveral of his Acquaintances, particularly the Perſon then called Duke of Perth; who asked him, What they were doing in the Town of Edinburgh? that they had need to be careful; for, if they ſtood to their Defence, he would not answer for the Conſequences: And, that Mr. Alves was afterwards carried up to the Pretender's Son, who told him much to the ſame Purpoſe: That, upon this, the Deponent ſaid, This was a very odd Meſſage; but does not remember, that the Pannel ſaid any thing.

III. Mr. Robert Craigie of Glendock, Advocate, depones, That, in the laſt Week of Auguſt 1745, he was preſent at a Meeting of ſeveral of the Friends of the Government, and Inhabitants of Edinburgh, in the Lord Juſtice-Clerk's Houſe, where was preſent alſo Provost Stewart, now Pannell; where the Propoſal for levying a Regiment of a thouſand Men for Defence of the City of Edinburgh was talked of: That the Perſons preſent ſeverally gave their Opinions; as did likewiſe the Pannel; at leaſt ſpoke of the Subject; but the Deponent did not take notice of any thing remarkable in what the Pannel ſaid: That the Deponent underſtood the Purpoſe of that Meeting was, in order to adviſe the Magiſtrates of Edinburgh concerning the Lawfulneſs of that Measure: That the Meeting generally agreed, that it was proper to apply for his Maſteſty's Warrant for that Purpoſe; and the Deponent, being then his Maſteſty's Advocate, undertook to write for it, which he did that very Night; and received his Maſteſty's Sign-manual, by Expreſs, on Sunday the 8th September. Depones, That there were preſent at that Meeting, ſo far as the Deponent remembers, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Lord Tinwald, Provost Macaulay, William Alexander, Merchant, and ſeveral others. Depones, That Provost Macaulay and Mr Alexander followed the Deponent from that Meeting, who aſſured him, that no Scruple needed to be made for fear of Want of Money to ſupport that Regiment; for that they would undertake to find Subſcriptions enough to ſupport it: and the Deponent accordingly wrote to one of his Maſteſty's Secretaries of State. Depones, That, upon Friday the 6th September 1745, a Gentleman who had been a Magiſtrate of Edinburgh, brought to the Deponent a Petition, propoſed to be ſigned by ſeveral of the Burgeſſes, to be preſented to the Provost and Magiſtrates, and deſired the Deponent's Opinion, whether the Petition contained any thing illegal or improper? and that the Deponent gave his Opinion that it did not: That next Day, the 7th September, one of the Magiſtrates came to the Deponent's Houſe, and told him, that the Provost, and ſome of the Magiſtrates, wanted to wait of him for his Opinion, and deſired to know his Time: That he ſaid, the Magiſtrates might come when they pleaſed; that accordingly, very ſoon after, the Provost, and three or four of the Magiſtrates, came, and ſat before the Deponent the Petition now produced in Court; and which was a Copy of the ſame Petition he had ſeen the Day before: That Provost Stewart, the Pannel, ſuggeſted, that it was unlawful, and, as he was informed, reaſonably to comply with the Petition: That the Deponent ſaid, That whatever might be the caſe in ſome Circumſtances, yet at preſent, when there was a Rebellion in the Country, it was not only lawful, but the Duty of every Subject to take Arms in ſupport of the Government. That the Magiſtrates deſired the Deponent, and Mr. Robert Dundas, then his Maſteſty's Solicitor, their Opinion in Writing: That the Deponent thereupon ſent to Mr. Dundas, who immediately came; and, after talking with him, did, in his Preſence, dictate to his Clerk their Opinion, which he took down in Writing, That it was lawful, in the then preſent Juſtice, for the Magiſtrates to authoriſe the Petitioners, and others, to take up Arms in Defence of the City, and of the Government; and that the Deponent and Mr. Dundas ſigned the Opinion, and ſent it with the Petition to the Magiſtrates. That, ſoon after, one of the Magiſtrates brought back the Opinion to the Deponent's Houſe: and told him, that the Opinion did not ſatisfy the Provost, meaning the Pannel; and that he deſired to proceed upon the Petition, unleſs the Deponent and the Solicitor would give their Opinion, That the taking up Arms was not reaſonable: That the Deponent teſtified ſome Surpriſe at the Scruple; however, in order to ſatisfy it, the Deponent and Mr. Dundas ſigned a ſecond Opinion, That it was not reaſonable for the Magiſtrates to grant the Deſire of the Petition. Depones, That, on Monday the 16th September 1745, Mr. Dundas came to the Deponent's Room, about Mid-day, and brought along with him Andrew Alves, Writer to the Signet, and told the Deponent, he found him delivering a Meſſage from the Pretender to the People in the Street; and that he had brought him to the Deponent to be examined. The Deponent does not remember whether Mr. Dundas brought any Guard along with him. That the Deponent accordingly examined Mr. Alves; who told the Deponent, that he had fallen in with the Highland Army on this Side of Linlithgow that Morning, and that he had been ſome time with them: That the Perſon called the Duke of Perth ſpoke to Mr. Alves, and deſired him to deliver a Meſſage to the Provost of Edinburgh, importing, That he expected to be received into the City without any Oppoſition or Reſiſtance; in which caſe the City might expect his Protection; but, if he met with any Oppoſition, the City might expect Treatment that neither he nor they would wiſh: That the Perſon whom they called the Prince, was near by when this Meſſage was delivered by the Duke of Perth, and aſſented to the Meſſage: That Mr. Alves came into Edinburgh, and, having met with the Provost, the Pannel, he delivered this Meſſage to the Provost; and that he had repeated the ſame thing to ſeveral People he met with on the Streets. That the Deponent remonſtrated to Mr. Alves, that it was reaſonable in him to carry ſuch a Meſſage from the Rebels; and the Deponent, as he thought it might be attended with bad Conſequences, to raiſe Sedition and Diſſention in the Town, by ſpreading this Meſſage, he reſolved to commit Mr. Alves to Priſon; and accordingly cauſed his Clerk to make out a Warrant for that Purpoſe. That, in the mean time, the Lord Juſtice-Clerk had come to the Deponent's Houſe, and was in the Room with General Guſt: That the Deponent having come in to them, told them what had happened, and his Reſolution to commit Mr. Alves: That they approved; only, Lord Juſtice-Clerk ſuggeſted, That it would be proper to ſend to the Provost; and, if the Fact of delivering the Meſſage to the Provost, was ſuch as Mr. Alves repreſented, that it would be proper that the Commitment ſhould be by the Provost: That accordingly the Deponent ſent his Clerk with a Meſſage to the Provost, in the Name of the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, Mr. Guſt, and his own, ſignifying he would come to them: That the Provost came very ſoon after; and the Deponent underſtood it was in compliance with the Meſſage. That, upon the Provost's coming in, my Lord Juſtice-Clerk told him what Mr. Alves had ſaid with reſpect to his delivering the Meſſage to him. And the Provost acknowledged the Meſſage had been ſo delivered; that the Provost had repeated it to one of the Magiſtrates, the Deponent thinks he ſaid it was to Dean of Guild Hathorn; and that he asked his Opinion, whether it was proper to mention it to any of the reſt of the Council? That the Dean of Guild ſaid, it was by no means proper. That the Lord Juſtice-Clerk asked him, why he did not take Notice of Mr. Alves? why he did not commit him? that it was a reaſonable Practice. That the Provost made ſome Excuse; that he did not know, or did not think it was Treason. That he was told by the Lord Juſtice-Clerk, that he ought ſtill to commit him; and in this Opinion the Deponent concurred with him. That the Provost deſired Directions in what Manner: That thereupon the Deponent gave him the Warrant that he had made out. That thereupon the Provost went away; and, ſoon after, one from the Provost brought to the Deponent a Warrant of Commitment; but the Deponent deſired the Meſſenger to get proper Officers to execute the Warrant; and ſoon after Mr. Alves was carried off Priſoner from the Deponent's Houſe; and the Deponent believes he was committed to Priſon. Depones, That, upon the ſaid Monday, the 16th September, while General Guſt was in the Deponent's Houſe, it was ſuggeſted to the Deponent, that ſome Confuſion ſeemed to ariſe upon the Streets: That it occurred to the Deponent, and to General Guſt, and others, who were coming and going to the Deponent's Houſe, that it might be of uſe to ſuppreſs diſorderly People, and to encourage thoſe who were in Arms for the Government in the City, that a hundred Dragoons ſhould be brought into the Town; and that this might, at the ſame time, be of Loſs to the Service of the Dragoons, if ſo many were choſen out of Colonel Gardiner's Regiment, whoſe Horſes were rendered unſerviceable by their great Fatigues. That the Reſolution was accordingly taken; and Sir John Inglis, with the Aſſiſtance of ſome other Juſtices of Peace, provided a Quantity of Hay for the Subſiſtence of the Dragoons. That Colonel Clayton, who, as the Deponent underſtood, acted as Aid de Camp to Brigadier Fowkes, came ſeveral times that Forenoon to General Guſt for Orders; and that, at one of theſe Times, General Guſt gave Orders to ſend in the hundred Dragoons, by a verbal Meſſage to the Brigadier. That General Guſt went to the Caſtle before Two o'Clock. That, before Three, Colonel Clayton came to the Deponent's Houſe, and told the Deponent, that Brigadier Fowkes declined to obey the verbal Meſſage touching the ſending in the Dragoons; and that he desired a written Order from Mr. Guesf: That, upon this, Mr. Dundas the Solicitor, and the Deponent, went along with Colonel Clayton to the Castle, and stated the Case to Mr. Guesf: That Mr. Guesf agreed to give the written Order, but desired as a Condition, that the Provost of Edinburgh, Mr. Dundas, and the Deponent, should give to him their Opinion in Writing, that it was for the Service of the Government that the Dragoons should be sent into the Town: That, as the Provost was not present, the Expedient proposed and agreed to, was, that the General should sign the Order for the Dragoons, and should put it in the Hands of Mr. Lindsay, the Secretary at War, who wrote the Order; that the Deponent should procure the Provost's Subscription to the Opinion, and his own and Mr. Dundas's; and, upon delivering this Opinion to Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Lindsay should deliver the Order to Colonel Clayton. That the General accordingly signed the Order, and delivered it to Mr. Lindsay; and the Opinion desired was wrote out by Mr. Lindsay. That Colonel Clayton, Mr. Dundas, Mr. Lindsay, and the Deponent, came down from the Castle, and called for the Provost at his House, and missed him; but met him in the Lawn-market, opposite to the Entry to Fisher's Land: That the Deponent told the Provost what had passed; and that it was proper he should sign the Opinion, in order to procure the Dragoons. That the Provost appeared in some Confusion, and said he was hastening to the West-port to shut it; that the Highlanders would be there before him. That the Deponent suggested, that the Measure might be of use against the Highlanders; and that it would be no losing of Time. The Provost agreed to step up to the Deponent's House; and the Provost, in the Deponent's Consulting-room, signed the Opinion, and after him it was signed by the Deponent and Mr. Dundas; and the Deponent having delivered the signed Opinion to Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Lindsay delivered the Order by Mr. Guesf to Colonel Clayton, in order to be carried to Brigadier Fowkes. Depones, That Colonel Clayton, upon his coming to the Deponent's House, did inform the Deponent that the Rebels were on their March, and were come the Length of Kirkliston Water. And when the Deponent was in the Castle, he observed the Dragoons marching Eastward by the long Dykes; and this determined the Deponent to follow them down to Leith, where he supposed they were marching to solicit the Execution of Mr. Guesf's Order. That he believes this might have been about Four o'Clock at Night. That he met Mr. Walter Grosf, then Collector at Allea, between the Water-gate and the Abbey-hill: That Mr. Grosf told the Deponent he was coming with a Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk to the Provost, offering him the Assistance of the two Regiments of Dragoons, or such a Number of them as the Provost should desire, in Defence of the Town: That the Deponent told Mr. Grosf, that the Provost had agreed to demand, and obtained an Order to bring in a hundred Dragoons; but he might proceed with his Message. That Mr. Grosf did not say, nor did the Deponent understand, that he had any written Message from the Lord Justice-Clerk. That the Deponent found the Dragoons had not gone to Leith, but were in their Road to Fisher-row: And he understood from Colonel Clayton, that Mr. Fowkes did not incline to divide his Dragoons. However, before the Deponent had come up with Mr. Fowkes, Mr. Stark, Commander of the Custom-house Sloop, delivered a Letter to the Deponent from the Provost of Dunbar, acquainting him, that the Fleet, on board of which Sir John Cope's Troops were, was seen within the May about Two o'Clock; and that they would be at Leith with the next Tide, which would happen in the Night-time. That as the Deponent read his Letter aloud, it was soon known through the whole two Regiments, and to Mr. Fowkes. That Mr. Fowkes thereupon alighted, and went into Mr. Forbes's House; and, as the Deponent understood, he there wrote Letters to Sir John Cope, acquainting him of the Situation of Matters: and the Deponent found Mr. Fowkes not at all disposed to divide his Regiments, or to comply with Mr. Guesf's Order. While the Deponent was in Mr. Forbes's House, and Mr. Fowkes was writing his Letters aforesaid, Mr. Grosf returned from Edinburgh, and delivered to the Deponent a Letter from the Pannel, addressed to the Deponent and Lord Justice-Clerk, which he now produces, and is marked by him and the Lord Examiner; wherein he desires a new Opinion from the Deponent and the Lord Justice-Clerk, before he would receive any Dragoons. That this was a Disappointment to the Deponent, and made him not think it proper to press the sending the Dragoons, as it persuaded him that Matters were changed from the Time he had left Edinburgh. However, Mr. Grosf was sent back to Edinburgh, with the Accounts of Sir John Cope's Arrival; and the Deponent delivered him his Letter, with a Certificate that the Letter and Account were genuine. And depones, That he heard Mr. Fowkes mention what he had wrote to Sir John Cope; and that he had advised him rather to land his Troops at Presfoun-pans or North-Berwick than at Leith, as he would be nearer the Assistance of the Dragoons, who were to be quartered that Night at Presfoun-pans, or thereabouts; and being interrogate for the Pannel, What he thinks was intended by the Councils mentioned in the Provost's Letter above deponed upon? depones, That he apprehends the Councils therein mentioned is what past at a Meeting in the Lord Justice-Clerk's, in Edinburgh, on Sunday Evening the 15th, when General Guesf, Brigadier Fowkes, Lord Justice-Clerk, the Pannel, the Deponent, and several others were present: that the Deponent understood, that it was then agreed upon, that the Dragoons should incamp that Night on this Side the Coh Bridge; that some time after a Question was stated, Whether the Town of Edinburgh might not be a proper Quarter for the Dragoons, to wait there the landing of Sir John Cope? and, whether they could not at Pleasure join him, whatever Situation the Rebels might be in? That the Deponent remembers that Captain Murray, the Receiver of the Customs, answered, That he thought it would not be a proper Quarter; for that if the Rebels were possessed of the Suburbs, and should set fire to the Potter-Row and Bristow Ports, the Dragoons could not possibly march out. That this was all the Deliberation that the Deponent and the Provost together were Witnesses to concerning the Dragoons coming into Edinburgh; and, to the best of his Memory, these were the very Expressions. Whether there was any other Concert upon that Subject the said Sunday Evening, the Deponent cannot say; as the Deponent went to another Room to examine Prisoners, after the Resolution was taken touching the Incampment that Night; and when the Deponent returned to the Company, he heard Captain Murray's Opinion last deponed upon; and very soon thereafter the Company parted. And depones, That the Petition by the Burghesses to the Magistrates and Council, and the two Opinions thereon, now produced in Court, and signed by Mr. Dundas and the Deponent, are the Petition and Opinions referred to in the above Deposition.

N. B. The Letter referred to in this Oath, and produced by Mr. Craigie, is fully ingrossed in the Information for the Prosecutor, p. 53. except a Postscript, in these Words: I am determined by your Orders.

IV. Mr. Robert Dundas younger of Arniston, Advocate, depones, That the Deponent went for a few Days out of Town about the End of August 1745. That, on his Return, he understood, that there had been a Meeting concerning the raising a Regiment for the Defence of the City, and likewise concerning a Proposal by some of the Burghers and Inhabitants, to serve as Volunteers in that Service: That some of those concerned in the Proposal came to the Deponent's House, to ask his Opinion concerning the Lawfulness of it; and told him, that some Difficulties were made about it, particularly by some Lawyers. That the Deponent said, He had no Difficulty of its being lawful. In consequence whereof a Message was thereafter sent by the Town-Council to get the Opinion of Mr. Craigie, then Lord Advocate, and the Deponent's; which they accordingly gave in Writing, and subscribed. But, as the Deponent was going away out of Town, some Hours after that, he met Robert Bailie, then one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, and another Member of the Town-Council, whose Name the Deponent cannot recollect; who told him, That the Provost was not satisfied with the Opinion; that he excepted to the Manner in which it was expressed; because, though they had said it was lawful, they had not said it was not Treason: And that thereupon Mr. Craigie had already subjoined an additional Opinion; but that still Provost Stewart was not pleased, unless he got the Deponent's Subscription. And the Deponent accordingly signed that additional Opinion also: And that the Opinion, and additional Opinion, in the Clerk's Hands, shewn to him, are the same that were signed by him. Depones, That upon Monday the 16th September 1745, the Deponent came down to the Street from Mr. Craigie's House about Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon: That he met Sir John Inglis of Cramond at the End of the Luckenbooths; who told him that Andrew Alves Writer to the Signet was at the Cross, telling to every body, That he had brought a Message from the Rebels at Lintithgow, That, if the Town of Edinburgh was peaceably given up, there should no Mischief be done to the Inhabitants; but, if any Resistance was made, the Consequence might be fatal to them. That the Deponent went immediately in search of Mr. Alves; and, having found him, asked, What Tale he was thus spreading about; and how he came to carry a Message from Rebels? That Alves repeated the Message, as above; and excused himself for bringing it, saying, That he accidentally had been taken Prisoner by the Rebels. That the Deponent immediately carried Mr. Alves to Mr. Craigie's House, and there left him; and, returning some Time after, he found together the Lord Justice-Clerk, Mr. Craigie, and the Pannel, Mr. Alves being then in another Room: That he was then told, Alves had delivered the Message to the Pannel about an Hour before; and, as the Deponent thinks, the Lord Justice-Clerk said, that he and Mr. Craigie had sent for the Pannel as the properest Person to sign the Warrant for committing Alves: That, in a very little, the Pannel left the Room; and, soon thereafter, a Party of Volunteers came with the Pannel's Warrant, and carried off Mr. Alves to Prison. Depones, That, about Four o'Clock of Monday the said 16th September, Major Clayton brought the Account to Mr. Craigie's, where the Deponent then was, that the Rebel-Army was advancing; and that it was thought proper for the Dragoons to retire to the plain Ground between Leith and Edinburgh. That thereupon Mr. Craigie and the Deponent went to Lieut. Gen. Guesf in the Castle; who agreed to order a hundred Dragoons into the Town of Edinburgh, if the Demand was made in Writing: That Mr. Craigie and the Deponent, returning from the Castle, met with the Pannel at the Bowhead Well; whereupon the Deponent told the Pannel, That they were well met, for they were going just to send for him, to communicate to him something of Importance: That the Pannel answered, That it was not now Time for Consultation, but for Execution, when the Enemy was at their very Gates: To which the Deponent replied, That it was not for Consultation, but Execution, that he was wanted; and then the Pannel went up to Mr. Craigie's House: And upon his being told that he might have a hundred Dragoons into the Town, if he thought proper; he answered, That it was certainly right, and that he was very desirous of it. Upon which a Letter was wrote and sent to Lt. Gen. Guesf, signed by Mr. Craigie, the Deponent, and the Pannel, requesting the aforesaid Number of Dragoons to be sent into the Town.

V. Mr. George Logan, one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, the Deponent, and some others of his Brethren Ministers, being told in the Coffee-house, that there was a Meeting of a great many of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle; and that it was the Opinion of the Meeting, that the Town could not be defended against the Rebels; the Deponent therefore went to the said Meeting: That he found there the Pannel acting as Præses of the Meeting: That the Meeting was very numerous: That he could not say, that they were composed of such as he thought the best affected to his Majesty's Government: That many of them he did not know; but of those he knew, several were such as he always thought disaffected: That the Deponent does not remember to have seen any of the Volunteers there, except Mr. Glen the Minister; but where they were, he knows not: That as the Deponent, or at least his Wife, had a considerable Interest in the Town, which he was very willing to risk for the Service of the Government; he proposed to the Pannel, then Præses of the Meeting, that the Dragoons should be brought into Town, for the Defence of it: But the Pannel answered, The Dragoons were gone too far to be brought back again.

VI. Dr. William Wishart, Principal of the College of Edinburgh, depones, That in the Month of September 1745, the Deponent was present at a Meeting of several of the Ministers of Edinburgh, when it was concerted, that a Paper should be drawn, and signed by them, approving of the Design of raising the Edinburgh Regiment for the Defence of the Town, and engaging to contribute towards defraying the Expence. That the Paper was accordingly drawn, and signed by the Deponent, and several other Ministers in the Deponent's Presence, of the Date it bears, the 6th Day of the said Month of September; and that the Writing signed by the Ministers in the Clerk's Hands, being No. 4. of the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel, is the same Paper that was signed by the Deponent. [Vide Lord Advocate's Information, p. 635.] Depones, That in the Afternoon of the 16th September, about Four Afternoon, the Deponent went to Goldsmiths-Hall, where he found the Pannel, then Lord Provost, several of the Magistrates and Councillors, and some others of the Inhabitants of the Town. That some of the Meeting, but, as the Deponent thinks, none of the Council, said, That several of the Inhabitants were in Terror, both for their Houses and Persons, should any Defence be made of the Town against the Rebels; and therefore were for delivering it up. That no Answer was made to this Suggestion: But, at that Time, Walter Grosset, Collector of the Customs at Alloa, came into the Meeting, with a Message to the Pannel from the Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk, that there were a hundred Dragoons in Town, and the rest might be brought in, if his Lordship desired it. That the Pannel answered, That that was putting the Thorn in his Foot, but that he would return it; and appealed to Provost Drummond, then present, whether, at a Meeting that had been held the last or the other Night, he had not heard it said, that, if he brought any of the King's Troops into Edinburgh, it was bringing them into a Poind-fold to be caught by the Rebels? and upon that account he would give no Orders. That Grosset answered, That those who sent him were ready to give the Orders, if his Lordship desired it. That thereupon he gave Mr. Grosset a verbal Answer to return to the Lords Advocate and Justice-Clerk, which Mr. Grosset seemed to understand as a Refusal, and repeated it as such: That the Pannel said he had mistaken him, and that he would give it him in Writing; and called for one Henderson to write the Answer, which the Pannel began to dictate: But the Deponent thinks the Meeting broke up before it was finished. That the Occasion of the Meeting's breaking up, was, that more People came in pressing to give up the Defence of the Town. Upon which the Pannel said, We cannot stay here; let us ring the Bell, and go into the New Church Isle. Upon which the Fire-bell was rung. And the Deponent, having gone first home, returned immediately to the New Church Isle, where he found the Pannel seated in the Moderator's Chair, and a pretty numerous Meeting, most Part of them not known to the Deponent, not even by Sight: Such as he did know, several of them were such who frequented Nonjuring Meeting-houses; but others who attended the Established Church. Depones, The first thing the Deponent observed at that Meeting was, the preceding Witness, Mr. Logan, standing upon a Form, and saying, That the sending out to treat with the Rebels, was inviting them to Town; and that he heard his Majesty's Troops were nigh at hand to assist the Defence of the Town: But that this was generally houted in the Meeting, and a Cry raised, They were gone, they were fled, they were gone to Haddington. Depones, That the Deponent then spoke to the Pannel, and put him in mind of the Proposition that had been about half an Hour before made to him by Mr. Grosset, as from Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk, and desired to know what Answer had been made. That the Meeting raised the former Cry, They were gone, they were fled. But the Pannel very civilly interposed, and said, The Deponent's Question deserved an Answer; and then repeated in Substance what he had before said in Goldsmiths-Hall to Provost Drummond. To which the Deponent replied, That, by the Message he had got, it would seem that the Troops could not yet be so far off as was alledged at that Meeting. Depones, That thereafter the Deponent, directing his Discourse to the Præses, said, That he hoped no Gentleman in that Meeting would dare to propose the delivering up the Town to the Rebels, or Words to that Purpose. The Pannel answered, Yes, it is proposed. Another Gentleman replied, No, Sir, it is not proposed to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, but to send out to treat with them; and then they will go by the Town. Upon which the Deponent said to the Præses, That, before making a Proposal of that Kind, or, which the Deponent thinks was his Words, before putting a Question of that Kind to any Meeting, he should have first purged the Town of the known Enemies to the Government that were in it. Against which a Hout was raised in the Meeting; and one of them said to the Deponent, Then you should be amongst the first that should be put out of it; which raised a great Laugh. That, at the same Meeting, Bailie Hamilton said to the Pannel, That if it was proposed to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, his Lordship should first send Orders to the Volunteers to deliver up the Government's Arms, that they might not be furnished by the Rebels: But the Deponent heard no Answer made to it. Depones, That Sir George Preston of Valleyfield, who had the Command of a Company of Volunteers then planted at the Netherbow, came into the Meeting, and desired to know from the Pannel, What he was to do with his Company? or what Orders he was to give him? That the Pannel answered, I cannot answer that yet; by and bye. That Sir George said, That, if they were proposing to deliver up the Town to the Rebels, it was Time for him to know what he was to do, for he could not stay; and desired an Answer. That no Answer was given him, so far as the Deponent heard. That then the Pannel put the Question to the Meeting, Who are for defending or holding out the Town? If any, let them speak. To which the Deponent said, That he was, though he should be alone there: That Sir George Preston said, And I; and that one or two more said the same: But the Generality of the Meeting were of another Opinion. Depones, That the Pannel then put the Question, Shall we send any to treat with them? Upon which the Deponent said, That he hoped not to have lived ever to have heard such a Question put by a Lord Provost of Edinburgh. But no Reply was given. And then the Pannel put the Question, Who shall we send to treat with them? Upon which the Deponent and Sir George Preston left the Meeting: And, upon their coming out, the Deponent saw some of the Captains of the Volunteers leading up their Men to the Castle to deliver up their Arms. Depones, That, upon Saturday the 14th, the Deponent was told, that the Ringing of the Fire-bell was appointed as a Signal for the Volunteers convening in the Lawn-market, there to receive their Orders from the Pannel: And the Fire-bell having been rung in Time of divine Worship on Sunday the 15th, in the Forenoon, the Deponent was told, it was to convene the Volunteers as above; and that they met accordingly: and as the Deponent went from Church, he saw some of them in the Lawn-market, and some of them that had marched down to the Grafs-market. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What Answer Provost Drummond made to the Appeal that the Pannel made to him in Goldsmiths-Hall? depones, He does not remember he heard any Answer made. And further depones, That the New Church Isle was pretty full at the above Meeting, though the Deponent has seen it more crowded: That they were all Men, and no Women; but the Deponent cannot give any Judgment what Number they might have been.

VII. Mr. John Glen, Minister of the Gospel at Edinburgh, depones, That the Representation of the Ministers of Edinburgh to the Lord Provost and Magistrates, marked No. 4. in the List of Writings produced against the Pannel, now shewn to him, was signed by him; and that he saw others, whose Names stand there, also sign the same: Believes, that all of them did so whose Subscriptions appear; but cannot be positive; but says, that whether this Representation was given in to the Provost and Magistrates, does not consist with his proper Knowledge; but that he advanced Money in consequence of his Subscription, as the same was demanded. Depones, That he was present at a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September 1745: That the Pannel was then in the Chair: That the Deponent staid but a very little Time there. And being interrogate, Of what sort of Persons he judged the Meeting was composed? saith, That the Bulk of them appeared to him not of the best affected in the Place; and that the Reasons of this his Opinion were, That he saw several of them who, he was informed, had concurred in a Petition to deliver up the Town to the Rebels; and several others who had not contributed Money towards defending the Town, as the other zealously well-affected Subjects had done. That as the Deponent staid but a very little Time there, he cannot pretend to give any particular Account of the Transactions in that Meeting: Only, the Pannel, while he was there, from the Chair, told the Assembly, That he had called them together, to take their Opinion what was proper to be done in the present Situation of Affairs: But that the Deponent left the Meeting before any Resolution was come to, by those who were there assembled. That the Deponent observed very few of the Volunteers at that Meeting: That several of them were then in the Lawn-market, the Deponent having come down that way to the Church; and others of them at the Netherbow Port, whom the Deponent saw there when he went out at the Port, in order to go to the Country. Depones, That he was informed by the Officers of the Volunteers, or by his Fellow-Volunteers, he himself being one, that the Signal for them to meet at their Alarm-post in the Lawn-market, was, the tolling of the Fire-bell. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What the Reason was why he who was a Volunteer left his Corps, and went away, in time of Danger? saith, That he had waited so long upon the Street among the Volunteers, without any Orders or Directions, not knowing what was to be done, that he begun to believe the Town was to be delivered up, and the Volunteers, with their Arms, put into the hands of the Rebels; and therefore, though perhaps it was not very agreeable to military Discipline, he thought it the safest and best for him, to retire. And also saith, That when he came to a Resolution to go away, he applied to one of the Officers of the Volunteers, to have Leave to put his Gun into the hands of a Castle-soldier who was there attending, and had been with him frequently before, in order to teach him somewhat of the military Discipline: which the Officer agreed to; and the Gun was accordingly put into the Soldier's Hands, with Sixpence for his Trouble in carrying it to the Castle.

VIII. James Stewart, Merchant, and one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That there was a Proposition, in the End of August, or Beginning of September 1745, for raising a Regiment of a thousand Men, by Subscription, for Defence of the City against the Rebels; but that the Deponent can say nothing from his proper Knowledge, by whom such Proposal was made to the Pannel, or how it was received by him; nor having been present; nor does he know of any Objections made by the Pannel against it, otherwise than by Hearsay from others. And further saith, That upon the 5th September 1745, which was a Day of publick Fasting in the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent, reflecting upon the present Danger that threatened the City and the Kingdom, began to think, that proper Measures were neglected, which ought to have been taken: And therefore he applied himself to set down in Writing what occurred to him as proper to be done on the Occasion. And the Result of this was, a Memorandum he wrote, and carried with him to a Meeting of a great many of the Inhabitants, who commonly used to assemble themselves in an Evening, to talk together of the present Posture of Affairs, and to consider what was proper to be offered for the Defence of the City, and for opposing the Progress of the Rebels. That, upon reading and considering the foresaid Memorandum, they came to a Resolution, to form a Petition and Address to the Lord Provost and Magistrates, That some of the Burghesses and Inhabitants of the City, who offered to serve as Volunteers, in Defence of the City, against the Rebels, might be properly disposed of, and commanded by Officers to be appointed. And, for this end, a Committee was appointed to draw up such a Petition, and Address; who accordingly did meet, and form the Petition and Address now shewn to the Deponent, marked No. 5. in the List of Writings produced for proving the Libel; which Petition and Address were wrote that Night, and signed by the Deponent, and several others, and next Day by more Persons; when a Deputation from the Meeting was sent with the said Petition to the Pannel, then Lord Provost of Edinburgh. That the Gentlemen who went to carry the Address to the Pannel, returned again to the Company, where the Deponent remained; and the Pannel came along with them; who, when he entered into the Company, seemed to be out of Humour, and complained that any such Paper should have been concerted and drawn up without acquainting him; and addressed himself particularly to the Deponent, telling him, He was greatly surprised, that he should have had any Concern in it, without giving him any Notice of it. That the Deponent answered, It was late upon the 5th of the Month before the Paper was concerted and drawn up, or signed by any body: That next Morning he was employed in getting Subscriptions to it, that it might be presented to the Pannel with greater Weight. To which the Pannel replied, That the Matter of this Address was what he was to consider, and not the Number of Persons who subscribed it; and that, in his Judgment, it was treasonable; and that he himself had taken the Oath of Abjuration, which obliged him to oppose every thing that was treasonable. And further added, with a Sneeze, That he knew of nothing to be Treason, but what the Law had made so. Upon which, some of the Company and the Pannel had some pretty high Words, arguing about the Nature of the Paper, and whether it was treasonable or not. Thereupon the Deponent said, He was afraid it would require some Time and Pains to convince the Pannel of the Reasonableness of it; but that he now had a Paper put into his Hands, signed by a Number of Gentlemen of Character; and that the Deponent hoped, that he would not reject it, without taking Advice; which if he did, and considered it thoroughly, the Deponent hoped he would alter his Opinion. That the Deponent, upon this, left the Company, and went to Mr. Solicitor Dundas's House; where he found Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and some other Persons, with Mr. Dundas; to whom he related what had passed in the Company, and what he has above said; and added, That he was persuaded Provost Stewart would not venture to reject the Proposition made to him, without calling for the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers; and therefore he, the Deponent, hoped Mr. Solicitor would be ready to give the proper Answer, if the Question was laid before him. Mr. Solicitor Dundas then said, He should early in the Morning wait on Mr. Craigie, then Lord Advocate, and concert with him what was fit to be done. Depones, That, at this Time, in Mr. Dundas's, it was concerted between the Solicitor, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and the Deponent, that in case the Provost should reject the Petition, that Bailie Gavin Hamilton, being next Magistrate, should call the Council together, and lay the Matter before them, and endeavour to get the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers. Depones, That, upon Saturday the 7th of September, the Gentlemen who usually met together to consider what they could do for the Defence of the Place, thought it fit to publish a Paragraph or an Advertisement in the Edinburgh News-papers, in order to encourage People to associate themselves for the Defence of the Place. And such a Paragraph having been drawn up, narrating, that an Address having been made to the Magistrates, they had taken the Opinion of the Crown-Lawyers, who approved of it; and that it had likewise met with the Lord Provost's hearty Approbation and Concurrence, or Words to that Purpose; the Paragraph was sent by two of their Number, Provost Drummond, as the Deponent thinks, and the Deponent himself. Upon shewing it to the Pannel, he caused dash out that Part of it relating to his hearty Approbation and Concurrence; and insert in place of it, which he heartily acquiesced in. That the Deponent, and the Person who went along with him, represented, That the Reason of their using the Words which were altered by the Pannel, was, to encourage People to enter into the Association. However, the Pannel still continued of the Opinion he had expressed. Depones, That, about the Middle of the Week which preceded the Rebels Entry to the City of Edinburgh, at a Meeting of the Inhabitants, who usually came together in the Evening to consider of what was proper to be done for the Defence of the City, the deceased Mr. Maclaurin and the Deponent were present; when it was suggested, that several Things were left undone that ought to be taken care of for the publick Safety; and that it was proper these Matters should be laid before the Lord Provost. And it was proposed, the Deponent should go from the Meeting, and, in their Name, lay them before the Lord Provost. That the Deponent said he was willing to follow their Directions in that Matter, but did not care to trust to his Memory; and therefore called for Paper, Pen, and Ink, and took down in Writing such Particulars as Mr. Colin Maclaurin dictated to him. And, when that was done, as the Deponent thinks, Mr. Mark Sandilands went along with him to find out the Provost, who was then in a Tavern; and, as the Deponent thinks, in Walker's House. That they went to another Room in the House, where the Provost came to them; and they communicated to him what was contained in their Paper. Among other Things, that the Meeting they came from thought, it was proper there should be a general Search in the Town for Arms, lest there might be some concealed for the Use of the Rebels; as also, that the Lord Provost should concert with the Lord Advocate, or any proper Person, that a Search should be made in the Places adjacent to the Town, which were not within the Royalty. That to this the Pannel answered, That Edinburgh, and the adjacent Parts, could with very great Difficulty be searched so narrowly, as that concealed Arms should be discovered; and that he did not see any good Purpose it could serve to make a Search; or Words to that Purpose. But, if they insisted upon it, Orders should be directed for such a Search. Depones, That the last of the Particulars taken down in the Paper was, a Demand that the Pannel by himself, or others of proper Authority, should procure fifty, forty, or at least thirty Sailors, out of his Majesty's Ships, who were most expert in managing of Cannon, in order to be assisting in the Defence of the City, by taking the Direction of the Artillery that were placed upon the Walls, or in the Town. Upon reading of which, the Pannel fell into some Heat of Temper, and said, 'By God, Sir, while I am Provost of Edinburgh, Sailors shall not be admitted.' And the Deponent having represented to him, That there were none in Town that knew how to manage Cannon; and that Application had been made at the Castle, but no Gunners could be spared from thence; and asked, What he would substitute in their Place? he made no Answer, but the former repeated, That, by God, while he was Provost of Edinburgh, no Sailor should be admitted. And the Deponent being greatly surpris'd, as some time before, when he the Deponent had been insisting with him that Cannon should be provided for the Defence of the Place; he objected against it, and said, He could not see they could be of any Use, as we had Nobody that knew how to manage them: The Deponent therefore, raising his Voice, demanded to know the Reason of such an extraordinary Piece of Conduct. To which the Pannel replied, with some Heat, 'My Reason, Sir, is plain. If they should be admitted here, it would be, Damn your Blood, Jack; fire away, and be damn'd; and so they would fire upon, and murder the Inhabitants: And it is my Duty to protect the Lives of the Inhabitants, as well as to defend the Town against the Rebels; or Words to that Purpose. Whereupon the Deponent left him.

IX. James Grant, Merchant, and present Town-Treasurer of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, which was the Day that immediately preceded that upon which the Rebels entered the City, the Deponent was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, where the Pannel, and a good many other People, were met together, and heard two or three of those who were present, whom the Pannel publicly desired might give their Opinion, whether it was proper to defend the Town, or not, and who declined to explain themselves upon that Matter, observe to him, that if the Town was to be delivered up, proper Measures ought to be taken for preserving the Arms from falling into the Hands of the Rebels. And being interrogate for the Pannel, whether it related to the Government's Arms, or to the Arms of the City? depones, He does not remember any Distinction was made; or further, than that the Arms in general were mentioned. And further says, That this Observation was made by Major Thomas Cochran and Captain James Murray, and, as the Deponent thinks, by Dean of Guild Harbison. And depones, That he does not remember, whether any thing was said further upon that Subject. Depones, That when several of the Persons present had declined to give their Opinion as to defending the Town, the Provost declared, That it was his Opinion it ought to be defended; and that they might hope for better Terms, in case the Town were at last to be surrendered, with Arms in their Hands. That, betwixt Three and Four in the Afternoon, while the Deponent was at this Meeting, Mr. Graft came in, sent, as the Deponent believes, from the Lord Justice-Clerk, or some other Person; and made an Offer to the Pannel of a hundred Dragoons, to assist in defending the City, if he would send an Order for their entering the same. To which the Pannel answered, He would sign no Order; but if they came in, they should be made very welcome. And depones, That he left the Meeting, and went home. And being interrogate, Why he left the Meeting, when they were deliberating concerning the Defence of the Town? saith, That he went away in the Belief that the Town was to be surrendered; induced to think so from the Dragoons marching Eastward; and that he perceived the Well-affected in the Town had a Jealousy of the Provost: And the Deponent likewise perceived, that the Removal of the Dragoons had made People's Spirits sink. Depones, That, some few Days before the Rebels entered the Town, the Pannel spoke to the Deponent in the Parliament-cloze, and told him, That, as the Volunteers had made the Proposal of bearing the Charges of repairing the City-walls, he thought it was proper the Money should be immediately advanced, because he doubted, if that was not done, it would in the end fall upon the Town. To which the Deponent answered, That it could not be expected they could advance the Money at that time. Further says, That Mr. Alexander Webster joined them at this Conversation; and the Pannel made the same Proposition to Mr. Webster that he had made to the Deponent; who made the same Return as the Deponent had done. And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether this Conversation related to the Reparation of the Walls, as to which Orders had been given by the Council to repair the same, and the Reparation was going on; or as to some additional Fortification, which had been proposed by the Volunteers? depones, That he knows Orders had been given by the Council for repairing the Walls before that Conversation happened; but that this Conversation related to the Expence of the Work: But whether it was the Expence of the Reparation of the Walls, or of some new projected Piece of Fortification, the Deponent cannot be positive.

X. Mr. Joseph Williamson, Advocate, one of the principal Clerks of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That he was present at a Meeting of several of the Burgeses of the City of Edinburgh, upon the 5th September 1745; when it was agreed, that a Petition should be presented to the Lord Provost, for Leave to such of the Citizens as should please to associate themselves as Volunteers for the Defence of the City. That accordingly such a Petition was framed; and the Deponent assisted in framing it. And the Paper marked Number 5, in the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel, being shewn to him, depones, It is the same framed as above; which was signed by all the Company present that Night. That he did not see this Application offered to the Pannel the next Day; but had Occasion to converse with him on the Subject of it in the Evening of that Day; when he told the Deponent, that he looked upon the Paper as treasonable; and asked his Opinion thereon. To which he answered, He did not think it treasonable, to take up Arms in Defence of the King and the Country, though without Warrant, there being a subsisting Rebellion in the Country. Depones, That, after the Petition was approved of, he was present at making a Draught of an Advertisement to be inserted in the News-papers; in which there were Words to this Purpose: That the Pannel heartily agreed or concurred with the Desire of the said Petition. That two of the Company, when the Draught was made, were sent to wait upon the Pannel with it. That they went; and, when they returned, reported the Draught with an Amendment made by the Pannel's Order, by dashing out the Words, heartily agree or concur; and putting in place thereof, acquiesced in: And that he heard the said Report, and saw the said Amendment. Depones, That he was present at a Meeting in the New Church Isle, upon the 9th September fore said; to which the Pannel came, and named the six Captains; and, as the Deponent remembers, expressed his Satisfaction with the Zeal of the Petitioners; but in what Terms, he does not remember: Nor did he himself observe any contrary or disrespectful Behaviour of the Pannel's on that Occasion, tho' he heard others talk differently of it. Depones, That, upon Wednesday the 11th September fore said, the Deponent went round the City-wall, from the Bristow Port to the West Port; upon which he saw but four or five Men working. That, on Friday thereafter, the 13th, he was desired by several of his Brethren Volunteers, to remonstrate to the Provost and Council, that the Reparation of the City-walls was carried on slowly; and to lay before them some Proposals that were thought necessary for that Purpose: Some of which the Council agreed to, and some were disagreed to: But that he remembers only one Article disagreed to, relating to a House at the Potter-row Port, which was proposed to be taken down, or so built up as not to infest the Walls at that Port. That the Deponent and the Pannel had some warm Words with respect to the Works going on slowly: And he proposed to the Pannel, that Bailie Hamilton should be authorised to oversee these Works; but the Pannel replied, That that Trust was already committed to Bailie Robert Baillie. Depones, That he was not present when the Proposal for putting Arms only in the Hands of such of the Trained-bands as were well-affected affected to the Government, was first made. But some time after, he heard the same Proposal renewed to the Pannel; and his Answer was, He could not think of distinguishing or discriminating one Part of the Trained-Bands from another. That upon Wednesday the 11th of September, he and, he thinks, Bailie Wilson carried a Proposal to the Pannel, to search for Arms within and in the Neighbourhood of the City; and he believed a former Message had been carried to the Pannel for that Effect. That the Pannel answered, He was willing a Search should be made in the Neighbourhood; but he could not agree to make it within the City, because it would create a great deal of Confusion, as he said. Depones, That he was not at the general Meeting held in the New-Church Isle, upon the Afternoon of the 16th of September; because, just before it, the Fire-Bell was rung, which was the Signal to the Volunteers to repair to their several Posts; and which he accordingly did: And that neither before his repairing thither, nor while he staid there, was there any Orders sent by the Pannel, to the Volunteers how to dispose of themselves, so far as he knows: And that Provost Drummond, then a Captain of one of the Companies of Volunteers, having represented to the other Officers, that no Orders had come how they were to dispose of themselves, suggested, that he thought it was proper, since they got their Arms from the Government, and it seemed were not to use them, or were not at Liberty to use them, or Words to that Purpose, that therefore it would be proper for them to return them to the Castle. Upon which they immediately marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms. And being interrogate, how long he thinks they might have been at the Alarm-post, before they marched up and delivered the Arms; and how the Volunteers came to take upon them, without Orders from the Pannel, their Colonel, or without knowing that they were to receive no Order, to deliver them up? depones, That he cannot precisely tell how long the Volunteers were upon the Alarm-post; but that he went to Captain (Provost) Macaulay's House, whose Lieutenant he was, desiring him to go to the College-Yards to their Company; that after going there, and finding the Company was gone, they returned to the Lawn-Market; but by the Way, the Deponent stepped into the Goldsmiths-Hall, where he staid hardly so much as a Quarter of an Hour: That, when he came to the Lawn-Market, the Company was there: And that there were two Chefts of Arms in the College-Yards, and the Carts, Carters and Horses, which had brought them, standing by, without so much as a Centry; which Mr. Macaulay and he insisted they should carry back again; but which the Carters refused at first to do: And an Officer, who came from the Castle, also declined to have it done; because his Orders were to leave them there: And what betwixt persuading the Officer to allow them to be carried back, and threatening the Carters to yoke their Horses to carry them, which at length was complied with, a good deal of Time was spent: And when the Arms were delivered into the Castle, it began to be duskish. And to the latter Part of the above Interrogatory, depones, That about the Time that, without Command, the Volunteers delivered up their Arms, it was whispered by severals among them, though he himself did not say so, that they were betrayed; and they would be cut in Pieces, without doing any good Service: But the publick Reason given as above was, That they had got no Orders, and had no Reason to expect any. Depones, That one Part of the Proposals made by the Deponent to the Pannel, was in relation to bringing in long Ladders in the Suburbs of the Town; to which the Pannel agreed, and said, He would issue Orders accordingly. He does not know if such Orders were given or not; but he, upon Application to the Bailie of Potter-row, and by his Warrant, seized, and brought into the Town, several long Ladders, about fourteen or sixteen, from the Potter-row, and thereabouts, upon the 16th September.

XI. Sir Robert Dickson, of Carberry, Baronet, depones, That in the Evening of Sunday the 15th September 1745, he came to the City of Edinburgh upon the Head of one hundred and fifty Volunteers from Inveresk, Musselburgh, and the Neighbourhood, according to the Report of Daniel Matthison, an old Serjeant, who had drawn them up to number them. That he acquainted the Pannel that Night about Ten o'Clock, that he had marched these Volunteers to assist in Defence of the City, under his Command, against the Rebels; and desired that the Pannel might furnish him and them with Arms for that Purpose. That the Deponent met with a so and so Reception; that is, not such as he expected: For that he did not thank him for bringing in the Men, but carried him into a Room in Mrs. Clarke's House, where there were several of his Acquaintances. That the Pannel said, It was too late to give out Arms to them that Night, but that they should have them next Morning. That the Pannel ordered a Refreshment for the Men; and they were quartered in the New-Church Isle. That no Arms were delivered to them next Morning. That the Deponent applied to the Pannel on the Monday Morning for Arms; and he answered, They should have them by Nine o'Clock: But they were not then delivered; and the Men staid in the Town till about Mid-day, Monday; and he believes went then home. But that an Hour after the Deponent had been with the Pannel that Morning, he desired Bailie Lindsay of Musselburgh to go to the Pannel, and inquire for the Arms; for he the Deponent would not go near him again. That when the Deponent talked with the Pannel that Morning, he the Pannel proposed to the Deponent, that his Men he had brought to Town should insist in the Edinburgh Regiment.

XII. Gavin Hamilton, Bookseller, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That he was desired by some of the Meeting which had formed and presented the Petition to the Pannel and Council of Edinburgh, in relation to the Association of Volunteers, to meet with them, to talk on that Subject, on the Evening of the 6th of September 1745. That the Pannel declined going, upon account of his being tired going round the Walls of the City, with this Deponent, the deceased Mr. Colin MacLaurin, and several others. And the Deponent replied, That the Gentlemen of that Meeting positively expected him there. To which the Pannel made no Reply; but he understood the Pannel went to the Meeting, though he the Deponent was not there. Depones, That after the Council of Edinburgh had ordered the City-Walls to be repaired in September 1745, this Deponent upon the 6th of September, walked round the whole of them with the Pannel. That on the 7th of September, he again went to visit the said Work; and found but nine Men working at that Work, although he expected to have seen two or three hundred; and that meeting with Deacon Mack, who had the Charge of the Workmen, he asked the Deacon, How it came there were so few People employed in the said Reparation? And he thinks the Deacon answered him, That the Pannel had told him, that unless he had a more special Warrant for his Work, he might get it for his Payment. That that very Day, this being complained of in Council, that the Work was carried on very slowly, the Deacon obtained a more special Warrant for making Reparations of the Walls, and obtained Prels-Warrants against Workmen. That the next Day, being the 8th of September, he again made the Round of the Walls, and found only fourteen Men at Work. That several Complaints were made of the Slowness of the Work to the Deponent, and several others of the Council: But the Deponent knows not whether any such Complaints were made to the Pannel. Depones, That when the Reparation of the Walls was first proposed, the Pannel objected to it, on account of the Expence, and the Lowness of the Town's Funds: But the Deponent recovered, from Bailie Hope, he thinks, the Account of the like Expence which was incurred in the Year 1715, amounting to but about two hundred Pound, or three hundred Pound. That this Objection was dropped, and the Work begun. That he knows nothing of the Proposal that was made to the Pannel, for getting Sailors expert in Gunnery to serve the City-Cannon; but some time after he heard of that Proposal, he saw upon the Council-Table a Letter lying from the Commander of the Urfula, one of his Majesty's Ships, addressed to the Pannel, acquainting him, that he had no Gunners to spare for the Service of the City: And the Deponent supposes that this was an Answer to a Letter wrote by the Pannel demanding Gunners. Depones, That he himself made a Proposal to the Pannel, for laying aside the Trained-Bands from the Service of the City, because he believed there were too many disaffected to the Government amongst them. That the Pannel rejected it; and said, he would stand for the Honour of the Trained-Bands. Depones, That some Volunteers came from the Neighbourhood of Musselburgh, Dalkeith, and other adjacent Places, on the 15th of September; and that the Deponent had Occasion to meet with Dr. Tait, just as he parted with the Pannel: That the Doctor complained, that the Pannel had used him roughly, and was in a Passion at him, for no other Reason, as he said, but for bringing in his Men. Depones, That at a Council-Meeting upon the 16th September 1745, in the Goldsmiths-Hall, he saw a Petition signed by several of the Inhabitants of Edinburgh, and particularly by some of his own Acquaintances, (whom he chided for having signed it) desiring a general Meeting to be called, to consider what was proper to be done. That he does not know how the said Petition came in; nor does he remember whether it was read or not; nor can he say, that it was presented, or put in the Hands of the Pannel, though he saw it in his Hand. And the Paper, marked Number 8. in the List subjoined to the criminal Letters, being exhibited to the Deponent, depones, It is the same which he saw on the Table, in the Goldsmiths-Hall, and in the Pannel's Hand. That the Meeting in the Goldsmiths-Hall soon broke up, and another was immediately held in the New-Church Isle; at both which the Pannel presided. That in this last Meeting, there was a great deal of Confusion; the Petition was again talked of; but he does not remember it was read: And it was under the Consideration of that Meeting, whether the Town should be defended, or delivered up to the Rebels? and the far greater Number of the Meeting were for the latter. It was also under Consideration, if some Dragoons should be brought into the Town for the Defence of the City, in consequence of Offers to that Purpose, severally made by Mr. Grosset, and Mr. Lindsay, Secretary at War; but the Cry of the Generality was, No Dragoons, No Dragoons: and he heard the Pannel repeat these Words, No Dragoons; but whether as his own Opinion, or as the Sense of the Meeting, he cannot say: But the Meeting rested in that Opinion. That in the same Meeting, the Deponent proposed, that the Arms of the City should be secured in the Castle, since the Meeting had resolved not to defend it; and the same Proposal also comprehended the King's Arms then in it: Which Proposal the Pannel repeated to the Meeting, as coming from the Deponent; and was agreed to. But afterwards it being moved, and insisted on, that if the Arms were delivered into the Castle, they could expect no Capitulation or Terms, the Resolution of delivering them into the Castle was altered. After which, such of the Members of the Council as were in the Meeting, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall; where, and in the Council-Chamber, they remained all Night. Depones, That at the Meeting in the Goldsmiths-Hall, before that in the New-Church Isle, and at the said Meeting in the New-Church Isle, there was an Offer of Dragoons made to the Pannel twice, once by Mr. Grosset, and another Time by Mr. Lindsay, Secretary at War; to one of which (he thinks it was to Mr. Lindsay, in the New-Church Isle, who pressed the Offer much upon the Pannel) he answered, If the commanding Officer would send in Dragoons, he might do it; but he, the Pannel, would give no Orders for that Purpose. The other Offer by Mr. Grosset, which he also pressed much, and which the Deponent thinks was the first, being made in the Goldsmiths-Hall, the Pannel refused to accept of. Depones, That at the Meeting in the New-Church Isle, there was a Letter from the Pretender's Son brought in, in what Manner he knows not, further than it was said to be handed in from the Door: And the first Time he saw it, was in the Hands of Deacon Orruck; who broke it open, and looked at the Subscription, and was going to read it; but a Cry being made against reading it, the Members of the Council insisted it should not be read; and the Pannel forbade it to be read. And it was not read at that Time; but it was read in the Goldsmiths-Hall, to which, as said is, the Pannel and the Council retired. That, upon reading this Letter, it was proposed what kind of Answer should be made to it: And it was moved, That the Advice of the Assessors should be taken upon it. That they were accordingly sent for; but none of them were in Town, except Mr. Patrick Haldane; who came down to them a little, but declined to give any Advice. And, in Explication of what he has already said, depones, That the Motion for sending for the Assessors, arose upon a Proposal which had been made, That the City should capitulate or surrender upon Terms; and that the Pannel having asked at several of the Council, if they would go and capitulate, which they declined to do, it was then, or about that Time, that the Motion for taking the Advice of the Assessors was made. That Mr. Haldane

Haldane was sent for, and came; and then one of these two Things was proposed to Mr. Haldane to give his Advice upon, either what was proper to be done in the present Juncture in general, or what should be done in relation to answering the said Letter, he does not remember which; to which he thinks Mr. Haldane said, These things are too difficult for me to give any Opinion of; and thereupon rose from his Seat, and walked off; but does not remember if the Letter was read or shewn to Mr. Haldane. That afterwards the Pannel changed the Terms of his Proposals; and suggested, that it might be proper to send out some of their Number, to gain Time: And a Committee of the Council of four, was appointed to go, whereof the Deponent was one; and their Instructions were, to call only for such of the Gentlemen in the Rebel Army as they were acquainted with; and to propose to them, if they would send some of their Number into the City, to tell what they proposed to have done; and to assure, upon the Part of the Pannel, such as should be sent in, that they should be allowed to return safely. That the said Deputation accordingly went out; and the Paper, marked No 2. signed and sealed by John Murray, the Pretender's Son's Secretary, now exhibit and shewn to the Deponent, was given to him, as the Answer to the first Deputation; which he refers to as Part of his Deposition. That the Deponent having given in this Paper, as the Report of the said Deputation, it was objected to it, That it could not be agreed to by the Council; and John Coultis, then one of the Councillors, and late Provost of the City, said, That it was impossible to agree to it; and that they must send back again another Deputation, to see and get better Terms. Depones, That, when he returned, he was told by some Members of the Council, That Sir John Cope, with the Fleet in which the Troops under his Command were, were arrived at Dunbar. That then it was proposed, that a fresh Deputation might be sent to obtain better Terms; which was agreed to. The Deponent was proposed to be one of the Deputies; but refused it, and very soon thereafter left the Council: But he understood, that a Deputation of four did go, and was told so by one of the Deputies; and saw the Paper marked No 3. mentioned in the List of Writings; which was the Result of that second Deputation. Depones, That of the City-arms there were between thirteen and fourteen hundred Firelocks and Bayonets; about a hundred of which Number were in bad Condition. Depones, That, after the Pannel, and the Deponent, with the other Members of Council, retired out of the New Church Isle, to Goldsmiths-Hall, or Laigh Council-House, he was deputed by the Pannel, and the other Councillors, to wait of the Lord Justice-Clerk, that he might give his Advice, either to the Council, or to as many of them as should wait upon him, what it was proper for them, at that Juncture, to do; and others at the same time were appointed to carry the same Message to the Lord Advocate and Solicitor for the Time. The Deponent went, in obedience to this Order; but, before he had gone a little Way from the Goldsmiths-Hall, he received certain Information, that the Lord Justice-Clerk had left the City; which he reported to the Pannel, and the Council, in the Goldsmiths-Hall. And depones, That the same Answer with respect to the then Lord Advocate and Solicitor, was returned in the Deponent's Hearing. That they had left the Town.

XIII. John Wilson, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon a Saturday towards the End of August, the Deponent was pressed by several of the Burghers to go to the Provost, and complain, that nothing was a-doing for the Defence of the City, notwithstanding that it was then certain that the Pretender's Son was landed in the North, and on his March Southwards. That the Deponent accordingly went the same Day; and for the above Reasons, proposed, that the Provost should forthwith call a Meeting of the old and substantial Burghesses of the Town. That the Provost at first received the Proposal with a little Laugh; but, after Reflection, agreed to it. That the Deponent proposed that the Meeting should be called that same Night; but the Pannel said, the Burghers would be gone to their Diversions, and would not be got together. To which the Deponent answered, That no Time was to be lost; and, if the Meeting was not called that Night, it should be early Monday Morning. That the Deponent, at the same time, told the Pannel, that, during the Rebellion in the Year 1715, the Town of Glasgow had raised a Regiment of 600 Men, and he was sure that the City of Edinburgh could raise 1000; but the Pannel seemed to laugh at the Proposal, believing that Money could not be got to pay them; and said to the Deponent, You remember, John, that upon a certain Occasion, we could not raise a small Sum for a particular Purpose; and how do you imagine we should be able to maintain 1000 Men? He added further, That they could not raise such a Body of Men, without being guilty of Treason, unless they had the King's Sign-manual. To which the Deponent answered, That he knew that very well; but, if that were applied for, it might be got. Depones, That the Meeting of the Inhabitants was not called till the Tuesday; and then it was held in one of the Church Isles, where two or three hundred Burghesses were present, and the same Proposal was again made of raising a Regiment of 1000 Men; and several other Proposals were made for putting the City into a Posture of Defence. That the Pannel did not seem to oppose any of these Proposals. That it was agreed by the Meeting, to apply to the Crown-Lawyers to procure his Majesty's Sign-manual for raising the Regiment; and also, to take their Opinion concerning certain Volunteers who offered their Service. Depones, That, in that Meeting, the Pannel, who presided in it, directing his Discourse to the Deponent, said, in a jocular Way, John, this is your Meeting. To which the Deponent answered, My Lord, I am not ashamed of it. Depones, That, after the said Meeting, a Petition was drawn up, to be signed by such of the Inhabitants as were so disposed; praying the Magistrates and Council's Allowance to associate themselves as Volunteers in Defence of the City; and several different Copies of the same Petition were left in the New Church Isle to be signed, from time to time, by such of the Inhabitants as inclined: And the Petition in the Clerk's Hands, now shewn to the Deponent, being the 5th in the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, is the Petition that was signed by this Deponent. That, when they had got about two hundred Subscriptions, a Committee of four or five of them were sent to the Pannel, to desire he would be pleased to name their Officers: That the Deponent and Bailie Nimmo were two of those who were sent: That they thought the Pannel was very dilatory in naming their Officers.

That the Deponent himself applied two or three different Times to him for that Purpose; and several Days intervened betwixt the first Application, and his naming any of them; and, at last, he named the Captains, and allowed them to name their Subalterns: But it was then but about ten Days before the Rebels got Possession of the Town. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That they had several Meetings in the New Church Isle with the Pannel; and he doubts not but the Pannel may have named the Captains on Saturday the 7th of September, though the Deponent cannot be certain of the Day of the Week or Month; but is sure, that a List had been given to the Pannel, out of which he might name these Captains, five or six Days before he named them. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That it was understood, that the Field-Officers were to be named, not from among the Volunteers themselves, but proper Persons to be found who were more skilled in military Affairs. Depones, That there were many Complaints, that the Reparation of the Town-Walls went on very slowly; and particularly remembers, that that Part of the Wall which seemed most dangerous, to wit, at the College Kirk, and from the New Port to Leith Wynd, was not repaired or barricaded till Monday the 16th of September, the very Day before the Rebels entered the Town: And the Deponent, on that Monday, went to the Council himself, and complained, and got proper Warrants to press Workmen; one whereof was signed by Bailie Robert Baillie, and another of the Volunteers got a Warrant, signed by Bailie Mansfield. That Bailie Robert Baillie was the Second Bailie that Year; and the Second Bailie is called The Bailie of the Publick Works; because, by his Office, he has the Over-sight of these Works; That the Deponent had several Times complained to the Pannel, and others of the Magistrates, that these Works went on very slowly: And particularly remembers, that he once complained to the Pannel himself on that Account; and the Pannel answered, That he had given Orders to Bailie Baillie about the Works, and Power to press Workmen. But depones, That, about that Time, the Election of the Deacons was going on, which happened upon a Saturday; and then the Work went much slower on than at other times; and the Trades-people were so taken up about their Elections, that the Deponent believes it was hardly in the Power of the Pannel or Magistrates to get the Tradesmen to work. And being further interrogate for the Pannel, Whether that Part of the Wall above deponed upon, at the College Kirk, and from the New Port to Leith Wynd, was not so far repaired before the 16th of September, that the Breaches were made up, and the Parapet built, so that nothing was wanting, but the barricading the Ports? depones, That it was another Person, and not the Deponent, who was employed to see that Part of the Repairs made on the 16th; and therefore the Deponent cannot with Certainty answer the Question: But knows, that these Ports had not been barricaded as some of the other Ports of the Town had been (which was all the Deponent meant in the former Part of his Oath on this Article); and knows that a great many Hands were got, and a great deal of Work done that Day; and the Tradesmen themselves said, That they had done more that Day than for some Days before. Depones, That the Deponent was present at a Meeting that several of the Burghers in Town had with the Pannel in the House of Mr. Wilson, Taverner in Edinburgh; and which Meeting was held in consequence of a Request made by some of these Burghers, that the Pannel should meet with them: And there were present at the Meeting a good Number, the Deponent cannot be positive how many; but there were, he thinks, twenty, or thirty, or forty of them: And that Meeting desired of the Pannel, that he would discriminate the Trained-Bands one from another, and put Arms only in the Hands of such as were known, by the old Burghers, to be well-affected to the Government: But the Pannel said, That that was too delicate a Point for him to meddle with. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, He knows nothing of that Proposal's being made to the Council. Depones, That he knows there came in several Volunteers from Musselburgh and Inveresk, along with Sir Robert Dickson; and another Body of Volunteers from Dalkeith, under the Command of Mr. Lewis Douglas Advocate, and Dr. Tait. That the Deponent knows nothing of their Reception by the Pannel, further than that the Body that came from Dalkeith, on Saturday the 14th, were lodged in the High School, and ordered to keep Guard at the High School Yards; but were not joined to any other Body of Troops till Monday at Two o'clock Afternoon, that the Deponent went to the Pannel's House, and proposed that they should be joined to some other Company: And the Pannel desired him to join them to any Corps that he thought proper; and the Deponent accordingly joined them to that Company of Volunteers where he himself served, and which was commanded by Sir George Preston. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, as the Deponent was keeping Guard at the Netherbow Port, he was informed, that there was to be a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle; and it was reported that the Town was to be delivered up: Upon which the Deponent asked Leave of his Captain, Sir George Preston, to go to see what was doing. That the Deponent came, and found the Pannel, and most of the Magistrates, with several of the Inhabitants, in Goldsmiths-Hall. That the Deponent said to the Pannel, What, are you a-going to give up the Town, when we have thirteen hundred Men in Arms, that are ready and willing to defend it to the utmost? To which it was answered, either by Mr. Lauder the Surgeon, or by Mr. Orrock, Your Champion Mr. Williamson has given up the Defence of the Town; and do you pretend to hold it out? The Deponent replied, That he would not believe that, unless he had it from Mr. Williamson's own Mouth; for none but a Coward, or a Jacobite, would give it up. Upon which Mr. Williamson appeared; and said, He was willing to hold it out to the utmost, if his Men would stand by him; but that he had not above ten or twelve Men that appeared where they should have been. And the Deponent says, Mr. Williamson was Lieutenant to a Company of Edinburgh Volunteers. That he knows not what the Number of that Company was; but that he believes it was fifty, sixty, or seventy Men. That the Deponent then asked the Pannel, What he was resolved to do? And he said, That he would take the Advice of his Brother-Burghesses. That, about this Time, Mr. Grosf came into the Meeting with a Message from some of the Crown-Lawyers, offering the Dragoons for the Defence of the City, if the Provost would order them: And the Pannel answered,

That he would give no Orders; but that, if they were sent in, he would receive them. Depones, That Mr. Laurence Dundas, being in the Meeting, insisted, that the Pannel, as Provost, should give the Orders for bringing them in: That the Pannel repeated his former Answer; and Mr. Dundas, or some one of the Meeting, said, That, if he refused, he behoved to answer for it, if the Town was given up. Depones, That the Deponent was ordered by the Pannel to his Post at the Netherbow; and that Instant, or in a very little Time, the Fire-bell rung; so that the Deponent was not present at the Meeting in the New Church Isle. Depones, That, upon the Deponent's Return to the Netherbow, he acquainted Sir George Preston of what had passed; who thereupon immediately left him, to go to the Meeting; and did not return for Half an Hour, or an Hour; during which Time the Deponent knew nothing of what was doing. That, upon Sir George's Return, he ordered the Deponent, and the rest of the Company, and another Company also upon Guard there, to march to the Alarm-post, which was in the Lawn-market. That, when they came to the Cross, they got Notice, that the other Companies of Volunteers had gone to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms; and, when they came to the Alarm-post, finding none of the Volunteers there, they also marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms; and thinks it was then about Sun-setting. Depones, That the thirteen hundred armed Men that he mentioned to the Provost, as above deponed, were composed of the City-Guard, the Edinburgh Regiment, the Edinburgh Volunteers, the Seceders, the Inveresk, Musselburgh, and Dalkeith Volunteers. That the Deponent cannot, from his Memory, now specify the particular Number of each Corps: But he is sure, that, at that Time, he did count them, and they did amount to the foresaid Number; and were all well armed with Guns, Swords, and Bayonets. Depones, That, by counting, the Deponent means no more than adding the Numbers of the several Corps as reported by their Officers.

XIV. Walter Grosset, late Collector of the Customs at Alloa, now one of the General Inspectors of the Customs of Scotland, depones, That, upon Monday Afternoon the 16th of September 1745, as the Deponent was coming to Town in Company with Lord Justice-Clerk, they met several People coming full Speed out of Town; who informed them, that the Rebels were by that Time at the West Port. That thereupon Lord Justice-Clerk sent the Deponent with a Message to the Pannel, then Lord Provost of the City, while at the same Time the Lord Justice-Clerk himself rode to meet the Dragoons, who were then a Mile North-east of the City of Edinburgh: That the Message to the Pannel was, to know whether he was resolved to defend the City of Edinburgh; to press his defending it; and to assure him, if he was to defend it, he should have a hundred Dragoons, or as many as he pleased to desire; and to get the Pannel's Answer. That the Deponent, in his Way to the Town, met the then Lord Advocate, to whom he reported the Message he was sent with; who approved of it, and pressed him to haste to deliver it. That the Deponent found the Pannel in the Goldsmiths-Hall, with severals of the Magistrates and Council, and other Persons, it being then betwixt Three and Four Afternoon; and the Deponent delivered his Message to the Pannel in the above Terms, as from both the Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Advocate. That the Pannel shifted to give a direct Answer to the Message: And, being pressed to it by severals of the Meeting, he at last made a Speech; in which he said, He would do nothing unworthy of the Station which he was in: He urged the Uncertainty of Sir John Cope's coming to their Relief, and the Danger of the Lives and Properties of the Inhabitants; and concluded, That he was against defending the Town; but said he would be advised by his Council. And being interrogate for the Pannel, What were the Expressions that imported his being against the Defence of the Town? depones, That he cannot remember the particular Words; but the whole Purport of his Speech tended that Way. Depones, That, as there were several Altercations betwixt the Deponent, as well as other Persons present, and the Pannel, the Deponent desired an Answer in Writing: Which the Pannel declined to give, saying, That the Deponent was very capable to return a verbal Answer. That the Deponent still insisted for an Answer in Writing; and the Pannel repeated the same Answer. Then the Deponent said, He could make nothing else of the Pannel's Answer, but that he refused to defend the Town, and admit the Dragoons. And, upon that, the Pannel agreed to give him a written Answer; and believes might have said, That the Deponent mistook him. That the Pannel accordingly gave the Deponent an Answer in Writing, directed to the Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk. And being shewn the Letter in the Clerk's Hands, produced in this Trial by Mr. Craigie, a preceding Witness, depones, That that Letter is the Answer he then got from the Pannel. Depones, That, upon receiving that open Letter, and reading it, he said to the Pannel, That he had already assured him from Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk, that it was their Opinion that he should defend the Town; and that he should have a hundred, or as many Dragoons as he should desire, to assist in the Defence of it; and that he must answer for the Consequence of that unnecessary Delay. Upon which the Pannel left the Meeting, and the Deponent came off with the written Answer. Depones, That, at the above Meeting, in answer to what the Pannel had said of the Uncertainty of Sir John Cope's coming in Time, the Deponent said, That as they had certain Advice, that Sir John Cope and the Troops were at Aberdeen, and were to embark for Leith, they had Reason every Hour to look for their Landing. Depones, That, at the same Meeting, some of the Company, and, the Deponent thinks, Capt. James Murray, said, That, if the Town was not to be defended, it was necessary that Care should be taken of the Arms in it, so as they should not fall into the Hands of the Rebels: And, as the Deponent understood it, that Speech was directed to the Pannel, as was every thing else spoke out in that Meeting, in which he presided; but the Pannel made no Answer to it. Depones, That the Deponent returned from that Meeting to the Lord Justice-Clerk's at Brunstaine, and shewed him the aforesaid written Answer. That the Lord Justice-Clerk sent him immediately with it to the Lord Advocate, and Brigadier Fowkes, then at Musselburgh. That the Deponent delivered the said written Answer to Lord Advocate. That by that Time Lord Advocate had got Advice by two Letters from Dunbar, of the Arrival of Sir John Cope with the Transports, and Troops under his Command, off that Place; and Lord Advoca-cate insisted, that the Deponent should immediately return to Edinburgh, and shew the Pannel those Advices he had got; and at the same time wrote a Letter, certifying, that these Letters carried by the Deponent were the original Letters carrying the Account of Sir John Cope's Arrival. That the Deponent forthwith set out from Musselburgh, it beginning then to grow dark, and came with all the Speed he could make to Edinburgh, and found the Pannel, with his Council, in the Council-chamber, and put into his Hands the Lord Advocate's Letter, with the foresaid Letters of Advice. That the Pannel, upon reading them, said, They were come too late; for they had agreed to capitulate, and had sent some of their Number to treat about the Terms; and at the same time reached to the Deponent a Letter, which, upon opening it, the Deponent found to be signed, Charles, P. R. and is the same Letter mentioned in the first Article of the List of Writings subjoined to the criminal Letters; the same being now shewn to the Deponent. Depones, That the Deponent then proposed, that as probably the People sent out to the Rebel-Camp could not by that Time be got the Length of the Camp, a Messenger should be immediately sent to bring them back; which the Pannel agreed to; and it was done accordingly. That, about that Time, Provost Drummond came into the Council-house, and he and Provost Macaulay insisted, that they should then resume the Defence of the Town; that for that End, the Fire-bell should be rung, That being the Signal for convening the Inhabitants, or bringing them to their Posts. That the Pannel answered, That they must be tender of the Blood of their Fellow-Burghers: That, should they ring the Alarm-bell, the Rebels might hear it; and should those of their Number, who were sent out to treat with them, be arrived at the Camp, they might hang them, or use them ill; or Words to that Purpose. That some others in the Meeting said the same thing; particularly Dean of Guild Hatburn, as the Deponent thinks, but cannot be positive. Depones, That some of the Company, the Deponent thinks Provost Drummond, answered, That the City ought not to lay down their Arms till the Treaty was concluded; and the preparing for their Defence, was the best Way for obtaining good Terms: And, at the same time, proposed, that, if they did not incline to ring the Fire-bell, a Bank might be sent through the Town (by which the Deponent understood beating a Drum), or any other Method for bringing the Inhabitants together. To which the Pannel answered, That that was a Matter of too great Importance for him to take upon him by himself, for he would be determined by his Council. That Provost Drummond said to the Pannel, That he was the Person that must give the Orders, and must answer for them; and the Council had nothing to do in it. Depones, That the Council, at least severals of them whom he knew, were present in the Meeting, but none of them spoke. That then the Pannel was going to leave the Chair; but some of the Council insisted that he should keep it; which he did accordingly. Depones, That thereafter the Pannel, and some others of the Council, particularly, as the Deponent remembers, Mark Sandilands, urged, that the Town was not defensible. To which the Deponent answered, That he well knew the Situation of the Town, and likewise knew the Condition of those who were to come against it, who had no Cannon, and were very ill armed; and that he would undertake to be one of fifty to defend the weakest Part of the Town: And some of the Council joined the Deponent, particularly one Mr. Currie, who offered to make one of the fifty, and to find the rest of them within the Town. That thereupon the Pannel seemed to come to a Resolution to defend the Town, provided General Guesl would give them what Arms were necessary. That the Deponent offered to go to General Guesl; and that the Pannel might be satisfied, that he did not mistake or misrepresent his Message, desired that one of the Council, who the Pannel could confide in, might be sent alongst with him; and accordingly Provost Coutts was sent. That, upon delivering the Message to General Guesl, he expressed his Satisfaction with the Resolution of defending the Town; assured them they should want no Assistance that was in his Power to give them; and that how soon they should distribute the Arms properly belonging to the City, they should have what more Arms they had Use for: That he had already given Orders to spike up the Cannon on the City-walls, and beat off the Trunnions; but that now he would countermand these Orders. And being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That no Part of the Message, sent by the Pannel to General Guesl by his Hands, was touching the Dragoons; neither did the Deponent make any Proposition to the General relating to them. Depones, That, upon Provost Coutts and the Deponent's Return from the Castle to the Council-chamber, the Pannel told the Deponent, That, as the Messenger they had sent after their Deputies had not overtaken them, the Council were come to a Resolution not to defend the Town: And the Council, at least severals of them known to the Deponent, were present at the Time. Depones, That thereupon it was proposed, and, as the Deponent thinks, by Provost Drummond, That, if the Town was not to be defended, Care at least should be taken to secure the Arms, that they should not fall into the Rebels Hands. Upon which the Pannel reached to Provost Drummond the before-mentioned Letter, signed Charles, P. R.; by which, he said, Mr. Drummond would see, that if the Arms were put out of the Way, the Hghlanders would plunder the Town. To which Provost Drummond answered, That if the Town should furnish the Rebels with Arms to fight against the King's Troops, had they not Reason to expect, that when the Town should be retaken by the King's Troops, they would look upon the Town as Enemies, and use them as such? That thereupon the Deponent insisted to have the Pannel's Answer in Writing to the Message he had brought him from Lord Advocate. To which the Pannel answered, That he had already put too much in Writing that Day, and he would write no more upon the Subject. And thereupon Provost Drummond and the Deponent came away. And being interrogate, Whether at this Time, when he left the Pannel in Council, he did not say, he was going to bring in the Dragoons? depones, That he was so far from saying so, or intending it, that had he met the Dragoons coming in, he would have turned them back, in respect of what had passed in his last Conversation with the Pannel.

XV. Mr. Lewis Douglas, Advocate, depones, That betwixt Two and Three o'Clock Afternoon of Sunday the 15th September 1745, the Deponent, and one Mr. Tait, a Physician in Dalkeith, came with 47 Men, being, as the Deponent thinks, all Inhabitants of Dalkeith, to offer their Service to Provost Stewart, to assist in the Defence of the City of Edinburgh, against the Rebels. That, in their Way to Edinburgh, Mr. Tait left the Deponent with the Men, in order to find out the Pannel, to get Arms for them. But about Six o'Clock Mr. Tait returned to the Deponent, and told him, that the Pannel said he had no Arms to give them; and that upon this Mr. Tait had applied to the then Lord Advocate; who told him, that it would be necessary for him to draw a Petition, addressed to him the Lord Advocate: Which Mr. Tait accordingly did; and the Lord Advocate subjoined a Recommendation on the Foot of the Petition, directed to General Gust. Which Petition and Recommendation being presented by Mr. Tait to General Gust, General Gust granted a Warrant upon Mr. Lyon Storemaster, to deliver to the Deponent, and the Men that came along with him, fifty Stand of Arms, a Barrel of Ball, and a Barrel of Powder: And that about Six or Seven o'Clock they were accordingly received. Depones, That Mr. Tait informed the Deponent, that when he Mr. Tait conversed at first with the Pannel, and was told, as above, by the Pannel, that he had no Arms to give the Men who were coming from Dalkeith; Mr. Tait, upon that, asking, If the Men might notwithstanding come into the Town of Edinburgh? the Pannel said, They should be very welcome. That, upon their Return from the Castle, the Deponent, with the Men that came along with him, went to the Parliament-Close, where they remained until that Mr. Tait, who had gone in Search of the Pannel, should receive Orders from him, both as to their Quarters, and the Place of the Town which they were to defend. That it was some time before Mr. Tait returned; and when he returned, he told the Deponent, that the Pannel declined for some time to give any Orders; but at last, by the Intercession of Provost Drummond, the Quarters which were allotted for them was the High-School; and the Place of the Town they were to defend, was from the Cowgate Port to the Back of the Infirmary. That they remained there, and kept Guard all Night: But in the High-School, where their Quarters were allotted them, they had neither Meat, Coal, or Candle. Depones, That betwixt One and Two o'Clock, as the Deponent thinks, the Pannel made his grand Round: And that then the Deponent, with his Men, turned out their whole Guard to him. That he is positive the Pannel did not speak to him; and, so far as he remembers, he did not speak to any of the Men: And that Mr. Tait, with a Party of sixteen Men, escorted him from their Guard to the next Guard. Depones, That a Message coming to Mr. Tait about Twelve o'Clock on Monday the 16th of September, giving an Account that his Wife was dangerously ill, and who accordingly died that Day, Mr. Tait was obliged to leave the Town, and the Command of the Men wholly upon the Deponent: And the Deponent having gone to wait of the Pannel, to acquaint him of what had happened to Mr. Tait, and to desire that the Pannel might appoint some proper Person to command the Men who came along with the Deponent in Conjunction with himself; the Pannel made Answer, That your Men were in so good Order last Night, that I do not think you stand in Need of any Assistance; but if you know of any proper Person, you may name him, and I will appoint him. Upon this Bailie Wilson came in, and told he was very glad to see the Deponent with the Pannel; for it was upon the same Errand he was come to speak to him, to know how these Men were to be quartered. The Provost's Answer was, That he had so many Things in his Head, and was so much hurried, that he desired the Bailie might give Orders thereanent himself. Depones, That betwixt Ten and Eleven of the Sunday Night, Bailie Wilson's Wife sent to the Deponent and Mr. Tait, desiring that they might come and eat something with her. They accordingly went; and, when in her House, she said she was sorry they had been so little taken Notice of. That the Deponent and Mr. Tait were a good deal surprised, that none of the Magistracy, or those who had the Direction of the Affairs of the Town of Edinburgh, came near them; considering the Place which they were sent to guard, and which, in the Deponent's Apprehension, was of very great Importance to the Town of Edinburgh. This made the Deponent believe, and say to Mr. Tait, That the Defence of the Town was altogether a Joke; and that he would return next Morning back to Dalkeith. Mr. Tait, in Answer to this, said, That he was wrong in thinking in that Manner; for such a Piece of Conduct would appear foolish, if they should come the one Day and return the other: And, besides, if they acted a Part becoming themselves, they were not answerable for the Conduct of others. And being interrogate for the Pannel, How they were provided in Meat, Drink, Coal, and Candle, the Time they remained in the Town of Edinburgh, and when it was they left it? depones, The whole Time they remained in Edinburgh they were obliged to provide for themselves. And, upon hearing the Fire-bell ring upon Monday Afternoon, he immediately sent up to know what was the Matter; and the Person he sent, meeting with James Carmichael, Writer to the Signet, Mr. Carmichael sent the Deponent Word, that it was his Business to march up his Men forthwith to the Lawn-market. And the Deponent upon this imagined, they were immediately going out to fight the Rebels; and therefore marched up his Men, without Loss of Time, to the Lawn-market. And when he came there, he found the Volunteers all coming down from the Castle, after having delivered up their Arms. Upon which the Deponent marched up his Men to the Castle, and delivered in his Arms also. And, upon this, the Men got Ladders, scaled the Walls, and went to Dalkeith that Night; but he himself staid in the Town all that Night.

XVI. Mr. John Tait, Doctor of Medicine in Dalkeith, depones conform to the preceding Witness, in so far as concerns the Facts which happened while the Deponent was in the Town of Edinburgh; with this Variation, That he does not remember that he used the Word declined to Mr. Douglas, when he was giving him an Account of the Orders he then received from the Pannel with respect to the Men's Quarters who came along with him, and the Place of the Town they were to guard; but he told Mr. Douglas, that the Pannel delayed giving Orders for some time. Neither does he remember, that he used that Expression to Mr. Douglas, That it was by the Intercession of Provost Drummond that the Orders were then procured; but told him these Orders were wrote by Provost Drummond, and signed by the Pannel. Nor does the Deponent remember the Expression which Mrs. Wilson had to Mr. Douglas and the Deponent upon their not being so much taken Notice of as they ought to be; but remembers there was then some such Expression by some of the Company.

XVII. Archibald Macaulay, Esq; late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, depones, That he resided in the Town of Edinburgh in the Months of August and September 1745, when Accounts were brought that the Pretender's Son was landed in the Western Islands, and that he was marching with a Body of Rebels Southward. That the Deponent, being in the Town of Edinburgh in the Year 1715, observed then a Zeal and Warmness in the Inhabitants, which proceeded from that Disposition appearing first in the Magistracy, and which soon spread itself among the other Ranks of People. That the Method taken at that Time for the Defence of the City, was by Parish-guards, there being four hundred Volunteers, who had associated themselves together besides, and who were very well disciplined before the Rebels came then near to the Town. That the Trained-Bands were laid aside, as being a promiscuous Set of People, whereof many were disaffected; and the Care of the Town was given, in place of them, to the Parish and City-Guards, in whose Hands Arms were put, as being known to be People well-affected to the Government. That, upon the late Rebellion, the Deponent did not observe in the Town of Edinburgh, such a Keenness and Zeal for the Support of his Majesty's Government; and at this Time nothing but Coldnesses (i. e. Lukewarmness). But hearing that the Rebels intended to come to the Town of Edinburgh, although at first it was reported they intended to pass another Way, the Deponent met with some other well-affected People of the Town, and expressing his Concern for the Welfare of it, they proposed the raising of a Regiment of 1000 Men, and to get some People to associate themselves into Companies of Volunteers, as was done in the Year 1715. The Pannel about this Time did call a Meeting of the principal Inhabitants of the Town of Edinburgh, to consult what was proper to be done then: And at that Meeting it was agreed, That a Committee of the Town-Council, in Conjunction with some other of the Citizens, should wait upon the Lord Advocate, Justice-Clerk, and other People about the Town of Distinction, and consult with them, both as to the Legality and Expediency of raising the Regiment of one thousand Men, and associating some Companies of Volunteers. That, in this Meeting, there were several Difficulties started, and even among the Lawyers; but they all agreed in this, that they could not set about the levying of the Regiment of one thousand Men, without procuring first from the Regent's a Warrant for that Effect. Upon this severals of the Meeting pressed, that an Express should be immediately dispatched, in order to procure it: But the then Lord Advocate suggested, they would appear ridiculous, if they should obtain any such Licence, when, at the same time, they were not ascertained of the Money that was sufficient to pay the Regiment. Upon this it was proposed at that Meeting, that the Provost should make a Trial how the Money should be raised: And the Provost suggested, that the proper Method for doing this would be, by recommending it to the Ministers and Kirk-Sessions. Against which Proposal no Objection then was made. That the Meeting upon this broke up. And the Magistrates and Council accordingly recommended it to the Ministers and Kirk Sessions to make a Trial how the Money could be raised: But the Ministers, upon receiving the Warrants for so doing, objected to the Warrants, as not being properly signed by the Town-Clerks. But the Deponent, and some others of the Inhabitants, hearing that the Ministers made this Scruple, met together, and called for their Stent-Books, and made out a List of such People as they thought would willingly contribute for the Support and Maintenance of the Regiment: And, upon considering the said List, they were of Opinion, there would be no Difficulty of raising a Sum sufficient for that Purpose. That next Day the Deponent coming to the Street, he met with the Pannel, who, it would appear, had by that time got Notice that the Deponent, and some others, had been making out the above List; and told the Deponent, That he found some People were taking a good deal upon them; that, as he was Provost of Edinburgh, he would maintain it; and although he had a great Regard for the Constitution of his Country, he had also a Regard for the Honour of the Magistrates, and Liberties of the Town of Edinburgh; and that Nobody should wrest the Dignity of Provost out of his Hands. And this he seemed to say in a Passion. To this the Deponent made Answer, That there were three of his own Magistrates in Company; and they only proposed to do that in a more expeditious Manner, which he himself wanted to have done. That the Forenoon of that Day, as the Deponent thinks, he met Mr. William Alexander Merchant; and talking of the Payment of the Regiment of the thousand Men, how it was to be ascertained, Mr. Alexander said, 'Why should there be any Occasion of Delay on that Account? I am willing to give my Bond for three thousand Pounds, if any body will join with me;' and the Deponent made Answer, That he was not a very rich Man, but he would join with him. Upon this they both agreed to go up to the then Lord Advocate, and tell him so much; which, after they had done, the Advocate told them, That he could only transact with the Magistrates; but he was very glad to hear of their Proposal, and he would immediately write about it: As he was then just sending off an Express, and had wrote his Letter, he then added a Postscript to it; which in Substance was, telling the Offer that had been made by two Citizens of the Town, which he thought were good for Three thousand Pounds, and desired therefore, that the Warrant or Order for levying the Regiment might be forthwith sent down. Depones, That two or three Days before the Rebels came to the Town of Edinburgh, the Deponent remembers to have heard some Proposals made to the Pannel, for searching the Inhabitants Houses for Arms: And upon these Occasions he heard the Provost always say, That there ought to be no Distinction made, but all Houses searched without respect of Persons; but the Deponent does not remember to have heard of such an Order granted. Depones, That he happened to be with some others, in Mrs. Clarke's House, where the Provost and Mr. Maclaurin were present; and it was then proposed, that the City-walls should be put in some tolerable Posture of Defence: And Mr. Maclaurin, at that Meeting, produced a Scheme of what was necessary for that Purpose. To which the Pannel agreed; but made some Difficulty with regard to the Expences that were necessary for doing such a Work. The Deponent thinks, that the Provost might in this have acted a prudent Part for the Town of Edinburgh; but the Deponent thought this ought at that Time to have occasioned no Delay; and Mr. Maclaurin said to too. Depones, That he heard the Reverend Mr. Alexander Webster once and again make a Proposal to the Pannel in the Council-House, where there were a good many of the Council present, and a great many other Inhabitants, of raising, upon his own Credit, five hundred Guineas, to be distributed to five hundred of the ablest-bodied Journeymen of the several incorporated Trades in the Town; who, as they were very bold and hardy in the extinguishing of Fire, he believed would willingly undertake to mount the City-walls, and assist in the Defence of them, in case they should be attacked by the Rebels, and judged them much more proper for that Purpose than the Volunteers were. That the Answer which the Deponent heard the Lord Provost make was, That, if Mr. Webster would undertake to raise the Money, he would be Caution that Mr. Webster would perform it. Depones, That he was present, both when Mr. Lindsay Deputy Secretary at War, and Mr. Groset Collector of the Customs at Allea, made a Proposal to the Pannel, for bringing into the Town a hundred Dragoons for the Town's Defence; and Mr. Groset added, if he desired, even the whole two Regiments, provided that the Provost would desire it in Writing. The Pannel's Answer was to both these Gentlemen, That if the Dragoons would come into the Town, they should be welcome; but he would sign no such Desire. Depones, That he was present in the Council-House on Monday Evening the 16th of September; when he heard it proposed, that there was a Necessity for securing the Town's Arms, Ammunition, and Cannon on the Walls, from falling into the Hands of the Rebels: But as there was very great Confusion that Night, the Deponent does not remember any more of the Matter. Depones, That the Number of his Company, to the best of his Knowledge, consisted of Sixty or Seventy; and that Mr. Joseph Williamson was his Lieutenant.

XVIII. James Nimmo, Esq. late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th September 1745, as the Deponent was upon Guard at the Netberbow Port, with Sir George Preston of Valleyfield, he received a Message from the Pannel, he thinks between Four and Five at Night, to come and speak with him, and some of the Town-Council, then in the Goldsmiths-Hall. That, when he came there, in obedience to the said Message, he understood, the Pannel, his Council, and some of the Inhabitants, were engaged in an Argument, what Answer should be returned to a Letter which the Pannel had received from the Lord Justice-Clerk, or the then Lord Advocate; by which Message an Offer of a hundred Dragoons was made to the Pannel, or more if he pleased, to assist in the Defence of the City. That, after some time spent in this Debate, the Pannel observed, that a Thorn had been put in his Foot; for that if he should accept of that Offer, and the Town should be taken, he might be charged with having ensnared so many of his Majesty's Troops; and, on the other hand, if he should refuse to accept of the Offer, he might be blamed, if the Town was taken, for having lost it by not receiving that Succour. That, in Answer to this, the Deponent observed, that it was an easy Matter for the Pannel to put the Thorn in their Foot, by making an Answer to this Offer, That if the Lord Justice-Clerk or Lord Advocate should think it fit, and for the Service of the Government, to send a hundred Dragoons, or the whole of them for the Purpose aforesaid, the Pannel should be ready to receive them; which Expedient the Pannel, and several of the Gentlemen then present, seemed to approve of; and the Pannel set about writing an Answer, as the Deponent imagined, to that Purpose: But, when he heard the Answer read, he did think it did not fully come up to his Proposal. Upon which he left the Meeting, and repaired to his Post; and, about Five o'Clock, the Alarm-bell rung, the Signal for calling the Volunteers to repair to the Lawn-market: But, before the Deponent left his Post, he sent several Messages to the Pannel, to receive Orders what to do; and to the third Message, he thinks, for the first Time, received an Answer, to repair to the Alarm-post; which accordingly he did: and that he was not present at the Meeting in the New Church Isle, held much about this Time, judging it more his Duty to remain at his Post; besides, he saw a great many People crowding into that Meeting, whom the Deponent did not look upon as proper Persons to consult with in a Juncture of that sort, when the Rebels were reported to be at the Distance of only about two Miles from the City.

XIX. Mr. Alexander Webster, one of the Ministers of Edinburgh, depones, That the Week before the Rebels got Possession of the City of Edinburgh, he was present at a Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's with the Pannel, some Officers of the Army, and well-affected Inhabitants of the City. That in it the Deponent observed, that the Reparation of the City-walls was carried on by much too slowly; and that the Tradesmen should be called to give a Reason why they were so slow in executing the respective Parts of the Works to them assigned. That the Pannel observed, That, being about the Election-time, and pretty late, it was very probable the Tradesmen might have got a Cup too much for Business that Night; and it would be better to defer that Inquiry till next Morning: And, at the same time, observed, That the Care of these Works had been appointed to a particular Committee named by the Council for that Effect. At the same time some of the said Officers who were present complained, that what they called the Bastions of the Town-wall were too weak; that is, the Scaffolding upon which the Cannon was placed, was not strong enough; the Parapet round the Wall, in some Places, was too narrow; so that one Man could not pass another; nor were the Parapets sufficiently cleared. That the Deponent knows there was a Plan made by the deceased Mr. Colin Maclaurin of the City-walls, and Bastions, and other Works necessary to be made for the Defence of the City; which was agreed to by the Council, as the Deponent was informed, and a Committee named for bringing it to Execution. That the Deponent observed, upon the 9th of September, as he thinks, that a Ditch near Wallace's Tower, which had been projected by Mr. Maclaurin to be made on the North-side of a Wall there, was erroneously made on the South-side of the Wall; whereby it became rather a Security for, than a Defence against the Rebels; and which Mistake, so far as the Deponent remembers, was never corrected, but rather carried on, as the Deponent observed, upon visiting the same upon Wednesday the 11th of September: But, as he did not mention this as any Article of Complaint in the fore said Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's, he does not know, that any Part of this Mistake could be charged against the Pannel. Depones, That, at the Meeting in Mrs. Clarke's above mentioned, the Deponent remembers, that Bailie Robert Baillie came into the Room: Upon which the Deponent renewed this Complaint against the Workmen for carrying on the Works so slowly; which he did, because he was informed, that Bailie Baillie was the chief of the Committee above mentioned. Upon which the Bailie sent for one of the Tradesmen, who made the following Excuses: That they had made the Bastions as sufficient as the Timber they could find for that Purpose would admit of; and that they had carried on the Work as fast as they could find Hands to do it. Depones, That some time of the said Week, he casually met with the Pannel in the Parliament-Close, and again renewed his Complaint to him about the Slowness of carrying on the said Works; which appeared to him should have been carried on without Loss of Time: And the Pannel mentioned something about the Expence of the Work, and proposed, that the Volunteers would advance the Expence thereof according to their Engagement. To which the Deponent replied, That he did not doubt but the Volunteers would fulfil their Engagements, though he suspected it might be a Difficulty for them at present to advance the Money. Depones, That he was present at a Meeting in Mr. Wilson's House, when a Petition, signed by a considerable Number of the well-affected Inhabitants of the City, was presented to the Pannel, for associating themselves as Volunteers; which the Pannel objected to as High Treason; but added, that he should consult the Crown-Lawyers about it: And that he expressed his Dissatisfaction at the Manner of promoting that Petition, and in attaining so many Subscriptions, without previously consulting with him. Depones, That it was observed, that those Parts of the Walls near Potter-row Port, and St. Mary and Leith Wynds, were commanded by the adjacent Houses; and it was thought, that it was proper to build up the Doors and Windows of the said Houses, to make the Defence of those Parts of the Walls practicable; or to possess those Houses with Parties of the Volunteers. It was also proposed, to possess the Houses at the Potter-row Port with a Party, and to make a Communication by a Bridge, by which they could retire to the Walls in case of being dislodged. But nothing of this kind was executed; nor did the Deponent make the Non-execution of this any Part of his Complaint. Depones, That, some time in the Week before the Rebels entered Edinburgh, the Deponent had Occasion to meet with the Pannel, and others, in the Exchequer-Chamber, and in Mrs. Clarke's; when he proposed to the Pannel to find Security, or, if it was thought necessary, even to advance 4 or 500 Guineas, to be distributed among the able-bodied Journeymen of the Brewers, Bakers, and other Tradesmen of the City, to encourage them to join with the Volunteers in defence of the City that Night in which it should happen to be attacked by the Rebels; which Proposal the Pannel seemed to approve of; and said, That the Deponent needed no Security for his Advance, for he the Pannel would become Caution for the Deponent's paying it. That the Deponent then proposed, that the Masters of those Journeymen, and others, should be sent for, to concert a Plan for the Execution of that Proposal: But the Pannel alledged, that it was too late for that then; and that some of them would readily be about their Bottle; but next Day he would do it. That, on Sunday the 15th, the Deponent asked the Pannel, If he had met with the Masters of the said Journeymen? &c. He answered, That, in the Multiplicity of Affairs, it had escaped his Memory, but that he would do it; but does not know if it was done or not. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of the 16th of September, he heard, that there was to be a Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle, or that such a Meeting was then met; and just about this Time the Alarm bell rung, which was the Signal for the Volunteers to repair to their respective Posts. That the Deponent, being one of them, went to the Post assigned to the Company in which he served; so that he can give little Account of what past at that Meeting; But having stepped in to see what was going on, he thought it a very tumultuous Assembly. That the Deponent observed, very few of the well-affected Inhabitants that he knew were in it: That there were several of the Meeting, who, in his Opinion, were not well-affected to the Government; and that the Generality consisted of People, who, to the best of his Remembrance, he had never before seen. That the few who spoke for defending the City, were treated with very scurrilous and opprobrious Language; particularly the Reverend Mr. George Logan, who was speaking to that Purpose, seemed to him to have been pulled down from the Form on which he was standing, by Force. Upon which the Deponent left the Meeting, and repaired to his Post. Depones, That on Monday the 16th he went round the Walls of the City upon which the Cannon was planted; and observed there were two of them, one at the Bristow Port, and another at the South-East Corner of the Wall near Bedlam, upon which no Centinels were then attending; and it was observed, these Cannon could not be fired, without drawing the Shot; because they might be unloaded, or the Shot altered during the Time the Centinels were absent: But that, after the Deponent staid a considerable Time at the Cannon on the South-East Corner, as above, a Centinel at last appeared, who said, He had been planted as Centinel upon the said Cannon. Depones, That, upon the Evening of the said 16th September, he went along with the other Volunteers, to deliver up his Arms to the Castle; and, in his Return, met with Ensign Robertson on the Head of a Party of Men, sent by Gen. Gust or Gen. Preston, with Orders, as the Ensign told him, to spike up the Cannon on the Walls of the City; but that he was ordered, before entering the City, to apply to the Pannel for his Authority to do so. That he had dispatched Robert Griffith, a Gunner, to acquaint the Pannel thereof, and to ask his Authority. That the Deponent saw the said Robert Griffith return, who reported, that he had waited upon the Pannel, and that his Answer was, That he would give him no Authority; adding some Words which he at present cannot recollect; but the Impression they made upon him at the Time, and which he still retains, was, that they imported a Discouragement of the Execution of the Orders; for that the Ensign immediately said, being in Conversation with the Deponent, Should I force? or, I will force my Way into the Town; or Words to that Purpose. But the Deponent suggested to him, It would be more proper for him to make a Report of what had happened, to one of the Generals; which having been done by some one of the Party sent for that Purpose, they were recalled, and marched into the Castle. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he gave it as his Opinion, at Eleven o'Clock at Night of Monday the 16th, in the Laigh Council-House, that the Town could not then be defended, without the Assistance of the Dragoons, in regard that the Volunteers had lodged their Arms in the Castle; and that a great many of them were either gone into the Castle, or had left the City, upon the Resolution of delivering up the Town; and that he thought it extremely odd, to propose now a Defence of the City in their present Circumstances, when, it seemed, it had been judged not tenable, even when the whole Volunteers were in Arms, and an Offer made for the Dragoons to come in to its Defence: And therefore, upon the whole, was of Opinion, that a Message should be sent to the Dragoons to return, and some proper Methods taken, in the mean Time, to gather together as many Volunteers as possible. Depones, That the Deponent either heard Mr. Drummond himself, or some other Person, say, That he Mr. Drummond was going out to bring back the Dragoons; and he did not return while the Deponent was there. And depones, That he did not think the Alarm-bell a proper Signal for collecting the Volunteers, while the Dragoons were at so great a Distance, and the Rebels so nigh. That this he considered as an Intimation to the Rebels to make the Attack on the City ere it was possible for the Dragoons to come to its Defence; and any Intimation to the Rebels, of a Design of defending the City, would probably prove a Hardship on the Deputies that had been commissioned by the Town-Council to capitulate with them about the Surrender of it, and who were at that Time at the Rebel Camp.

XX. Alexander Scot, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, he served as an Officer of Volunteers, for Defence of the City of Edinburgh, in the Company commanded by the present Lord Provost of Edinburgh. That some Day of the second Week of September, and, as he thinks, about the Beginning of that Week, the Deponent was present in the New Church Isle; when he heard a Question put to the Pannel, Whether such of the Volunteers as belonged to the Trained-Bands ought not to be exempted, during their Service as Volunteers, from doing any Duty with the Trained-Bands? To which the Pannel answered, That, when both a Company of Trained-Bands, and a Company of Volunteers, were upon Duty at the same Time, any Person belonging to both these Companies, might have his Choice which of them to serve in at that Time. And, upon a further Question put to the Pannel, he answered, That, when a Company of Trained-Bands, and a Company of Volunteers, to both which one and the same Person belonged, should happen to do Duty on different Days, such Volunteer should do Duty on both. That the Deponent does not remember to have heard any Objection made to these Answers, or any thing further said on the Subject in that Meeting: But the Deponent had Occasion to converse with some of the Volunteers, who thought it a Hardship; and doubts not, but it may have discouraged others from engaging as Volunteers. And, upon an Interrogatory put by the Pannel, depones, That he did converse with some of the Trained-Bands, to whom he proposed to enlist as Volunteers; who answered, That would bring upon them double Duty; that they were already bound to do Duty in the Trained-Bands; and, should they engage as Volunteers, they might be obliged to do Duty also in that Capacity, when the Trained-Bands were not upon Duty; but, were it not for that Hardship, they would have chosen rather to have served as Volunteers, than with the Trained-Bands. And being desired to condescend upon any Person who gave him such Answer, depones, That he cannot, at this Distance of Time, charge his Memory with the Persons Names; but thinks that he talked on that Subject once to a Friend of his, William Scot, Merchant, or in a Company where he was; and that either William Scot, or some other in that Company, gave the Deponent that Answer. Depones, That the Company to which the Deponent belonged were ordered to meet in the College-yards, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September. That the Deponent, having been out of Bed all the preceding Night, and having gone only to Bed at Ten o'Clock that Day, it was about Two Afternoon before he came to the Place; and found some others of the Company there before him. That they had got no Orders what to do; and continued in the College-yards about an Hour after the Deponent came, and still received no Orders: And at last they consulted together, and marched to the Lawn-market; but the Deponent cannot charge his Memory, what were the Reasons that induced them to march thither, whether it was the ringing of the Fire-bell, because he does not remember, whether that Bell was rung before they marched, or if it was only rung after they marched; or if their Reason was, to be near the proper Place where they might receive Orders, for the Company was anxious or uneasy for Orders. That there were other Companies of Volunteers in the College-yards, who marched to the Lawn-market at the same Time, and the Deponent thinks for the same Reason. That, after coming to the Lawn-market, they waited there for a considerable Time without receiving Orders; till at last the Deponent, at the Desire of some other Officers of the Volunteers, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall, to desire the Pannel's Orders for those Companies of Volunteers. That the Deponent found a Crowd in the Goldsmiths-Hall, with some Difficulty got to the upper End of it, and told the Pannel, That he was sent by the Officers of the Volunteers, who were standing in the Lawn-market, to ask his Lordship what Orders he would please to give them: That the Pannel answered, That he was at a Loss to know what Orders to give them; and thinks he further added, That they were then deliberating about that Matter. That the Deponent waited some little Time, to see whether he would get Orders; but getting none, he left the Hall, and returned to his Company in the Lawn-market, and acquainted the other Officers of the Volunteers what had passed. That, not long after the Deponent's Return, he saw the Officers of the Volunteers that were in the upper End of the Lawn-market in a Knot together, and, as he supposed, consulting what Measure they should take; and the Deponent was soon thereafter told, That they had resolved to deliver up their Arms to the Castle: And, upon the Deponent's going up the Lawn-market, the Officers informed him of their said Resolution; and, agreeable thereto, the Deponent went up to his Company, which was the Westmost in the Lawn-market; and the whole of them marched up to the Castle. And the Reason given the Deponent for taking that Resolution, was, Because no Orders were given them, and they were apprehensive that their Arms might fall into the Rebels Hand.

Vol. IX.

XXI. Archibald Streichen, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That he was an Officer of the Volunteers, for Defence of the City, in September 1745. That he was present at a Meeting that the Pannel had with some of the Volunteers in Mrs. Clarke's; where Mr. Webster the Minister was also present; and which, he thinks, was upon Saturday the 14th September. And depones, That he there heard Mr. Webster propose to the Pannel, that a Number of the Servants and Journeymen of the Brewers and Bakers in the Town should be hired to assist in the Defence of the City any Night it should be attacked, at the Premium of a Guinea each in hand; and a further Reward to be given them, according to their Behaviour, when the Matter was over. That Mr. Webster undertook to raise, by Subscription, a Sum of 500 l. to defray the Expence; and offered to give Security for Payment of the Money. That the Deponent did not hear what Answer the Pannel gave; but supposed that the Proposal had not been gone into, because he heard no Resolution taken upon it in that Meeting, nor did he afterwards hear any more of that Matter. Depones, That, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, and, as he thinks, about Four o'Clock, while the Volunteers were drawn up in the Lawn-market, he was sent by them with a Message to the Pannel, to ask what Orders he had to give to them? and likewise to ask, in case the Town was not to be defended, where they were to deposit the King's Arms? or Words to that Purpose. That he found the Lord Provost in Goldsmiths-Hall. That to the first Part of his Message he received no Answer, and got no Orders for the Volunteers, what they were to do: But to the second Part of the Message, the Pannel answered, That he would give Orders to receive the Arms at the Court of Guard. Depones, That the Deponent waited till the Pannel left Goldsmiths-Hall, and went to the New Church Isle; and, on the Way thither, in the Parliament-Close, the Deponent saw Alexander Cunningham, Surgeon, come up to the Pannel, and deliver the following Message: 'That the Dragoons found that the Number of the Rebels were so far superior to them, that they were obliged to retire;' but the Deponent does not remember the Place he named where the Dragoons had gone to; and said, That the Number of the Rebels, so far as they could judge by Appearance, could not be under eight thousand strong. Depones, That thereupon he heard the Pannel say, If the Troops were retired, then all was over. That he believes the Occasion of Mr. Cunningham's being with the Dragoons was, that he expected there was to be an Action, and he attended them in the Way of his Business. And being further interrogate, depones, That he left the Provost as he was going into the New Church Isle, and returned to the Lawn-market, and reported to the Officers of the Volunteers the Answer he had got to the Message they had sent by him. That thereupon they consulted together; and some were for immediately delivering up their Arms into the Castle; but Provost Drummond, who was one of their Officers, insisted, that, before taking that Step, they should send a second Message. That a second Message was accordingly sent; but by whom, the Deponent does not remember; and the Messenger returned without any Answer: Whereupon the Volunteers marched up to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms.

XXII. Ensign William Robertson, of Edinburgh Castle, depones, That, in the Evening of the 16th September 1745, he being then an Officer in the Castle of Edinburgh, was sent by Gen. Preston about Six o'Clock at Night, after that the Volunteers delivered up their Arms in the Castle, with a Party, to bring up to the Castle the Cannon that were on the Walls of the City, or otherwise to render them useless, by spiking them up, and knocking off the Trunnions; and, for this Purpose, he had Carts and Horses along with him, and proper Instruments for spiking the Cannon, and beating off the Trunnions: But then, his Orders were restricted, not to do this without Licence and Order from the then Lord Provost of Edinburgh. Depones, That, with his Party, he marched down to the Reservoir; and then he first sent the Serjeant of his Party, and after that one Griffith, a Gunner in the Castle, with a Message to the Provost, to know whether he might enter the Town for the above Purpose; and the Answer which was returned to him from the Pannel, by both the Messengers, was, That he would give no Orders concerning the Cannon; but the Deponent might do as he thought proper. Upon this he sent to General Guest, to know how he should behave; and Orders were brought him to return to the Castle. Depones, That Mr. Webster was with him, procured him a Flambeau, some Smiths, Carts and Horses; and that, without going further, the Deponent returned to the Castle.

[29th October, betwixt One and Two o'Clock in the Morning.] It was now moved by some of the Jury, That they might have Leave to make a Motion in Court before any further Procedure in the Trial: Which being allowed of by the Lords, Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean, Patrick Crichton of Woodhouselee, John Nisbet Portioner of Water of Leith, and Edward Lothian Jeweller in Edinburgh, four of the Gentlemen upon the Affize of the said Archibald Stewart Pannel, humbly represented and moved in Court, in their own, and in Name of the whole other Affizers, That the Court had now continued upon this Trial, without any Respite, since Tuesday Morning at Eight o'Clock, being upwards of forty Hours: That, by this Sederunt, several of the Affizers were already greatly fatigued, and one or two of them altogether unable to hold it out any longer, without some Relief: That the Affize could not imagine it to be the Intention, either of Prosecutor or Pannel, to kill or destroy them; which behoved to be the Consequence, should they insist upon finishing the Trial at one Sederunt: That their Lordships, as well as the Pannel, and other Members of Court who had attended this Trial, must be sensible, from what they had suffered themselves, of the Hardships undergone by the Affize, and consequently of the Reasonableness of their Demand: That, altho' other People's Situation and Strength might enable them to go on without Relaxation, the said four Gentlemen did, with great Candour and Ingenuity, assure the Judges, That they were no longer able to go on in their Duty upon this Trial: And therefore begged Leave to acquaint their Lordships thereof; at the same Time flattering themselves, that both the Pannel, and his Majesty's Advocate, would concur and agree, that the Trial might be put off, and continued for such a short Space of Time as the Lords should please to appoint, that in the mean time the Affize, and all concerned, might have a little Rest. And, with the greatest Submission, moved the Court, That they would please to take this their Request into Consideration, and grant the Desire thereof accordingly.

Upon hearing of which Motion, Mr. Archibald Stewart Pannel, and his Counsel, in respect of the Distress which the Length of this Trial has already brought upon several of the Affize, and that it seems impracticable to finish the Trial at one Sederunt, consent to the granting the Desire of the Motion made as above by the Affizers, in case the Lords shall think proper so to do.

Signed

ARCH. STEWART.
JAMES FERGUSON.

Mr. William Grant, his Majesty's Advocate, does not oppose the granting the Desire of the foresaid Motion, agreed to by the Pannel and his Counsel; and hereby consents that the Lords grant the same, in case they so think fit; and that in regard the Jury have already attended forty Hours; and that several of them are so valetudinary, that they are unable to stand out the Trial, without some Respite; and also that several of the Prosecutor's Witnesses have given him Notice, that they are not able to attend longer without endangering their Healths.

Signed

WILL. GRANT.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having heard the Motion of the Affize, and the Consent to granting the Desire thereof, both of the Pannel and his Majesty's Advocate, as above, and fully deliberated and argued thereon, they, in respect thereof, and of the Necessity of the Case, continue the Diet till Eleven o'Clock of the Forenoon of this Day; and ordain the Pannel and Witnesses to attend then, each under the Pain of Law; as also the haill fifteen Affizers then also to attend, each of them under the Penalty of five hundred Pounds Sterling: And the said Affizers, in Token of their Acquiescence, hereby become bound and enacted, each for themselves, their Heirs and Successors, that they shall appear and give Attendance at the foresaid Hour, in this Place, each under the foresaid Penalty of five hundred Pounds.

Lord Strichen Præses.

ARCHIBALD STEWART of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Provost of the said City, Pannel, indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

The haill fifteen Affizers being called over, and answering to their Names, his Majesty's Advocate proceeded to the remaining Part of his Proof, by adducing the following Witnesses, viz.

XXIII. Robert Griffith, one of the Gunners of the Castle of Edinburgh, depones, That, about Five or Six of the Clock in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, after that the Volunteers had delivered their Arms in the Castle, it was thought proper, by the Commanding Officer of the Castle, to give Orders for bringing up the Cannon, and other Arms, such as Patteraroes, that were on the City-walls, or otherwise to render them useless, that so they might not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. That a Party was sent from the Castle for this Purpose, under the Command of Ensign Robertson; and the Deponent was sent by General Guesf to follow that Party, to inquire if the said Mr. Robertson had Provost Stewart's Liberty to go on with the said Work: That Mr. Robertson declared he had no such Concurrence; but had sent his Serjeant to the Provost for that Effect. That the General ordered the Deponent also to go forward, and demand the Pannel's Licence or Concurrence to effectuate the same. Accordingly the Deponent waited on the Pannel, and demanded from him his Licence or Authority to go on, and bring to the Castle, or demolish, these Cannon, &c. which were then mounted on the Town-walls, lest they should fall into the Hands of the Enemy. That the Pannel's Answer was: He had no Authority to give, as the Dragoons were gone Eastward, and his Volunteers had laid down their Arms. That he had lately received a Letter from the Enemy, which he desired the Deponent to read. That the Deponent told the Pannel, that his, the Deponent's Duty was not to expostulate, or lose time with the Pannel, but in a positive Manner to have his Concurrence; which the Pannel positively refused; but added, 'That we might do as we would, without his Liberty.' That when the Deponent left the Pannel, he found Ensign Robertson and his Party standing in the Lawn-market Street, with a Couple of Carts, and some Blacksmith-Boys, with Fore-hammers in their Hands, whom Mr. Robertson had impressed to facilitate his Work. That the Deponent went to General Guesf, and acquainted him, that he could not procure the Provost's Licence to bring in, or demolish the foresaid Cannon: That the General was then in Conversation with George Lauder, Surgeon in Edinburgh, whom the Pannel informed the Deponent, that he had sent to the General. That the General ordered the Party to return to the Castle; and, at the same time, told the Deponent, that the proper Time was over for effectuating the foresaid Work, it being then dark. Depones, That, when he entered the Door where the General and Mr. Lauder were in company, he heard the General say, 'I am sorry the Provost has not granted my Request.' And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether he reported to General Guesf the last Words of the Pannel's Answer to him, particularly that they might do as they would, without his the Pannel's Authority? depones, He did. And the Deponent further desired of General Guesf to give the Party his Authority to go on with the foresaid Work, without the Pannel's Liberty. To which the General answered, The Provost had lost the proper Opportunity; and, if the Party remained any longer in Town, they might fall into the Hands of some flying Party of the Enemy. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That the Garrison of the Castle of Edinburgh consisted then of the Castle company, which ought to be a hundred Men; and two Companies of Colonel Lauder's Regiment, which ought to be seventy Men each; but none of the above Companies were complete. That the Party sent for the Cannon, consisted of an Officer, two Gunners, a Serjeant, and twenty Men; and their falling into the Hands of the Rebels, would very much have weakened the Garrison.

XXIV. Joseph Mial, one of the Serjeants of the Castle of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Evening of the 16th of September 1745, he was desired, by Ensign Robertson, to get ready a Party of twenty Men; which, after the Deponent did, Ensign Robertson ordered him and the Party to follow him; which accordingly they did; and, after they were come a little way down the Castle-hill, Ensign Robertson ordered the Deponent to go to the Pannel, and acquaint him, that the Ensign was come with a Party, in order to render useless the Cannon that were on the City-walls, and wanted the Pannel's Commands thereant. The Deponent accordingly went to the Pannel, and delivered his Message. To which the Pannel made Answer, That Ensign Robertson might do as he would. That, upon this, one Dr. Lauder, who was then in company with the Pannel, rose up, and desired Liberty to go and speak to the General; and that the Pannel said he might go. And accordingly Mr. Lauder and the Deponent left the Provost, who was then in the Council-House; and, when they came to the Castle, they met Major Robertson, who desired them to go to General Guesf; which accordingly they did. And Mr. Lauder, addressing the General, told him, That there was a Party come down to destroy and render useless the Cannon that were upon the Walls. To which the General made Answer, Why not? The Provost has not done what he ought. To which Mr. Lauder replied, What could he do? or, What could we do, since the Forces have left us? And the Deponent telling the General the Message he had been sent with by Ensign Robertson to the Pannel, with the Pannel's Answer, the General ordered Ensign Robertson, with his Party, to return to the Castle; and which Message to the Ensign was sent by Mr. Lauder; and the Deponent believes Mr. Lauder delivered that Message to the Ensign, because the Deponent remained with the General till Mr. Lauder was gone, and then asked the General, what Commands he had for his Officer, Ensign Robertson? To which the General made answer: You may go and tell him to withdraw his Party to the Castle: And the Deponent having gone, found that the Ensign and his Party were already returned.

XXV. Patrick Lindey, Depute-Secretary to the Forces in North-Britain, depones, That, about Two o'Clock of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he being in company with General Guesf, the then Lord Advocate and Solicitor came into the Room, and told the General, That it was thought proper that a hundred Dragoons should be brought into the City of Edinburgh, to assist in the Defence of it; and desired that he might give a Warrant for bringing them into it. The General agreed to the Proposal; but thought it was proper that a Petition should be signed by the Pannel, the Lord Advocate, and Solicitor, requesting the Thing from him; which Petition the Deponent wrote: And the Lord Advocate carried it down, as the Deponent thinks, to have it signed by the Pannel; and desired that the Deponent might come in a Quarter of an Hour to his House to get the Petition when signed. That, after this, the Lord Advocate and Solicitor left the General, and Colonel Clayton came into his Room, who was going that Day to Brigadier Fowkes. That the General told him what the Lord Advocate and Solicitor had been with him about; and, at the same time, gave him Orders, upon his seeing the foresaid Petition signed and delivered to the Deponent, to acquaint Brigadier Fowkes, that it was his Orders that a hundred Dragoons should be forthwith sent into the Town of Edinburgh. The Deponent and Col. Clayton went from the Castle to Lord Advocate's House in a very short time after this; and calling for the above Petition, he received it, signed by the Pannel, Lord Advocate, and Solicitor, and shewed it to Colonel Clayton; who immediately left the Deponent, in order to go to Brigadier Fowkes. Depones, That, about an Hour after this, the Deponent, being with General Guesf, and the General, hearing that there was some Design among the Inhabitants for delivering up the Town, sent the Deponent to the Pannel, to know, whether he still desired that the hundred Dragoons should come to Town in Terms of the above Petition or Request; because, if he did not, he would send contrary Orders to Brigadier Fowkes. The Deponent accordingly went, and delivered his Message to the Provost, whom he then found in a very numerous Meeting of the Inhabitants in the New Church Isle; but does not remember that he told the Pannel the General's Reason for sending this Message. That the Pannel demanded the Opinion of the Meeting, whether the Dragoons should be brought in, or not? Whereupon a great Number cried out, No Dragoons. And the Pannel upon this told the Deponent, that he would neither bid nor forbid them, but that the General might do what he thought proper. The Deponent upon this, having the Petition or Request in his Custody, took it out of his Pocket, and wrote upon the Back of it, The Generality of this Meeting are not for receiving the Dragoons. This short Note he presented to the Pannel for him to sign; but this he refused, and said, Why will ye distress me about these Dragoons? or Words to that Purpose. And depones, That at that Time, or some time after, speaking to the Pannel upon the Subject of admitting the Dragoons, the Deponent asked him, since he had once signed a Request for bringing in the Dragoons, why he would not either continue the same Request, or counter-order it? And the Pannel's Answer was, That he signed the Request at the Desire of the Advocate or Solicitor. Depones, That, when he wrote the above Note, he did not tell the Pannel that the Paper upon which the Note was wrote, was the Request, which he, the Advocate, and Solicitor, had formerly signed; nor did he shew him any more than the Back-side of the Paper. And being interrogate by the Pannel, What it is the Deponent means, by his saying, that he had a Conversation with the Pannel, at that Meeting, or some time after, about admitting the Dragoons; whether he means that Day or some Day thereafter? depones, depones, He cannot be positive as to the Day. And depones, That, upon delivering General Gough's Message to the Pannel, he did it aloud; and is positive, that the Meeting delivered such an Opinion as he has already deponed upon; and thinks the Provost put the Question as he has already deponed; but as to this last Particular he is not positive.

XXVI. Donald Mackay, Cadie in Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday Afternoon, the 16th of September 1745, William Henderson gave the Deponent a Letter to be carried to Leith, to one William Ross, a Gunner; which the Deponent was told was to bring him up from Leith to the Pannel, then Lord Provost of Edinburgh. That, after the Deponent had delivered his Message, and returned, as he was walking about the Luckenbooths, a Man dressed in black Cloaths came to the Deponent, and asked him, If he knew him? The Deponent answered, 'I do not know you, Sir.' The Man replied, 'What, do you not know me?' And the Deponent said, 'I believe I may have seen you once or twice; but I do not know your Name.' Then the Man said, 'Here is a Letter to the Provost; you must find him out, and give it him; and here is Three-pence for your Pains, and next time I see you I will give you a Shilling.' That the Deponent went in quest of the Provost, and saw Mr. Charles Erskine Advocate, Charles Fraser Merchant, and the deceased Mr. Robertson Minister, standing together. That the Deponent came up to them, and asked them, if they knew where the Provost was; for here was a Letter he had to give him. Mr. Charles Erskine said, 'Give me the Letter, and I'll deliver it to him.' And the Deponent gave the Letter to Mr. Erskine. Then Charles Fraser said, 'I am lighter-footed than you; give me the Letter, and I'll carry it to him.' And Mr. Erskine gave him the Letter, and Charles Fraser went off with it. And depones, That the Deponent did not then know, nor does he yet know the Contents of the Letter, nor from what Person it was. And depones, That after the Rebels had got Possession of the City of Edinburgh, he saw the same Person who had given him the Letter as above, who was then an Officer in the Service of the Rebels, and craved him for his Shilling that he had promised him; but did not get it.

XXVII. Mr. Charles Erskine of Edinburgh, Advocate, depones, That, upon the Evening of Monday the 16th of September 1745, as he believes, though he cannot be positive of the Day, the Deponent, Charles Fraser Merchant, and the now deceased Mr. Robertson Minister, were standing together opposite to the Tolbooth; when a Street-Cadie came running up in some Halle, and said, 'Who is there? Where is the Provost?' And the Deponent turning about his Face to the Cadie, said, 'Why, what do you want the Provost for?' The Cadie answered, 'Here is a Letter I have to give him.' The Deponent said, 'From whom is the Letter?' The Cadie answered, 'I do not know; a Man in black Cloaths gave it me to give him.' The Deponent replied, 'I believe the Provost is just now in the New-Church Isle.' And then Charles Fraser said, 'I believe the Provost is in the New-Church Isle; if you will give me the Letter, I will carry it to him.' And the Deponent having before taken the Letter out of the Cadie's Hand, he, at the Cadie's Desire, then gave it to Charles Fraser. That the Deponent looked at the Back of the Letter, and saw that it was addressed to the Lord Provost; but cannot say, that, in the Hurry they were then in, he observed what more was in the Address, nor did he look at the Seal. And being shewn the Letter in the Clerk's Hands, which is the first in the List of Writings subjoined to the criminal Libel, depones, That he cannot say, whether it is the same with the Letter above deponed upon, or not.

XXVIII. Charles Fraser, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, between Five and Six o'Clock of the Evening of the Day before the Rebels came into the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent being standing on the Street, with Mr. Erskine the preceding Witness, a Cadie came up to them, asking, where was the Lord Provost? Mr. Erskine answered, 'What do you want with him?' The Cadie said, 'I have a Letter to give him.' Mr. Erskine said, 'Let me see it.' The Cadie gave him the Letter, and Mr. Erskine said, 'The Provost is in the New-Church Isle; I'll go in with it to him.' Then the Deponent said to Mr. Erskine, 'Sir, Don't trouble yourself; give it me, and I'll carry it to him.' And the Deponent got the Letter, and went with it to the New-Church Isle; when the Deponent found a great Crowd of People there, and some Difficulty to get at the Pannel; and therefore gave the Letter to Mr. Polson, a Vintner in Town, to hand it to the Pannel: And the Deponent saw it handed accordingly; and staid till it was broke open. That the Deponent cannot say, he saw it in the Pannel's Hands, nor knows he by whom it was opened. And the first Thing the Deponent noticed in the Reading, after they had read a Line or two of the Letter, was, that they said it was from Charles P. R. Upon which there arose in the Meeting a great Noise and Murmuring, some calling out, not to read it: And then the Pannel, and the rest of the Meeting, dismissed; and the Magistrates, as the Deponent thinks, went to the Goldsmiths-Hall. And being shewn the Letter, which is the first in the List of Writings subjoined to the criminal Libel, depones, He believes it may be the very same that he has deponed upon, though he did not then either observe the Seal, or that it was addressed to the Magistrates and Town-Council, as well as to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh.

XXIX. William Henderson, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That, upon Monday the 16th of September 1745, the Deponent was in the New-Church Isle; where he saw the Pannel, and a Number of other Persons, met together; but remaining there for a very little Space, he did not know what was transacted amongst them. That he went from that Place towards the Castle-hill, and returned from thence to the Goldsmiths-Hall about Six o'Clock at Night; where he found the Pannel, the other Magistrates, and most of the Council met. That he saw a Letter lying upon the Table; which, from Curiosity, he took up, and looked at: and the Letter marked Number 1. which is now shewn to him, he says, is the Letter he so looked at; and which Letter, he was told by some Person in the Hall (the Deponent does not call to mind who that Person was) had been brought in to the Meeting in the New-Church Isle. That, very soon after the Deponent came to this Place, the Pannel proposed, the Town's Assessors should be sent for, for their Advice; which was agreed to. And the Deponent was for the deceased Mr. James Graham, and Mr. Robert Pringle; but found none of them: That, after he returned, he reported, that Mr. Graham was not to be found, and that Mr. Pringle was out of Town; and thereafter Mr. Solicitor Haldane, one of the Town's Assessors, who had been called upon by the Provost and Magistrates, came in to the Meeting; and the Pannel then took the Chair; and the Deponent was ordered, he believes by the Provost, to read the Letter; and having read the Address, and the Subscription, which is Charles P. R. and begun to read a Line, Mr. Haldane withdrew, and said, That these were Matters too high for him. Upon this the Provost said, Good God! I am deserted by my Arms, and by my Assessors. That then there was a Pause; and the Pannel having demurred about reading the Letter, one of the Meeting said, He thought there could be no Harm in having it read. Whereupon the Deponent proceeded, and read the Letter. That then a Motion was made, to send a Deputation to the Rebels Camp, as the only Means to save the Town from the Menaces contained in the Letter. And being interrogate, who it was that made the Motion? says, That several of the Members of the Meeting seemed to be of that Opinion; but who it was that made the Motion, the Deponent cannot tell; but, as he remembers, there was a good deal of Confusion among them. However, this Motion was agreed to by the Meeting. And at this Time the Deponent was called upon by Dean of Guild Allan, and by him desired to go to the Parliament-Close, where the Edinburgh Regiment was, and tell the Officer, without Loss of Time, to march his Men up to the Castle, and to deliver in their Arms. That the Deponent accordingly went, and found one Mr. Burns, who was Adjutant to the Regiment, and acquainted him with the Message sent by Dean of Guild Allan. But he having asked of the Deponent, whether the Pannel had given Orders for that Purpose? and the Deponent having received no Commission, but from Dean of Guild Allan, Mr. Burns demurred to follow the Advice given. That the Deponent immediately returned, to acquaint the Dean of Guild of what Mr. Burns had said. Whereupon he immediately went down Stairs to speak to Mr. Burns; who they met coming up to the Goldsmiths-Hall. What passed between them the Deponent knows not; but, in a very little after, he saw the Regiment march to the Castle. Depones, That after he returned with his Answer to Dean of Guild Allan, he was informed in the Meeting that four Persons had been named as Deputies to go to the Rebels Camp, namely, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, Bailie Yetts, Conveener Norris, and Deacon Orrack. Whether there were more named or not, the Deponent knows not; nor does he know further as to any Instructions given them, but that they were to find out upon what Terms or Conditions the Rebels were to enter the Town. That, in pursuance of this, the Deputies went out; and returned again betwixt Nine and Ten o'Clock at Night, with a written Answer, Number 2, in the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel: Which having been shewn to the Deponent, he says, it is the Answer the Deputies brought in. After this Answer was delivered by them to the Meeting, which by the Time the Deputies had returned, had gone from the Goldsmiths-Hall to the Laigh Council-House, it was observed, that it contained a Limitation of Time, namely, Two o'Clock in the next Morning, within which a precise Answer was to be given by the Magistrates and Council. And as, by this Time, the Magistrates had some Information, that Sir John Cope, and his Majesty's Forces, were off Dunbar, and that it was believed by that Time they would be landed, the Meeting came to a Resolution to send a second Deputation, in order to try if they could prevail to have the Time lengthened out 'till Nine or Ten o'Clock next Day. That the Deponent does not know precisely who these second Deputies were, nor did he see them set out or return; but that, a Day or two after, a Paper was put into his Hands by Provost Coutts, who was the only one of the second Deputation whom the Deponent knows of, or remembers, which, he said, was the Answer returned upon the second Deputation to the Magistrates and Town-Council: And the Writing marked Number 3, in the List subjoined to the Libel, now shewn to the Deponent, he says, is the Paper he received from Provost Coutts, as above. And being interrogate, whether the Pannel made the Motion, or acquiesced or concurred in the Deputations? says, He does not remember that he made the Motion; but that he took it for granted that he concurred or acquiesced in it, either explicitly or tacitly; not being able to call to mind any thing he uttered or said concerning them, excepting that, when the Instructions were given to the second Deputies, he urged them to insist, That it was then late, and he could not have the Sense of the Inhabitants; and therefore it was reasonable they should be indulged 'till Ten o'Clock, that they might have an Opportunity to see what the Sentiments of the Inhabitants were concerning that Matter. And depones, That he, as under the Town-Clerks, always attends the Magistrates when they meet together in the Council as Magistrates; but the Deponent knows of no Minute of Record that was made of the Transactions of that Day. And depones, That, about Four o'Clock, or a little after, he had Directions from the Pannel to go to the Cross, and to desire that such Inhabitants or Burgesses as he there met with, should repair to the New-Church Isle; which the Deponent accordingly did. And says, That the aforesaid Directions were given him by the Pannel as he was proceeding from the Goldsmiths-Hall to the New-Church Isle. And further says, That the Paper marked Number 8, in the List of Writings subjoined to the Libel, he verily believes, is the Paper which he saw in the Pannel's Hand about Three or Four o'Clock, which of the two the Deponent cannot be positive; but that it was that same Afternoon before the Meeting in the New-Church Isle above-mentioned.

XXX. Sir George Preston, of Valleyfield, depones, That, in September 1745, the Deponent was Captain of a Company of Volunteers for Defence of the City of Edinburgh; and, on Monday the 16th of that Month, his Station was to keep Guard with his Company at the Netherbow Port, along with another Company commanded by Mr. James Nimmo. And, when it was pretty far in the Afternoon, the Companies being drawn out upon the Streets, the Deponent went to the Pannel to receive his Orders what they were to do, and he found the Pannel in the New-Church Isle; who ordered the Deponent to march the Companies to their Alarm-post in the Lawn-market, and to remain there till further Orders. That the Deponent

Deponent immediately marched up the Companies to the Down Market and there met with several Volunteers in their Return from the Castle of Edinburgh, who told the Deponent, That they had marched up their Companies to the Castle, and delivered up their Arms there; and it was high Time for him to do so likewise. And the Reason they gave the Deponent for having taken that Step, was, That they said, that now the Town was not to be defended; and that a Resolution had been taken in the New Church, not to defend the Town. That the Deponent followed their Advice, marched up with the two Companies above-mentioned to the Castle, and there delivered up their Arms. Depones, That between three and four o'Clock of the same Afternoon, there came in at the Netherbow Port sixteen or eighteen Carts loaded with Spades and Shovels, which it was said to the Deponent, were carrying to the Castle; and a Town-Officer came to the Deponent, with Orders, as from the Pannel, then Provost, to let them pass; which he did accordingly. That thereafter, when the Deponent went to the Castle, he asked Mr. Lyon, the Store-Keeper of the Castle, Whether these Spades and Shovels had been brought thither; who answered, That there came none there; for they had no Use for them; and they had great Abundance of their own.

XXXI. James Miller, late Servant to the deceased Alexander Bruce of Kinnel, depones, That upon the 16th of September 1745, the Deponent was standing at the Entry of the Tolbooth-Church, in the Afternoon, and saw several Carts, how many he cannot now say, loaded with Shovels, Spades, and Mattocks, brought towards the Entry to the Laigh Council-House, and taken into the Door which enters in to the North-gate of the Parliament-House; but where they were carried afterwards, the Deponent knows not. And further says, That some Town-Officers told him, that these Carts were brought thither by the Order of the Lord Provost; at least one of the Town-Officers, whose Name he knows not, but he is an old Man, and he would know him if he saw him again, told him so. And upon an Interrogatory put to him, further says, That whether that Officer was waiting upon the Carts, or attending the Provost, who, he believes, was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, he does not know.

XXXII. Baillie Bryden, Lieutenant of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, depones, That he was in a Tavern with the Pannel some little Time before the Rebels entered the Town, in the Year 1745, when a Gentleman was brought in to them, who said, He had carried along with him from Dalkeith about fifty Men to assist in defending the City against the Rebels. That the Deponent did not observe the Pannel say much to him; but he rose up from his Seat, and thanked him. That the Provost seemed to be at a loss where to quarter them; but at last the Provost gave Directions to carry them to the High-School, as the properest Place to quarter them. And further depones, That he was employed in placing the Cannon on the Walls of the City; and did not find any Occasion of Complaint to the Provost concerning any other Matter, than what related to his own Business; and it was chiefly concerning the making of the White-Iron Cases for the Grape-Shot; in which he thought the Tinman that was employed did not make such Haste as he ought to have done. As to the other Parts of the Works carrying on, he thought that the People he happened to see working, went on pretty well. And further says, That he waited on the Pannel, along with the deceased Mr. MacLaurin, who was in a Tavern (he thinks, but cannot be positive, that it was in the Evening before the Rebels entered the City); and desired Orders in Writing to load the Cannon on the Walls. That the Pannel did not give orders in Writing, but verbally ordered him to load them; and that Provost Drummond was then present, and said he would give Orders in Writing, which accordingly he did. And upon a further Interrogatory he recollects, that upon the Saturday a Number of Men were ordered by the Provost to assist him (as the Deponent heard, though he cannot tell to a Man, they were twenty-four) to mount the Cannon; which accordingly was done, as far as the Deponent can recollect, from Bristow Port to the Netherbow; and that it was upon the next Day, being Sunday, he waited upon the Pannel, with Mr. MacLaurin, and received the verbal Orders above-mentioned. In consequence whereof, and of a written Warrant from Provost Drummond, the Cannon were accordingly loaded; the Deponent cannot say all of the Cannon, because he came away about eleven o'Clock at Night, and left the Town's People at Work, at least he left them there upon the Cannon when he came away; the Gunners which he brought along with him having returned to the Castle before he left the Town's People. That a Sailor from Leith, who was said to the Deponent to have Skill in loading Artillery, was come to the Place where the Deponent was at Work; and it was said to the Deponent, the rest of the Cannon were to be loaded. And being interrogate, Why the Guns were not sooner loaded? depones, That the Materials for loading them were not sooner ready. And being interrogate for the Pannel, Whether or not the Scaffolding, upon which the Cannon were placed, was sufficient? depones, That he saw Boards upon which the Cannon were placed, to make them run upon; but no Scaffolding whereupon they were placed; the Swivels which were placed upon the Netherbow and Bristow Ports, were to be fired by Men who were to stand upon the Scaffolds placed there for that Purpose. And further depones, That upon a Message delivered by Baillie Baillie, and some other Persons that came along, sent to Gen. Gust, he sent the Deponent, and some other Artillery-Men, to the Town, to follow such Directions as should be given them by the Pannel concerning the Cannon: That, as the Deponent thinks, there were two Messages delivered to Gen. Gust concerning Gunners to be sent down; but that he was sent down but once with the Orders above set down, before the Saturday the Transactions whereof are above set forth. That when they came down the first Time to clean the Guns, they had no Orders from Gen. Gust to attend upon the Walls, and to fire the Guns, but only to assist in planting them upon the Walls; nor does the Deponent know of any Gunners the Town had, excepting the Sailor above-named: But that he was present when Mr. MacLaurin applied to one Ferment, the Master of a Vessel at Leith, to assist in managing the Guns; but he declined it.

XXXIII. Robert Brown, Taylor in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September, in the Year 1745, the Deponent served in the Trained-Bands of Edinburgh, and was under the Command of Capt. Hepburn, and was placed at the West-Port, and continued there till three o'Clock, or thereabouts, in the Morning after. That their Captain having gone up to wait upon the Provost and Magistrates, as the Deponent believes, to receive Instructions from them how his Company was to be disposed of, when he returned, he signified to those under his Command, that his Orders were, That every Man should repair to his own House; and that thereupon they went off. And further says, That the Deponent having asked his Captain, what should be done with the Arms of his Company? he told them, his Orders were to leave them in that Place where they then were, which was a Sort of Guard-Room; and told him, that his Half-pike was to be left there also. Accordingly, when they dispersed as above, they left their Arms there.

XXXIV. Edward Inglis, Druggist in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September 1745, he was a Soldier in the Trained-Bands, in the Company commanded by Capt. Hepburn, which was stationed at the West-Port about Eight of the Clock in the Morning of that Day, and remained there till about Half an Hour after Three next Morning; when their Captain told them, That he had Orders from their Colonel, that is, the Pannel, to disperse, and leave their Arms in the Place where they kept their Guard-Room. In pursuance whereof, they accordingly dispersed, and left their Arms in the foresaid Place. And depones, That about Five o'Clock Monday Evening before they dispersed, the Deponent having heard from Capt. Dalzell, one of the Officers of the City-Guard, that the Town was to be delivered up, he applied to Captain Hepburn, and said, That, since that was to be the Case, he thought the best Way for them was to go to the Castle, and deliver in their Arms, and every Man to go to his own Home; but the Captain answered, That they could not desert their Station, and behaved to wait Orders from their superior Officers.

XXXV. Alexander Hepburn, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That upon the 16th of September, in the Year 1745, he commanded a Company of the Trained-Bands in the City of Edinburgh. That he and his Company were planted as a Guard upon the West-Port, about Eight o'Clock of that Morning, and continued upon that Station till about Three next Morning; when they dispersed, and left their Arms in the Room where they kept Guard. And being interrogate, By whose Orders they dispersed, and left their Arms there? says, That he was sent for, to come to the Provost and Magistrates, who were then in Mrs. Clarke's; he believes he received the Message by a Cadie. When he came to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Magistrates were, Mr. Tennent, the Captain Commandant of the Trained-Bands, chid him for having lingered so long upon that Station where he was; for that he had sent for him, by George Wemyss, some time before that; that he and his Men should disperse, and leave their Arms in the Room where they kept Guard. That the Deponent answered, He had received no such Message; but that he came now in Obedience to a Message from the Council; and now he attended, and desired to know their Pleasure; and that the Commandant then, in the Presence of the Provost and Councillors, gave him Orders forthwith to disperse his Men, and to leave the Arms in that Room where they were keeping Guard; and that John Hislop, the Store-Keeper of the Town, was that Morning to come and take away the Arms. That all the while the Deponent staid in the Room, and while he was receiving the Orders from the Captain-Commandant, the Pannel's Head was lying on his Hand on the Table, and, to the Deponent's Apprehension, was asleep. That the Deponent immediately left the Council, and returned to his Station at the West-Port; intimated those Orders to his Men, and dispersed them; who left their Arms in the said Room where they had kept Guard. And being interrogate, Whether, when he communicated his Orders to the Company, he had told them, That it was by the Lord Provost's Order that he had dispersed them? says, That he cannot be positive; that it is possible he might have said his Orders were from the Provost, because the Council were all present when the Commandant gave the Deponent his Orders. And depones, That, as Captain of the Company stationed at the West-Port, he ordered the Gates to be opened to the two several Deputations that were sent by the Magistrates, and to the first Deputation when they were on their Return; but that the Guard was dismissed before the Return of the second Deputation. And further says, That he understood in general, that the Deputies were sent out to make some Treaty or Capitulation; but, as to Particulars, he learned nothing from them, or any body else. That he cannot charge his Memory at present, nor can he recollect, that the Deputies told him any thing of their Errand going out, or the Answer of the first Deputation; and is positive, that none of the Men under his Command did that Morning, or the Day before, at any time, tell him of any Surrender of the City, or propose carrying their Arms to the Castle.

XXXVI. Robert Tennent, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the foresaid 16th of September, he was Captain-Commandant of the Trained-Bands of Edinburgh; and that he knows Captain Hepburn's Company was placed at the West-Port; and that they dispersed about Three o'Clock next Morning. And being interrogate, by whose Orders they dispersed, and left their Arms in the Guard-Room? says, That, upon an Alarm brought in from the Street into the Laigh Council-House, some time in the Evening of the 16th, he cannot be positive as to the Hour, that the Highlanders had entered the City at the Netherbow, and were chasing the Dragoons before them; it was thought dangerous that the Trained-Bands should be found by the Rebels with Arms in their Hands: And therefore he, the Deponent, moved to the Provost and Council, that Orders might be given to the Men under the Officers of the Trained-Bands, to lay down their Arms, and disperse; and that, upon this Motion, it was agreed by the Provost and Council, that such Message should be sent. In pursuance whereof, the Deponent sent Capt. Wemyss to the three several Companies; one whereof was posted at the Weigh-House, and two at the West-Port, to signify to them the Provost and Council their Pleasure to the foresaid Effect. That, as it appeared afterwards, Capt. Wemyss did not go to the Companies at the West-Port, but had gone only to the Company stationed at the Weigh-House; which, in consequence of the Order he transmitted to them, dispersed: But what they did with their Arms, the Deponent knows not. And the Council being informed by Baillie Mansfield, who had Occasion to be at the West-Port that Morning, that Capt. Hepburn and his Company were still there, they sent for the Captain, and upon his coming to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Council then were, the Deponent Deponent asked him, in their Presence, Why he had not dispersed his Men sooner, upon the Notice sent him by Capt. Wemyss? he replied, He had never received any such Message. And, upon an Interrogatory, the Deponent further says, That the Message, as he understands it, sent to Capt. Hepburn by the Council was to dismiss his Men, and come up to them; and that he had actually dismissed his Company before the Deponent saw him, as he the Deponent supposes; and that he does not know what Orders were given to Capt. Hepburn anent the Disposal of the Arms. And further depones, That, when Capt. Hepburn came to the Magistrates, the Deponent does not remember, and cannot be positive, whether the Pannel was present among them or not; he having about that time been pressed to go to Bed, and take a little Rest: for he was fatigued, and faint. And, being further interrogate, Whether, when he the Deponent represented to the Council the Report that was heard at the Door, that the Highlanders had burst in at the Netherbow Port, and were chasing the Dragoons up the Street, any particular Orders were given as to the Disposal of the Arms? depones, That he cannot be positive, further than that they were to lay down their Arms; and he supposed they were to leave them in the Place they kept Guard. And also says, That, after it was found that the Alarm upon which the Orders were sent to the Companies to disperse was false, the Deponent did not think of sending a second Order, for he thought the first Order was executed: And as for the Arms, the Deponent does not know that any second Orders were sent concerning the Disposal of them. And depones, That there are in all sixteen Companies of Trained-Bands: And that before Sunday there were never so many as three Companies on Duty, as far as the Deponent can recollect; but that then the three Companies were ordered upon Duty; and that three Companies continued to do Duty, till they were dismissed, as above: And that the Deponent does not know, or remember, of any Orders given to John Hislop to gather up the Arms; nor that any Mention of Hislop was made in his Hearing when Capt. Hepburn attended the Council. And, upon a further Interrogatory, depones, That, after it was agreed upon in the Goldsmiths-Hall to have a Meeting in the New Church Isle, the Pannel recommended it to all who were present to attend; and to desire such Burgesses as they met with to come there also; as also, to such as were at the Head of any Corporation or Society, to take the Opinion of the Members of the same, whether it was proper to stand out and defend the Town? That thereupon the Deponent assembled the Officers under his Command in John Ross's Tavern; and the Captains were in one Room, and the Subalterns in another. That he asked the Captains first, What their Opinion was concerning the defending of the Town? And they were all of Opinion, that, since the Dragoons had fled Eastward, and that some of the Volunteers had begun to separate, it was not practicable to defend the Town: And that, upon advising among the Subalterns concerning the same Proposition, they were unanimously of the same Opinion; as it was reported to the Deponent by Mr. Auchinlack, who was his Lieutenant, from the Lieutenants; and by Mr. Hutton, his Ensign, from the Ensigns: And that he and his Officers, at least a great many of them, attended the Meeting in the New Church Isle. And further says, That the Deponent had received the Key of the Wicket of the Netherbow Port; but that, upon Monday Night, in Presence of the Pannel and Council, the said Key was by him delivered to Capt. Hamilton, to whom, at the same time, the great Key of the Gate was also delivered, in order to let out the Dragoons Baggage; some of whom were left to take care of it, and made a very great Noise for it at the Time.

XXXVII. John Dalgleish, Watchmaker in Edinburgh, depones, That he was a Captain of the Trained-Bands, on Duty upon the Evening of Monday the 16th of September 1745; and, between Seven and Eight o'Clock at Night, he received a Message by one of the Town-Officers, containing Orders to him to cause his Company to lay down their Arms, and to dismiss them: Which he did not incline, on that Message, to do; but sent his Ensign, William Sibbald, Taylor, with Orders to find out the Provost wherever he was, and to acquaint him; and, if he could not be found, the Captain-Commandant; that he, the Deponent, had received the above Message as from the Pannel, or some of the Council; and to inquire at one, or either of them, if such a Message was sent; and what he should do in relation to the Subject thereof? That his Ensign accordingly went, and returned to him between Eight and Nine o'Clock, with Orders, as from the Pannel, to dismiss his Guard, and lay down their Arms: And the Deponent being then standing at the Door of the Weigh-house, which was his Post, and where he had planted two Centries, his Men rushed out upon him, leaving their Arms behind them. And depones, That he received no Direction from any Person in what Manner these Arms should be disposed of, or secured. Depones, That he first mounted Guard upon the Evening of the Fast-day, which was held two Weeks before the Rebels came to Town; and mounted Guard again, upon the 16th Day of September, about Seven o'Clock in the Morning; and, just before that, saw the Pannel in the Goldsmiths-Hall, who acquainted the Deponent, that he would get Powder and Ball, and Cartridge-boxes, from John Hislop, the City Store-keeper. That, about Nine o'Clock he sent to Mr. Hislop, desiring to have them; but he not being in the way, the said Ammunition was not brought till about Eleven o'Clock, when as much as was thought would be useful was delivered to him for his Company. Being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, betwixt Nine and Ten of the Sunday Morning the 15th, the Officers of the Trained-Bands were called by the Captain-Commandant, by the Pannel's Orders, to the Crown Tavern, where he, and the rest of the Captains, who were all in one Room together, received Orders from their Commandant, to be ready to draw out their Companies on a Minute's Warning, which each Captain communicated to his Subalterns; with Orders, to such of them as were there, not to leave that Tavern, without leaving Word where they might be found. That, about Three of the Clock of the Afternoon of this Day, the Captains got Orders to repair to their respective Bounds, and draw out their Companies; which they accordingly did: And then the Deponent's Company had Arms distributed among them; and, as far as he could observe, Arms were delivered to the other Companies: And that, before the Companies were dismissed, they received Orders to be ready to march at Tuck of Drum.

XXXVIII. Mark Sandilands, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That he was one of the associated Volunteers, who, on the 7th of September, proposed to publish a Paragraph in the Edinburgh Courant, on the Monday following, containing an Account of the Steps taken for Defence of the City of Edinburgh against the Rebels: That he shewed a Copy of the Paragraph, as concerted, to the Pannel; some others of the Volunteers being in Company, which contained Words to this Purpose, 'By the Advice of the Crown-Lawyers, he cheerfully accepted of the Offer of their Service,' (which referred to the Volunteers;) and the Pannel said, He could not agree to that Draught, because it was not true: And it was amended by the Pannel's Direction; and after the Words, Advice of the Crown-Lawyers, it was made to run, he acquiesced in, and accepted of their Service; giving this for his Reason, That he differed in Opinion with the King's Lawyers; for, as the Law stood, he thought it was unlawful to take up Arms, without the special Warrant of his Majesty. Depones, That he was present when Bailie James Stewart proposed to send to the King's Ships in the Road, to desire to have some Sailors, accustomed to fire Cannon, for serving the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls; which the Pannel did not relish; because, he said, they would be rash, and they would fire on Friends, as well as Foes. And, being interrogate, If, when the Pannel did not approve of said Proposal, he mentioned any other? depones, He does not remember.

XXXIX. George Dunbar, Merchant, and late Bailie of Edinburgh, depones, That the Paper, No. 8, annexed to the Criminal Letters, was framed by the Deponent, and some other Citizens, betwixt One and Two Afternoon, of the 16th of September 1745; and that, while they were in the Course of signing it, Bailie Gavin Hamilton, and Bailie Robert Baillie, sent George Lindsay for the Deponent, to ask him, What sort of a Paper it was to which he was procuring Subscriptions? That the Deponent went, and explained the Substance of it; and said he would give them the Scroll of it; which he sent for, and delivered to them; and, after reading it, they were well pleased with it; saying, They believed it to have been a Paper of another Nature. That the Deponent went along with them to some more of the Council assembled in the Goldsmiths-Hall, where the said Scroll was delivered to Dean of Guild Hathorn. That, about Three o'Clock of this Day, he met the Pannel at the Stinking Style, and put the said Paper, then signed by a great many of the Inhabitants, in the Pannel's Hands; relating to him, at the same time, the Substance of it; and he promised to lay it before the Magistrates and Council. The Deponent attended him to the Goldsmiths-Hall; and, as they were entering the Door, a Crowd of the Subscribers rushed in behind them; at which the Pannel was vastly offended; and, turning about, said, What, Gentlemen, think you to compel me to grant the Desire of your Petition by Force? Upon which the Deponent endeavoured to stop, and pacify them, and went down Stairs, the Bulk of them following him to the Parliament-Close; where he remained for some little Time, and until he received a Message from Capt. Hepburn, who commanded the Company of the Trained-Bands in which the Deponent, who was a private Man, served, That his Company was mutinying, because the Volunteers were going to lay down their Arms; that this was before the Fire-bell rung. That when, in obedience to the Captain's Commands, he went to the West-Port, he found a Disorder among the Men of the said Company upon the Account foresaid; to whom the Deponent addressed himself much to this Purpose: Let the Volunteers do what they will; let us remain upon our Duty, till we shall receive the Lord Provost our Colonel's Commands; and I will stand by you as long as I can carry a Musket. That, about Four o'Clock, he saw that Part of the Town-Guard, which had gone out to support the Dragoons, standing in the Grass-market, some of them under Arms, and the Arms of others grounded; and this in his Way to Capt. Hepburn. Depones, That, betwixt Four and Five o'Clock at Night, the Pannel, with some other of the Magistrates, came to the West-Port, attended by Mr. MacLaurin and John Scot, Plumber, and gave Orders to shut the Ports; to let in any Soldiers or Dragoons that should come there, but no Stragglers or Strangers; to let in any Forage that should come for the Dragoons, or Persons having Messages to the Magistrates; and to prime and make ready the Cannon planted at the West-Port: All which things that required immediate doing, were done. That the Charge of the Cannon was given to the Captain of the Trained-Bands, and to the Captain of the Town-Guard; but he observed no Gunners there; and Scot, who, in Conjunction with Mr. MacLaurin, had primed the Cannon, staid by them for some time; he does not know how long. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, by Capt. Hepburn's Order, as from the Pannel, he the Deponent, and three more of the Guard, mounted the Town-Wall by a Ladder, to observe if they could see any of the Dragoons coming; where they remained two Hours; but none came in but one. That the Deponent staid on Guard till about Two o'Clock in the Morning; when he went up to Mrs. Clarke's, where the Magistrates and Council were, to acquaint them, that they would do well to send some of the Soldiers of the City-Guard to take care of the Cannon, which were primed, and People with Flambeaux going near them; and he received for Answer from the Magistrates, That they would be taken care of. That the Pannel was not then in the same Room with the other Magistrates and Council; but in another Room, as he was told, sleeping. That he did not return to the Guard again, but remained a considerable Time with the Magistrates. That the Deponent, before he left the Guard, saw the Gentlemen of the first Deputation from the Magistrates and Town-Council to the Rebels go out, and return; and saw the Gentlemen of the second Deputation go out in a Hackney-Coach; but those of the first went out on Foot.

XL. Richard Lindsay, late one of the Bailies of Musselburgh, depones, That he did assist in getting together betwixt 140 and 150 Men in the Town and Neighbourhood of Musselburgh, to be employed in the Defence of the City of Edinburgh; and, upon Sunday the 15th September, marched them near to Cristall's; where Sir Robert Dickson, a former Witness, received them, and marched them that Night into Town. The Deponent returned to Musselburgh, and next Morning came into Edinburgh; and, about Nine o'Clock in the Morning, waited on the Pannel, and acquainted him, then in the Goldsmiths-Hall, that the said Men, who were quartered in the New Church Isle the preceding Night, were turned very impatient to be properly properly employed for the Defence of the City, for which End they had come; and that he wanted to have them delivered off his Hands. That the Pannel thanked him very much, and told him, he would send one to receive them immediately. That the Deponent returned to the New Church Isle to keep his Men together, where he remained about the Space of Half an Hour; and, at their Desire, he again waited upon the Pannel at the Goldsmiths-Hall, and acquainted him, that the Men had grown still more impatient, and desired they should be taken off his Hand: which the Pannel said should be done immediately; and sent for a Man that could not be found: Whereupon the Pannel desired him to return, and keep his Men together, and he would send one immediately to receive them. That he accordingly did return; and, after staying about a Quarter of an Hour with the Men, who began to blame him for bringing them to Town, he waited a third Time upon the Pannel, representing, as above; and the Pannel seeming to be very much surprised that Nobody had come near him, desired the Deponent to return to his Men, and that what he insisted for should forthwith be done. That, soon thereafter, one of the Bailies, Mrs., he thinks, and a Serjeant of the City-Guard, came; that they cast some of the Men, and swore the rest to be faithful to his Majesty; which last were delivered over to the Care of the said Serjeant, and a good many of the former listed with the Edinburgh Regiment, as they themselves told him. That he knows nothing of their having received any Arms; and that the Bulk of them returned that Night home.

XLI. Robert Bailie, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the 16th of September, there was a Motion made in Council, where the Pannel was present, that the City-Arms should be secured, by sending them up to the Castle. That the Members of it were divided in their Opinion; and the Majority of them thought that no Orders should be made for that Purpose; and that the Pannel seemed to be of the Opinion of the Majority; and that it appeared to him, that there was an evident Majority for the foresaid Opinion, though no Vote was put; and it was from what the Pannel said, that the Deponent took him to be of the Opinion of the Majority: And that the Pannel, according to his usual Custom, asked the Opinion of severals before he spoke on the Subject himself: And that it is the common Practice of the Provost of Edinburgh in Council, when any Proposition is made, to ask the Opinion of five or six, or sometimes more, of the Council; who, if they give it all one Way, he usually declares it to be the Sense of the Council, unless a Vote is demanded. That, in the present Case, though there was a Difference in Opinion, yet no Vote was insisted for; and, as the Majority had given the Opinion above-mentioned, in consequence thereof he refused to give the Order.

XLII. Hugh Hathorn, late Dean of Guild of Edinburgh, depones, That he does not remember, that the Pannel told him the Message that was delivered him by Andrew Alves from the Rebel-Army; and thinks he did not hear of it till about the Time, or a little before Andrew Alves was committed Prisoner. And depones, That he was present in the Goldsmiths-Hall, both before the Meeting in the New-Church Isle, and afterwards in the Council-House; in both which Places, the Goldsmiths-Hall and Council-House, there was a great many of the Council present; that there was also a great many other People who did not belong to the Council; and in neither of these Meetings does the Deponent remember any Proposal to have been made for securing the City-Arms in the Castle of Edinburgh: But remembers to have heard a Message sent, as the Deponent thinks, from some of the Out-Guards about the Ports or the Walls, to know what they should do with their Arms? And the Reason why this Message was sent, the Deponent believes to have been, That it was publicly talked, that the Volunteers, before this time, had delivered up their Arms; and the Answer made to this Message was, That they should secure them the best Way they could; and the Deponent thinks this Answer fell to be made by the Pannel, as he was in the Chair. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, whether this Answer was given as being agreeable to the Mind of the Council? depones, He did not hear the Opinion of any of the Council asked, nor did he hear any of the Council contradict it. And depones, That the Provost of Edinburgh cannot of himself, as he thinks, give out any of the Town's Arms to be used by the Inhabitants, without a previous Consent of Council; and he knows that the Fact is, when any of the Arms are given out, it is always done by an Order of Council.

XLIII. James Murray, Esq. Receiver-General of the Customs of Scotland, depones, That, upon Saturday the 14th of September 1745, he received a Letter from Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, desiring him to come forthwith to the City of Edinburgh; and that at the Request of the Pannel: And the Deponent accordingly that Night came. That the Deponent met the Pannel in the Street, and asked his Commands. He desired the Deponent to go to the Lord Justice-Clerk's; where he instantly went, and was followed in two Minutes by the Pannel. That there the Deponent was told, whether by the Pannel, or the Lord Justice-Clerk, he cannot tell, being both present, that the Rebels were within two Days easy March of the Town; and, as it was proposed to defend it, they desired that the Deponent would give his Advice and Assistance. To which he answered, That it was his Duty and Inclination to do every thing in his Power for the King's Service. After this Provost Stewart and the Deponent went to the Street; and the Pannel told him, there were several Town's Gentlemen met in a Tavern, and desired he would go there. That accordingly they went together; and Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who was there, told the Deponent, they had sent to him for his Assistance in the Defence of the Town; and, as they were ignorant of military Matters, and convinced that the Deponent understood more of them than they did, hoped he would give them proper Directions how to dispose of the Men they had in Arms, in the best Manner for the Defence of the Town: Then they told the Deponent their Numbers, which, so far as he remembers, they said, might be about eleven or twelve Hundred; but cannot be positive. That the Deponent dictated to them the Method of disposing their Guards; and some Rules of Discipline they were in that Hurry to observe; Guards to be immediately placed, Alarm-posts assigned, and, besides, continual Patroles. There were several Rounds appointed for that Night; and the Pannel was to go the grand Round after Midnight. That Orders were instantly given for disposing every thing according to those Directions. That the next Morning the Deponent went with Mr. Colin MacLaurin to visit the Walls, and Stations of the Guards, and ordered Barricadoes at the Gates. That, about Mid-day, he, the Deponent, coming to the Streets, met the Pannel, who told him, he had gone the grand Round, and was sorry to tell the Deponent, that, notwithstanding the strict Orders given, he neither found the Guards nor Centries alert; but that they were huddled together, under the Shelter of the Wall. That the Barricadoes were immediately set about, and, by Night, pretty far advanced. That next Day, being Monday, the Dragoons, and City-Guard, marched out of Town Westward; but about Four or a little before Four in the Afternoon, they returned in some Hurry, and the Dragoons retired towards Leith, and the City-Guard retired in good Order to the Town. That the Deponent observed this threw a Damp on the Spirits of the Inhabitants, who, till then, had shewn a good Countenance. That the Pannel, with many other Gentlemen, assembled in the Goldsmiths-Hall, sent for the Deponent. That the Deponent went immediately; and the Pannel made him some Compliments, and then asked him, if he thought the Town tenable? The Deponent told him, they had Hands enough; but that the Pannel, and the other Gentlemen present, were best Judges of their Hearts: But that, if they entertained any Thoughts of delivering up the Town, they were not to add to that Reproach, the Crime of delivering the King's Arms to the Rebels. And, being interrogate, whether any Mention was made by himself, or others in the Company, concerning the City-Arms? depones, That he did not at that time know, that the City had any Arms properly belonging to itself, other than what served the City-Guard. And that, after he left the Goldsmiths-Hall, having still some Confidence that the Town was to be defended, he went to his House, loaded his Pistols, put them in his Pockets, and came to the Street; where, observing a Party of armed Men marching up the Street, he asked them, where they were going? They answered, To the Castle, to deliver their Arms. Upon which the Deponent went to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and, with great Difficulty, got Access, and desired of the Pannel, that he would order the Netherbow Port to be opened to let the Deponent out of Town; that he being an Officer of the Revenue, it was unsafe for him to stay any longer; which the Pannel ordered accordingly. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, if the Deponent heard him express his Opinion anywise for defending the City? depones, That the first Time he came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, he heard the Pannel say, That, if the Town was to be defended, he would do his Duty, if he was to leave his Bones on the Walls: And he appeared to the Deponent to be very warm for the Defence of the Town; but that there was such a Confusion, he could not hear all that the Pannel said.

XLIV. David Lindsay, Writer in Edinburgh, depones, That he served as Lieutenant in Mr. Drummond, now Lord Provost of Edinburgh, his Company of Volunteers; and, being in the Laton-market with the said Company after the Resolution was taken by the different Officers of the Volunteers, the Deponent was sent by Mr. Drummond, as he thinks, to General Guest, to acquaint him, that the Volunteers were immediately to come up to the Castle, and deliver up their Arms, for that no good could be done by keeping them; for that the Town was to be delivered up: That, upon his coming to the Castle, he met with Major Robertson at the Castle-gate, who asked the Deponent, where he was going? To which he made Answer, that he was going to General Guest. The Major then said, Mr. I ask you what may be your Business? To which the Deponent made Answer, that he was come, at the Desire of Mr. Drummond, to deliver the above Message. To which Mr. Robertson answered, That the General knew all that already; and he expected them, without Loss of Time; and desired him to go back directly, and tell Mr. Drummond so much; which the Deponent accordingly did; and thereafter the Volunteers marched up, and delivered in their Arms.

XLV. John Hislop, Store-keeper of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That, in the Month of September 1745, the Deponent was Keeper of the Town of Edinburgh's Magazine, where their Arms and Ammunition were laid. That, at that Time, there was in the Magazine one Thousand two Hundred-Fifty Firelocks, besides two Hundred that were insufficient; by which he means altogether useless; and of the one Thousand two Hundred and Fifty, there was a great many that the Deponent would not give Half-a-Crown the Piece for; and the most of these were very old, but could fire: And besides, there was in the Magazine not quite two Hundred Bayonets, and about three Hundred Cartridge-Boxes in bad Case. That of Ammunition, there was about two Boxes, and a Bag with some loose Ball, and no Gun-powder; but that, in the Beginning of September, the Deponent got from the Powder-House four Hundred Weight of Powder. That, besides the above Arms that belonged to the Town of Edinburgh, there was the Arms of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, consisting of 75 Firelocks, Bayonets, and Cartridge-boxes. That the Powder and Ball was made up into Cartridges: And of the above Arms, there was one Hundred sent to Leith, but returned again to the Magazine, on Monday the 16th of September. That, by the Pannel's Orders, the Deponent gave, upon Sunday the 15th, betwixt fifty and sixty Firelocks to each Company of the sixteen Companies of Trained-Bands, except the Canongate-Head Company, who got but about twenty-four; and that thirty-nine Firelocks were given to the thirty-nine additional Men of the City-Guard. And, upon Monday the 16th, the Deponent having got Orders from sometimes the Pannel, and sometimes the Magistrates, being all his Masters, gave accordingly Cartridges to those who came for them; and, particularly, he gave five Hundred Cartridges to each of the three Companies of the Trained-Bands who that Day kept Guard; and a good deal to the Seceders, who kept Guard at the Infirmary. That, before the said 16th of September, all the Powder which was in the Powder-House was sent up to the Castle by Order of the Pannel: And, by the Pannel's Orders, on the said 16th, the Deponent got back from the Castle four Hundred and twenty-five Pound Weight, for the Use of the Cannon that were planted on the City-Walls, and for Cartridges; and the Deponent gave it out for charging the Cannon, and he gave Cartridges to such as called for them: And the whole Ammunition was given out, except about a fifty Pound Barrel: That, with respect to the Arms that were not given out, and the above Quantity of Powder, he received no Orders from the Provost, or any body else; and the Firelocks which he gave out, as above deposed upon, were never never again returned to him. That upon the 16th, the Deponent laid by the Keys of the Magazine, the Armoury, and the Wardrobe, in some secret Place, which his Servant Alexander Dryburgh knew. And, upon the 17th, after the Rebels got Possession of the City, he stepped aside, not thinking it proper to keep his own House; and the Account which his said Servant gave of the Keys afterwards was, That the Rebels threatened to break open the Doors of the Magazine, Armoury, Council-House, and Wardrobe; and therefore Bailie Mansfield came to Alexander Dryburgh, and advised him to deliver up the Keys of the above Places; which he accordingly did: And the Day thereafter the Deponent saw the Rebels carrying down Arms on their Shoulders along the Streets, which he apprehended to be the Arms belonging to the Town of Edinburgh. And depones, He got no Orders for securing, or bringing back the Arms which he had given to three Companies of the Trained-Bands that were upon Duty upon Monday Night the 16th; and that he was so fatigued, by sitting up three Nights before, that he was not able to sit up longer. And depones, That, after the Rebels had carried off the Arms, as above deponed upon, they delivered the Deponent the Keys of the Magazine, which was about fourteen or twenty Days after they entered the City. And, upon the Deponent's going into the said Magazine, he found no Arms there, except a few of the broken Guns above-mentioned; and even these were afterwards carried off by them. And, being interrogate for the Pannel concerning the Spades and Shovels that were brought to the Magazine on Monday the 16th, depones, That on that Day there were four Carts of Shovels and Spades, belonging to William Millar, Seedsman in the Abbey, sent up to the Magazine; and the Carter said to the Deponent, that Bailie Hamilton desired that he might take them under his Care and Custody; and the Deponent accordingly did so: And that on Sunday, the 29th of September, the Rebels came and carried them off down to the Abbey; but, upon the Proprietor's making Application for them, the Deponent heard him say, that he afterwards got them back.

XLVI. Alexander Dryburgh, Servant to John Hislop, the preceding Witness, depones, That in the Month of September 1745, upon Monday the 16th Day, in the Evening, he knew, that his Master, John Hislop, had secreted the Keys of the Town of Edinburgh's Magazine and Store-houses below a Form in the Council-house. And, upon the 17th, after the Rebels had entered the City of Edinburgh, and wanting Access to the Council-House, they threatened to break open the Door; and the Deponent by Accident meeting Bailie Mansfield, who knew that he had the Key of the Council-House, desired the Deponent to give the Key to the Rebels, rather than have the Door broke open; which he accordingly did: And, after the Rebels had got Access to the Council-House, they found out the Keys of the Magazine, Armoury, and Wardrobe, out of which they carried off all the Arms that were then to be found there; the Deponent having seen the very Arms carried down the Streets in Carts, and on Men's Shoulders; and that, when the Keys were again restored to his Master, and the Deponent had Occasion to enter into the Armoury, he saw no Arms there.

XLVII. Thomas Dalzell, one of the Captains of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, the Deponent was one of the Captains of the City-Guard, which then consisted, including Officers and Soldiers, of 126 Men. That, about Ten o'Clock of Monday the 16th of September, the Deponent, by Order of the Pannel, marched out with the whole Guard to the Colt Bridge, leaving only a few of the Men behind to make-up Cartridges. That they remained at the Colt Bridge till about Three o'Clock Afternoon, when, by Order of the Commanding Officer of the Dragoons, they marched back to Town, and went to the Court of Guard; where they received Orders from the Pannel, which was brought them by Mr. Orrock, to march two Squads of the Guards to the Grass-market, and to leave the other Squad at the Court of Guard. That the Deponent accordingly marched with the two Squads to the Grass-market, and received from the Pannel the Key of the Wicket of the West-Port, with Orders to allow Nobody to go out, or come in, but such as he could be answerable for. That the Deponent, and his Party, remained in the Grass-market till about Eight o'Clock at Night; and, about Seven o'Clock, as the Deponent thinks, he saw Bailie Yetts, Bailie Hamilton, and some others come from the Town to the West-Port, who, he was told, were a Deputation sent to the Rebel-Camp; but, some time before that, the Deponent had given the Key of the Wicket to one of the Captains of the Trained-Bands, Alexander Hepburn, who then kept Guard at the West-Port. That, about Eight at Night, Capt. Maitland, another of the Captains of the Town-Guard, brought the Deponent Orders from the Pannel to march his Men to the Court of Guard; which the Deponent did. And it being his Turn to be upon Guard that Night, he then went to the Pannel to receive his Orders, what Guard he desired to be kept that Night; and the Pannel ordered him to keep the ordinary Guard, which is a Squad, or a third Part of the Company, which then consisted of 126 Men; but the Deponent actually kept upon Guard 50 Men: And, by the Pannel's Orders, he sent a Detachment of these to keep Guard at the Netherbow Port; the Volunteers who had kept Guard there formerly, having left it. That the Detachment he sent first, consisted of 14 Men; but, as he was afterwards informed, that these had got themselves drunk, he was forced to change them; and, at last, that Guard was reduced to the Number of six Men; which was all that the Deponent could find that were fit for doing Duty. That the Deponent received Orders from the Pannel, not to suffer any body to go out or come in at the Port; but, upon Recollection, says, That these Orders were not given to the Deponent, but were carried by one Henderson to the Serjeant of the Guard in the Deponent's Absence, and by him sent with the said Detachment to the Netherbow. That the Deponent went to his own House about Four o'Clock, and did not see the Rebels come in at the Port; but was told by his Men at the Port, that before Five o'Clock, a Coach having come down the Street, and gone out at the Port, the Rebels took that Opportunity of rushing in, and seized the Centries, and took their Arms from them; and then marched up to the Court of Guard, and seized such of the Men as they could lay Hands on there, and took their Arms from them. That the Deponent soon after went in quest of the Pannel, to report what had happened. That he found the Pannel in a Tavern in the Writers Court, he thinks Mrs. Clarke's; and in Company with him, he found a Rebel-Officer, whom he afterwards knew to be Sullivan; and together with them, the Deponent thinks Bailie

Yetts, and several others of the Council; and the Deponent reported to the Pannel what had happened to his Guard. Depones, That the Guard-Soldiers had been greatly fatigued for several Days before, and had been under Arms by Four o'Clock in the Morning of Monday the 16th; so that, when, at Night, the Deponent marched his Men from the Grass-market to the Court of Guard, a great many of them were unfit for doing Duty. And, being interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That he had Occasion to observe the Town's Arms belonging to their Magazine, having picked out what he thought the best of them, in very bad Condition, several of them not fit for Use; many of them that would indeed fire, but of these, many that would not keep Priming. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th, the Deponent, with about 90 of the Town-Guard, and a Detachment of about 50 of the Edinburgh Regiment, marched out towards Corstorphin, to sustain the Dragoons; and, after they had passed the Colt Bridge in their Way to Corstorphin, there came up to them first, one Mr. Lindsay, and afterwards one Ormiston, who is a Copper-smith in the West-bow, and told them, that it was the Provost's Orders that they should halt there: But thereafter Mr. Henderson, who writes in the Council-Chamber, brought them Orders from the Provost to march forward to Corstorphin, and there to take their Orders from Col. Gardiner. And, being further interrogate for the Pannel, depones, That, when the Pannel, on Sunday Morning the 15th of September, ordered the Deponent to march to Corstorphin to sustain the Dragoons, the Deponent said, If he sent them there, he should provide them in better Arms; for their Arms were not fit for Service. Upon which the Pannel desired the Deponent to go to the Magazine, and pick out for them the best Arms he could find. But the Deponent answered, That there were no Arms in the Town's Magazine that he could depend upon. Upon which the Deponent got for his Guard the Arms that had been got for the Edinburgh Regiment, which were new Arms, and, as he supposes, had been got out of the Castle; and these were the same Arms that the Town-Guard had when the Rebels entered the Town, and were taken from them. And, upon a further Interrogatory, depones, That he did not get the whole Number of Arms himself from the Armoury; but, having got the Pannel's Allowance, he gave Orders to his Men, that such of them as thought their Arms not sufficient should, go to the Armoury, and leave them there, and take others in place of them. That the whole of them did not change their Arms, but the Bulk of them; and he believes about four-fifths of them went to the Armoury, and changed their Arms, as he directed.

XLVIII. James Tait, Goldsmith in Edinburgh, depones, That, in September 1745, both before and at the Time the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent was Keeper, and had the Keys of the Netherbow-Port; but the Night before the Rebels entered, that is, the Monday's Night, the Deponent was obliged to go to Bed at Eleven o'Clock at Night, having been kept out of Bed the two preceding Nights with the Volunteers; and that Monday's Night he committed the Charge of the Port to his Servant James Gillespie, whereby it happened that the Deponent was a-bed on the Tuesday's Morning when the Rebels entered the Port; and knew nothing of them till he was raised out of Bed, and saw them in the Town. That the Deponent received no Orders, either on the Monday Night, or any preceding Night, about the Manner of keeping the Port; it being the ordinary Custom, to open the Port as People called either going out or coming in; but upon the Monday's Night, the Deponent left at the Port six of the Town-Guard Soldiers, besides his above Servant James Gillespie.

XLIX. James Gillespie, Servant to James Tait, the preceding Witness, depones, That, in September 1745, when the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, the Deponent was Servant to the preceding Witness Mr. Tait, and Keeper of the Port under him. That, upon Monday's Night, the 16th of September, Mr. Tait left the Charge of the Port to the Deponent, and gave him Orders, whatever Chairs or Coaches were entering the Town, or going out, to open the Port, and let them pass. That the Deponent attended the Port that Night, together with six Centries of the Town-Guard Soldiers; and, betwixt Four and Five in the Morning, a Coach came down the Street, in order to go out at the Port; and the Deponent, agreeable to his Orders, opened the Port, and let it pass; and after the Coach was past, the Deponent shut one of the Leaves of the Port; but as he was shutting the other, the Highlanders rushed in upon him, and beat him back, and then possessed themselves of the Port, and entered the Town. Depones, That Nobody offered to stop the Coach from going out: That he knows not whether any of the Centries spoke with the Coachman; but he observed him to stop a little talking with one of the Waiters at the Port of his Acquaintance. And depones, That he did not say to any of the Soldiers that he had Orders to let out that Coach; nor could he, since he had no other Orders but the general Order above-mentioned; nor did any of the Soldiers stop him from letting out the Coach. And depones, That the Deponent had no particular Orders from the Pannel, or any of the Magistrates or Council concerning the Port.

L. Alexander Corfar, one of the Soldiers of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Night of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he was upon Guard as one of the Soldiers of the City-Guard; and, at Four o'Clock on Tuesday's Morning, was ordered, with five or seven more of his Brother-Soldiers, by the Serjeant of the Guard, to go to the Netherbow to guard it, and to relieve the like Number of Soldiers that were there before; and the Serjeant of the Guard ordered the Deponent not to permit any Person whatever to go out or come in at the Port. And the Deponent accordingly marched, and relieved the Guard at the Port: And in about Half an Hour thereafter, the Deponent, observing a Coach coming down the Street, sent two Men to meet, and stop it at the Fountain-well; but, as the Coachman would be forward, the Deponent went up and stopped it himself. That the Coachman said, He behoved to get out at the Port; but the Deponent said, He should not get out, unless he had an Order from Provost Stewart. The Coachman said, he had no Order from Provost Stewart; but that Provost Coutts had ordered him to be let out. The Deponent answered, Provost Coutts had now no more Power to give such Order, than any other private Gentleman; and he should not get out, without Provost Stewart's Orders. Upon which the Under-keeper of the Port who was James Gillespie, the preceding Witness, came came up, and said, That he had an Order to let out that Coach; but did not say from whom he had it. Upon which the Deponent answered, O, Sir, it is very well if you have an Order to let it out; you have the Keys of the Port, you must answer for it, and I have nothing to say. And being further interrogate, depones, That the Under-keeper had no Discourse with either the Coachman or the Postilion, before he told the Deponent that he had an Order to let out the Coach. Depones, That then the Port was opened, and the Coach drove out, and was not past the Deponent two Yards, when the Highlanders rushed in, and Lochiel gripped the Deponent by the Arm.

Then the Lord Advocate declared his Probation to be concluded.

Follows the Proof adduced for the Pannel's Exculpation.

I. John Coutts, Esq. late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, depones, That the Minutes and Orders of the Town-Council [admitted by the Lord Advocate, and Mr. Lockhart as Counsel for the Pannel] now shewn to him, were truly and really transacted, as therein entered, and signed by the Pannel as the Lord Provost, in Prefence of the Council; and that the Minutes of the Committee [in like manner admitted by the Prosecutor and Pannel] also shewn to him, contain the true Proceedings thereof; and the Deponent was one of that Committee. Depones, That the Resolutions of the Council were reported to a Meeting of the Inhabitants, which was called about the latter End of August; which Meeting unanimously approved thereof, and appointed a Committee of their Number to join with the Magistrates to consult with the King's Lawyers, and such Judges as were in Town, touching the Legality of such Measures as had been under Consideration, for the Defence of the Town. In Prosecution of which, there was a Meeting of the Committee, at least part of them, in the Lord Justice-Clerk's House; where his Lordship and the Crown-Lawyers assisted. That several Proposals for the Defence of the City were under Deliberation, and particularly the raising of a Regiment of 1000 Men; which the said Judges and Lawyers thought would amount to High-Treason, without the Sovereign's Authority was first given. There was some Conversation how such a Regiment could be maintained, if raised; and such of the Committee of Inhabitants and Magistrates as were present, were desired to sound the Inclinations of the Citizens and Inhabitants, how far they would contribute to the Expence of it; and it was recommended to the Lord Advocate, to write to some of the King's Ministers at London, to obtain his Majesty's Royal Sign-manual for levying the said Regiment. Depones, That he knows, that the Pannel, and other Magistrates of the City, received several Proposals for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence; most of all which were complied with: And he knows, that Letters were wrote by the Pannel to the Ministers and Magistrates of neighbouring Burghs, to take particular Notice of the Motions of the Rebels, and inform the Magistrates of Edinburgh thereof. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 8th of September, in the Evening, or at Dinner, he heard that the King's Sign-manual was come; and a Council was held next Day, the 9th, where it was produced; and a Committee was appointed to carry it into Execution, by levying the Men, taking in Subscriptions, and, in general, doing every other Thing in relation to it. The first Meeting of which was appointed at the rising of that Council, and afterwards they were ordered to meet twice a-Day. Depones, That he subscribed for the Maintenance of the Regiment some time after the rest of the Council had subscribed; and he observed the Pannel's Subscription to be 20*l.* per Month, which was higher than that of any other Subscriber before the Deponent. Depones, That there was a Provision of Meal, sufficient for the said Regiment, before the Rebels entered the City of Edinburgh, made by the Direction of the Pannel, and other Magistrates; and Arms were furnished to the Regiment from the Arsenal in the Castle. Depones, That he heard Mr. Joseph Williamson complain to the Pannel, that the publick Works went slowly on. To which the Pannel answered, 'I have given Warrants to press Workmen and Carts; the Execution of the Work is committed to a Committee, under the Inspection of Bailie Robert Bailie: What would you have me to do more?' And the Deponent knows, that Bailie Robert Bailie was at the Head of a Committee, who had Orders to carry on all public Works for the Defence of the City with the greatest Dispatch. Depones, That, upon the Approach of the Rebels, what Cess was owing by the City, was paid upon Saturday the 14th, by the Intervention of the Pannel; at whose Request the Deponent went down to the Royal Bank, to wait till such time as it was paid in; and the Deponent saw it paid; and he thinks, that the Pannel signed the Order for Payment of the Cess to the General-Receiver of the Land-Tax, directed to the Cashier of the Royal Bank, to be stated to the Debit of the Town's Cash-Account. That it consists with the Deponent's ponent's Knowledge, that the Pannel readily embraced a Proposal of the Lord Justice-Clerk's, of having Meetings and Consultations with several Noblemen and Gentlemen in and about the Town, to concert what was proper to be done at that Juncture; that he went to his Lordship, and told him, that he wanted Advice much, and would be very glad of such Assistance. Depones, That he knows no further of Application made for Gunners from the Urfula Man of War, other than that, upon Monday the 16th of September, he saw a Letter lying upon the Table of the Goldsmiths-Hall, which the Deponent casually took up, and read, dated from Lith, signed by he does not remember whom, directed either to the Pannel, or one of the City-Clerks, and bearing, that the Captain of the King's Ship in the Road could spare no Gunners; and that he thinks, but cannot be positive, it was before Dinner when he saw this Letter. Depones, That, about Eleven o'Clock of the said 16th of September, the Deponent went up to the Goldsmiths-Hall, where the Pannel and some of the Members of the Council were; or, rather, the Deponent having gone up to the Goldsmiths-Hall, the Pannel came up to him. That the Pannel took Hugh Hathorn and this Deponent aside, perhaps more of them, but he does not remember, and told them of the Message Andrew Alous had delivered to him, in Presence of Commisary Leslie, touching the Strength of the Rebel Army, which Alous represented as great; and that the City would be subject to military Execution, should they persist in the Defence of it; and asked their Opinion, if it would be proper to take Notice publicly of that Message, suggesting his Apprehension, that it might intimidate the Citizens and Inhabitants. That Mr. Hathorn and the Deponent gave it as their Opinion, it was better to hush the Thing, for the Reason already given: And, at this Time, the Pannel being called to visit some Part of the Walls, he immediately went, and the Deponent and Mr. Hathorn attended him, and they made a Round of a considerable Part of the Wall, and ended at or near the West-Port, and, when they came to the Graf-market, they were told of Mr. Alous's Message; whereby they saw the same was made publick. Whereupon the Pannel declared his Intention to go to the Lord Advocate's Lodging, to talk with him in relation to that Matter; but, meeting with some Company, the Pannel walked down with the Deponent some way towards the Luckenbooths; and then parted with the Deponent; and went backwards, as he believes, to execute his Intention; nor did he observe any Message delivered to the Pannel during this Period. He saw the Pannel soon after this, who told him he had been with the Lord Advocate; and that he had already signed, or was to sign a Warrant for committing Mr. Alous to Prison. Depones, That, on Monday Afternoon, about Three o'Clock, the Pannel went from the Goldsmiths-Hall, with Intention to go to the West-Port; and, about this Time, he heard of the Retreat of the Dragoons with some Precipitancy; and, before he left the Goldsmiths-Hall, he mentioned to the Deponent, that he had received a Petition from several of the Citizens and Inhabitants, desiring that the Town should not be defended, or, at least, not till a general Meeting of the Inhabitants was called to deliberate on its Defence: And the Pannel, in his Way to the West-Port, stepped into the Lord Advocate's Close-head, or went up to his House; he thinks it was only to the Close-head, he staid so short Time: The Deponent waited his Return; and in their Way to the West-Port, he told the Deponent he had signed a Paper, desiring, or consenting, that some Dragoons should be sent to the Assistance of the City. That, after the Pannel had given such Orders at the West-Port, which he judged the Flight of the Dragoons rendered necessary, he left it: And, in his Return, was surrounded by a great Crowd of People, whose general Cry was, 'Would he continue his Design of defending the Town, and have them all murdered, now that the Dragoons were fled?' And the Deponent observed, among those who made this Cry, Thomas Dundas younger of Lithem, who appeared to the Deponent to be full warmer on that Head than any of the rest, though his Brother Laurence declared, on the contrary Side, for the Defence of the Town. To which the Pannel replied, 'Would they now be guilty of Cowardice in giving up the Town, after obtaining his Majesty's Sign-manual, and doing so much for its Defence? and a great deal more to that Purpose, in Answer to their repeated Cries.' That, when the Pannel returned from the West-Port to the Goldsmiths-Hall, where a good Number of the Council, and many of the Inhabitants were assembled, it was proposed to, and agreed by him, forthwith to send Deputies to the Lord Justice-Clerk, the Lord Advocate, and the Solicitor; and Messengers were sent to each of them respectively, desiring them to come and assist the Pannel with their Advice: But, soon after, the several Deputies returned, and reported, that all of them had left the Town. Depones, That, immediately after this, the Pannel sent for the Officers of the Trained-Bands and Volunteers; and desired to have their Opinion upon the Defence of the City; and addressed himself to them in Substance to the following Purpose: 'That he hoped they would not now suffer Cowardice to poison their Councils; and that, after obtaining his Majesty's Royal Sign-manual, and doing so much with Spirit, they would not now think of giving up the Defence of the City: That, for his own Part, he would go to the City Walls, and to the Place of greatest Danger; and, so long as he could find ten Men to stand by him, he would persevere in the Defence of it.' That several of the said Officers came, and were thus spoke to; but few of them seemed to be inclined to give their Opinion, or speak; but one Gentleman, Mr. Joseph Williamson, said to this Purpose: 'Since he saw the Pannel so firmly resolved upon the Defence of the City, he would attend, and share Fates with him; but he feared he should not be able to bring with him Five, Ten, or some such small Number of the Company wherein he served. That the Deponent in particular remembers he pressed Mr. Drummond to give his Opinion; which he declined; and, taking the Deponent aside, said, 'I am surprised, Sir, that you should insist on my giving my Opinion. You know I am not so independent a Man as you or the Pannel. I hold a Place of the Government, and it may be very inconvenient for me to deliver my Opinion in this Place.' That the Deponent desired the Pannel to ask Mr. Drummond's Opinion; who still declined to give it: And, as the Deponent had begun to relate Mr. Drummond's Apology for not giving his Opinion, he interrupted the Deponent, and again took him aside; and said, 'I am surprised, Mr. Coutts, you should insist upon my giving my Opinion, when you know, that the Provost has the Articles of Capitulation of the City in his Pocket some Days ago;' adding,

That he was told that Day at Dinner by the Earl of Horn, that as, upon Thursday preceding, he was shaving or dressing in the Lord Justice-Clerk's Lodging, the Window open, he overheard the Deponent, coming up the Bank-Close, saying, 'What need is there to keep all this Pother or Bustle about the Defence of the City, when the Provost has in his Pocket, Articles of Capitulation for surrendering it to the Rebels?' The Deponent replied, 'That that Tale carried very little Credibility with it; for what a ridiculous Thing was it, to imagine, that he, the Deponent, in one of the most publick Closes in Town, under the Windows of an Officer of State, should be roaring out a Story of that Kind. That he could himself give no Credit to the Story: For that, tho' of late there had been a Dryness between the Earl and him; yet he looked upon the Earl as a Man of Honour, that could not be capable of saying such a Thing without any Foundation: so that certainly he, Mr. Drummond, must have mistaken his Lordship. And the Deponent added, Mr. Drummond, let us not now be talking of these Things, 'till afterwards, that the Earl, you and I have Occasion to talk about it. That, after what passed between the Pannel and the Officers of the Volunteers, Captain James Murray and Major Thomas Cochran came in to the Meeting; and the Pannel desired them to give their Opinion, if, or not, the Defence of the City should be continued: But both of them declined to give any, joining in Sentiment, that the Pannel, who best knew the Inclinations of the Citizens and the Inhabitants, was by much fitter to determine that Point than they; and that the Decision of it must ultimately land upon him. That the Pannel having again pressed Mr. Murray to give his Opinion, and to figure himself in the Pannel's Stead, and declare what he would do if that were the Case; Mr. Murray replied, 'I do most heartily pity you, my Lord Provost. I cannot, nor can any Man advise you; you must yourself decide it; and I am afraid you will get very little Advice.' Depones, That, much about this Time, Walter Grovet, Collector of the Customs at Allea, came in to the Meeting with a Message, whether in Writing or verbal he cannot say, from the Lord Justice-Clerk, or the Lord Advocate, or both, desiring the Pannel to give an Order for bringing some Dragoons in to the City. To which the Pannel answered, 'That he had already given his Consent or Order for bringing in one Hundred Dragoons, at the Desire of the Crown-Lawyers; and that he could not comprehend what the Meaning was, why an Order should be asked this Day for bringing them in, after what past last Night: But their Lordships were best Judges what was for the Service of the Government: If they should judge it for it, to send them in, they shall be received, but I will not now make an Order; because, if I should, and if they should come in, and the City and they fall into the Hands of the Rebels, I might be charged to have ensnared so many of his Majesty's Troops; if I should refuse to admit them, I might be blamed for rejecting a Succour which might have relieved the City: Let their Lordships therefore give their Decision, which I shall obey. And, as Mr. Grovet was departing, the Pannel called him back, and said, to prevent Mistakes, he would send a written Answer; which accordingly he did. And the Answer referred to in Mr. Craigie's Deposition being shewn to the Deponent, depones, it is the Answer then sent by the Pannel. Depones, That while Bailie David Baird was arguing in the Goldsmiths-Hall against defending the Town, because it was not tenable, Principal Wishart and Bailie John Wilson came in, and a great many others followed; and the Principal and Bailie averred, that no Man but a Jacobite would maintain such an Opinion. Upon which such a Hubbub arose, and so many People crowded into the Room, that the Deponent himself moved, that they should adjourn to some larger Place, where those who had a mind to speak might be better heard; and then the Cry was, the New Kirk Isle; to which the Meeting adjourned. That, in the Parliament-Close, they met a great many People in their Way, insomuch that the Deponent was carried off his Feet by the Crowd to the South-side of the Statue; and the Cry of the People who surrounded him was, praying the Deponent to prevail with the Pannel not to draw Destruction upon the City by a fruitless Opposition. That the Deponent followed the Pannel and a Multitude of the Inhabitants to the New Kirk Isle; where, at first, there was such a Noise, that he could hear nothing that past; but the Pannel at length prevailed so far in quelling it, that the Deponent could hear him say, 'That the Purpose of that Meeting was, to consult with them touching the Defence of the City; and made to them much the same Expostulation as he made formerly to the Captains of the Volunteers, so far as the Deponent could hear. That he heard Principal Wishart move, that the Meeting might be purged of Jacobites. To which the Pannel, or Somebody, answered, 'It would not be easy to distinguish a Jacobite from a Whig by their Countenance. That the Reverend Mr. George Logan begun to speak for the Defence of the City, but was soon interrupted by a great Noise, and a Cry, that That was impossible. Upon which he thinks the Pannel said, 'It is impossible to collect the Voice of every one. Shall I put the Question, whether the City shall be defended, or not?' Upon which the Cry of the Generality was, 'That the City could not be defended. And at this Period a Letter was brought into the Meeting, he does not know how; but he saw it first in the Hands of Deacon Walter Orrack, who, having broke it up, said, it was signed Charles P. R. Upon hearing of which, the Pannel forthwith said, 'I cannot be Witness to the reading of this Letter,' left the Chair, and went out of the Meeting to the Goldsmiths-Hall; whither several of the Council and of the Inhabitants followed him, and, among the rest, the Deponent. That the Letter appeared again there, brought, as he believes, either by the said Deacon, or William Henderson, one of the Clerk's Servants. And it being proposed by some that it should be read, it was urged by others, that to read it, would be Treason. Upon which it was moved and agreed to, that the Opinion of the Assessors should be taken; who thereupon were sent for: But it was reported they had all left the Town, except Mr. Patrick Haldane, who would be with them immediately. That, when he came, his Opinion was asked, if it was proper to read the Letter or not? and the Pannel, or some other Person, he does not remember who, told Mr. Haldane, it was a Letter signed Charles P. R.; upon which Mr. Haldane said, 'it was a Matter too high for him to give his Opinion in; and immediately rose from his Seat, and went out of the Goldsmiths-Hall: The Deponent followed him to the Door, and pressed him to give his Opinion; but he still declined. And being interrogated upon the Part of the Pursuer, if the Letter was begun to be read before Mr. Haldane left the Hall? depones, That said William Henderson, upon Mr.

Haldane's coming in, took up and began to read the Letter; but he was immediately stopped, and ordered to desist, by some Persons in the Meeting; he does not know by whom; but Mr. Haldane was one of those who stopped him, as the Deponent thinks; and he believes he might have been one of them himself. That, upon this, the Pannel complained, that he was now also deserted by his Assessors. Depones, That, after this, the Letter was begun to be read; and the Deponent, being at a little Distance, said, What is the Meaning that this Letter is begun to be read? To which some one of the Meeting answered, that it was necessary it should; that it might be known what Threatenings it contained against the City. That, a little after reading this Letter, it was proposed by some one in the Meeting, who he does not remember, that a Deputation should be sent, to desire, that until they could make a proper Answer to the Letter, nothing should be done against the City; the Intention of which was, to gain Time; the Purpose of the Meeting being to call the Burgesses and Inhabitants to deliberate upon that Affair. And accordingly, Bailie Hamilton, Bailie Inglis, Bailie Yatts, and Conveener Norris, were sent out with the said Message, about Eight o'Clock. And the Paper, marked Number 2, mentioned in the List of Writings annexed to the Libel, being shewn to him, depones, That it was the Return to the first Deputation. Depones, That the said Paper being laid before the Meeting, then in the Laigh Council-house, the Pannel immediately observed, that there was one Condition in the Paper that he would rather die, as submit to, namely, the receiving the Pretender's Son as Prince-Regent of Scotland, as he was tied by Oath to another Master; which appeared to be the common Opinion of the Meeting. And therefore, after a long Argument, a second Deputation was agreed, and determined to be sent out about Two o'Clock in the Morning; and five Deputies were sent, whereof the Deponent was one, with Instructions, begging a Delay till Nine o'Clock in the Morning, to the end the Meeting might have Opportunity to converse with the Citizens, who were then a-bed; which also was calculated to gain Time; which they chused to do, because they had heard, before the Return of the first Deputation, that Sir John Cope, with the Troops under his Command, were seen off Dunbar. And the Paper marked Number 3, in the said List, now shewn to the Deponent, was the Fruit of the second Deputation. That he remembers to have seen a Sergeant of the Castle, between Seven and Eight in the Evening, come in to the Meeting in Goldsmiths-Hall, who delivered a Message, which the Deponent did not hear; but heard it repeated by some of the Members of the Meeting to be this, That General Guesf sent him with Orders, to desire of the Pannel an Order to spike up the Cannon upon the Walls of the City, and to knock off the Trunnions; and that the Deponent whispered to some of his Neighbours that, considering the Threatenings in the said Letter, might it not do as well to make Answer to the Message, that the Pannel could give no express Order; but to acquaint the Sergeant, that the General might send and render the Cannon useless; which he should be at full Liberty to do. And accordingly, the Deponent, and the said William Henderson, desired the Sergeant to spike up the Cannon himself, or to do with them as he pleased. And the Adjutant of the Edinburgh Regiment having come in much about this Time, to ask how he should dispose of their Arms, he was also told that he was at Liberty to dispose of these Arms as he pleased, by the Deponent, who left it to William Henderson to explain the Reason thereof to the Adjutant. Depones, That, being fatigued, he went to take a Refreshment in Mrs. Clarke's; and during his short Absence of a Quarter of an Hour, the said Mr. Grosflet came to the Council, which was then more regularly met than formerly, with only a few Inhabitants; And, upon his Return, he found them in the Laigh Council-House; and a Letter, sent by Express from Mr. Fall to the Deponent, which had some-how fallen into Mr. Grosflet's Hands, had been just then laid before the Council, and read before the Deponent came in, as he is inclined to believe, because the Letter gave notice of General Cope's Arrival off the May; and he was told by some of the Council, that Bailie Mansfield had been sent out, if possible, to stop the Deputies of the first Deputation from executing it. That the Letter was again read after he came in, and delivered to him. That, upon this, they began again to consider, if the Defence of the City might not be refused. And while some People were talking, that the Volunteers should take Arms again, and others, that the Dragoons should be brought in; leaving these Things to be determined by the Meeting, the Deponent, Mr. Grosflet, and Mr. Lindsay, Secretary at War, were sent to General Guesf, to know of him, whether, if the Defence of the City should be refused, he would deliver out Arms to the Volunteers, and recall the Dragoons? To which he answered, That they might put the City-Arms in the Hands of such as were well-disposed; and, if the Provost should write him, that there was a good Spirit appearing in the People, and desire him to deliver out the Volunteers Arms, probably he might do it; and that he had sent Orders for recalling the Sergeant from rendering the Cannon useless; but that he judged it absolutely necessary for his Majesty's Service, that the Dragoons should be ordered to join General Cope, without whose Assistance his small Body of Men could not act. That the Deponent, Messrs. Grosflet and Lindsay, returned to the Council. That, by the Way, Mr. Grosflet and the Deponent agreed, at Mr. Grosflet's Request, that they should mention nothing of bringing in the Dragoons to the Town, because it was a clear Point they could have none of them, and it might intimidate the Inhabitants if they knew so much. However, the Deponent judged it his Duty to whisper the Pannel, that for the Reasons above assigned, he could not hope to have any of the Dragoons brought in. They found the Council still arguing upon the same Subject they left them upon, some proposing one Thing, some another, and some to ring the Alarm-bell. That, soon after this, Mr. Webster said, It was impossible to think of defending the City, without the Dragoons were brought in for its Assistance. Upon which Mr. Grosflet rose up, and said, 'Then I will go and fetch in the Dragoons;' and going to the Door, the Deponent followed him, and said, 'How can you impose so upon the Meeting, when you know from General Guesf that you can have none of them?' To which he replied, He could perhaps persuade Brigadier Fowkes to bring them in. Provost Drummond went along with Mr. Grosflet, and neither of them returned. That, immediately after this, Mr. Lindsay proposed to the Pannel, to get out the Arms for the Volunteers. To which he answered, That it was proper for him first to know what Disposition there was among the Inhabitants to make use of them. That, as to the Proposal of ringing the Alarm-bell, it was observed, and agreed to, it would be doing great Injustice to the Deputies, to ring it till they should be returned: And Dean of Guild Haldane observed, that if they did, they might expect to have the Deputies hanged like Rats, it being probable the Rebels were within hearing of the Bell. That the Deponent being one of the second Deputation, he remembers, when they went out to the Rebel-Army, they met with the late Lord George Murray, whom they applied to, and prevailed upon to second them in procuring the Delay proposed. That the late Lord George Murray went into the Room in which the Pretender's Son was; and the Deponent could hear, though indistinctly, so much of the Conversation, as convinced him, that the said Lord George was endeavouring to persuade the Pretender's Son to comply with it; and that he refused to do it; which the said Lord George came out, and reported to the Deputies: But, upon second Conversation with them, they prevailed upon him once more, to try if he could obtain the proposed Delay; which he accordingly attempted, but was refused; and the Deponent could hear the Pretender's Son say, 'My Lord Elcho, Lord George has not Spirit to put this Order in Execution; you must go and do it for him.' Upon which the late Lord Elcho came out of the Room from the Pretender's Son, and bid the Deponent, and the rest of the Deputies, to get them gone. That the said Lord George Murray followed the Deputies out, and whispered to the Deponent, I know your Pinch; you want to have the Consent of your principal Inhabitants: Make haste to Town; you will have an Hour or two to obtain it. That the Deputies made all the Haste they could to return, and went directly to Mrs. Clarke's; where they understood the Pannel and the Council were. The Pannel, who was asleep, was roused. The Deputies reported their Answer, and what Lord George Murray had said. The principal Inhabitants were ordered to be gathered together immediately. Some few of them, and particularly Mr. James Ker, now Member of Parliament for the City, were come, when Notice was brought, that the Rebels had broke into the Town, and made themselves Masters of it: Which put an End to all further Deliberation.

II. William Forbes, one of the principal Clerks of the City of Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday the 16th September 1745, he came to the Goldsmiths-Hall about Three o'Clock in the Afternoon; where he found the Pannel, as he appeared to him, in a very great Passion; some of the Councillors were about him, and several other of the Burghers and Inhabitants of the Town. The Deponent went up to him, and asked him the Occasion of the Disorder he seemed to be in. The Pannel answered, That he had got a Paper into his Hands, which he by no means relished, and thought it was somewhat seditious: For that the Scope of it was, that the Town should be surrendered; which he swore he would not consent to. That, at this Time, the Crowd that was in the Room called aloud upon the Pannel, to take the Advice of the Inhabitants; but he told them, that he would listen to no Advice in a Matter of this Kind, till he had taken the Opinion of abler and better Counsellors. Upon which several Persons were sent to all his Majesty's Officers who usually resided in Edinburgh, humbly to beg that they would meet with them, and give their Opinion what was proper to be done in so critical a Juncture. That the Messengers sent, returned with a Report that they were all gone out of Town. The Pannel therefore, finding, that he could not have the Happiness of the Counsel of the Civil Officers, was resolved to call for the Assistance of such of the Military Officers as were in Town, and the Officers of the Volunteers. That, upon Messages sent, Major Thomas Cochran and Captain James Murray came to the Hall, as also a great many of the Officers of the Volunteers. That, upon their coming in, the Pannel opened to them the difficult Circumstances that he and the City were under at that time, and prayed their Advice. That such of the Officers of the Volunteers as were present, declined giving any Advice, except Mr. Joseph Williamson; who said, That, from the Beginning, he was determined to stand to the Defence of the City to the last Drop of his Blood; but that he was sorry to say, that he found some Alterations upon the Spirits of the People: For that, in the Company in which he was an Officer, there was not above six or seven of the Volunteers of that Company could be found. That the Pannel did, upon this Occasion, warmly exhort the People that were about him, to stand to the Defence of the City, representing the Expence they had already laid out in order to the Defence of the City; and that they had lately pledged their Faith to his Majesty, that they would, to the utmost, stand for the Support of his Person and Government, and for the Defence of the Town. The Pannel then addressed himself to Major Cochran and Captain Murray, who were the only two of the Military that could be found; and told them, that their Advice was necessary in a Matter of this kind, because of their Knowledge and Experience in these Matters. To which Captain Murray replied, that he regretted extremely the unhappy Situation of Affairs in general, and the Pannel's Case in particular; that he pitied him, because he foresaw, that the Decision of this important Question would chiefly lie upon him; and added, that if the Trained-Bands and Volunteers did not stand to their Arms in the Defence of the Town, it was a Matter of the greatest Consequence, that the Arms delivered out by the Government should not be suffered to fall into the Hands of the Rebels: And then, turning about to the Deponent, said, with an Oath, If they do, some People may come to hang for it. That Bailie Baird offered his Opinion; which was, that he thought the Town not tenable; as did Mr. Thomas Dundas, and several others: But Principal Wilsart, and some few more, were of a different Opinion. Whereupon the Principal said, None but Jacobites would be for surrendering the Town. Then ensued a loud Cry from many, that the Opinion of the Inhabitants should be taken; and, for that end, it was proposed to adjourn to the New-Church Isle; where they accordingly went: But, in their Way to the New Kirk Isle, there were loud Cries from all Corners, not to expose the City to the Fury of the Rebels. While the Pannel was in the Midst of the Crowd, there came a Gentleman on Horseback, who said, He wanted to speak to the Pannel; and accordingly spoke to him to this Effect: 'That Lieutenant-Colonel Whitney had sent him back to bring away the Dragoons Baggage that was left in Town; for that the Dragoons were on their Way to Haddington. That the Deponent did not go in at that Time to the New Church Isle, having gone to refresh himself with a little Coffee; and, when afterwards he attempted to go in, he found the New Church Isle so chop-full of People, that he could not put in his Head. He then went towards the Cross, where he met with Bailie James Stewart, one of the Officers of the Volunteers, and several private Volunteers along with them. That he had in his Hands a Key, or two Keys, which made the Deponent ask him, What he meant? and where he was going? Who replied, He was going to give up his Charge with the Keys of the Netherbow Port; for he found that this Thing would not do. That thereafter the Deponent went to the Goldsmiths Hall, where, the Meeting in the New Church Isle having been dissolved, he found the Pannel, and a great many of the Council and Inhabitants of the Town, who were in a Dispute, Whether a Letter, that had been given in the New Church Isle, said to have been subscribed by the Leader of the Rebels, should be read, or not? The Pannel argued, That the Reading of such a Letter was at least bordering very near upon Treason; more especially if it produced an Answer. Upon the other Hand, some of the Inhabitants urged, That it was proper the Contents of it should be known, and they might afterwards consider what was proper to be done on it. That the Pannel upon this said, It was improper for them to come to any Resolution, until, at least, they had taken the Opinion of their Assessors; who were sent for; but none of them were found, excepting Mr. Patrick Haldane. To whom the Pannel represented, They were under a Difficulty with regard to a Letter signed Charles P. R.; that they wanted to be advised, Whether it should be read? and, if read, Whether it should be answered? and what Answer should be given? To which Mr. Haldane replied, It was a Matter of too high a Nature for him; and therefore he would give no Advice upon it. And upon an Interrogatory put to the Deponent for the Pursuer, Whether the first Mention of the Letter's being signed as aforesaid, was not on Occasion of Mr. Haldane's putting a Question to William Henderson (in whose Hands the Letter was), Who signed it? the Deponent, on Recollection, says, That he believes it was so. Depones, That, before the Pannel went to the New Church Isle, Mr. Grosset came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and represented, That he had a Message from Lord Advocate, and Lord Justice-Clerk, to let the Pannel know, That, if he would give Orders for 100 Dragoons to enter the City, they should be forthwith sent. That the Pannel to this replied, That he could give no Orders, because he had no Power over them: That he was a little surprised with the Message, after what had happened in a Council of War held the other Night in Lord Justice-Clerk's House; where it was concluded not to be for his Majesty's Service that any of the Dragoons should enter the City, or Words to that Purpose; but that, if they were of Opinion, that it was for his Majesty's Service, and should order a hundred Dragoons, or more, he would receive them, and make them very welcome, and give them all the Assistance he could in Defence of the City. That Mr. Grosset insisted the Answer should be taken down and given in Writing; which was accordingly done; and the Deponent thinks it was to the above Purpose. Depones, That, while he was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, after the Meeting had come from the New Church Isle to that Place, he thinks about the Hour of Six, or after it, a Serjeant from the Cattle came in, and told the Pannel, he was sent by Gen. Guesf, in order to nail up the Cannon, if he would permit them so to do. To which the Pannel answered, That all Authority was wrested out of his Hands; but that Gen. Guesf might do what he thought was best for his Majesty's Interest or Service; and said, That the Town-Officers would shew them where the Cannon were. Depones, That, after the Meeting had left the Goldsmiths-Hall, and gone to the Laigh Council-House, the Deponent went in to them; where he saw two Ministers of the City, who were reasoning about the Surrender of the Town; and declared, that, as Things now stood, the Defence seemed impracticable: And, while this was the Subject of their Discourse, Mr. Grosset came in, and produced to them one Letter signed, but directed to Nobody, and another Letter also directed to Nobody, and unsigned: The first of the Letters importing, that the Troops had that Night landed at Dunbar; and the other, that the Fleet had been seen off the May, and would land that Night at Dunbar. Upon which the Pannel expressed great Satisfaction; and said, That, as long as there was any Prospect for defending the Town, he would not be for giving it up: But then it occurred to him, that the Volunteers had delivered up their Arms, and it would be difficult to get them again into their Hands; and that there was no Prospect of getting any Dragoons. Upon which a Deputation was made by the Meeting to Provost Coutts and Mr. Lindsay, to go along with Mr. Grosset to the General, to try if he would give Orders for bringing any Dragoons into the Town, and deliver Arms to the Volunteers. That, after they waited upon the General, the Report made by Mr. Grosset was, That he would go and bring in the Dragoons; and laying hold of Provost Drummond, they both went out. Upon an Interrogatory, the Deponent recollects, That this Offer of Mr. Grosset's was immediately after the Ministers had given their Opinion as above. However, Mr. Coutts reported to the Meeting, that no Dragoons could be spared to enter the City, since there was a Prospect of Sir John Cope with his Troops landing; because they would be of much more Service joined to the Foot that was with Sir John: And as to the Arms, reported, That there was no Reason to hope they would be delivered out, till it appeared that the Volunteers were more stable in their Resolution of defending the City. And depones, That when Provost Drummond, as he thinks, had proposed to ring the Fire-bell, to convocate the Volunteers, it was opposed by Dean of Guild Hathern, for this Reason, That this Signal might be understood by the Enemy, and provoke them to use the Deputies ill. Depones, That pretty late in the Evening of that Day, he was present in the Laigh Council-House; when he heard some People in that Meeting talking of a Message to be sent to Gen. Preston; and that Mr. Lauder was the Man to be named for that Purpose. What the Message was he was to be sent on, the Deponent did not then know; but heard them assign for a Reason of the Choice of Mr. Lauder to be sent to the Castle, That he was a near Relation of Gen. Preston's. That the Pannel, and some People about him, were the Persons he observed busied about the sending of Mr. Lauder to the Castle: And when the Deponent was, from Curiosity, asking, What the Nature of the Message was? he was answered, That it was improper at that Time to communicate it to any Person: But, when

Mr. Lauder returned from the Castle, upon the Deponent's asking him what Errand he went upon, he told him, That it was to prevail upon General Preston, to send down a Party to bring up the City-Arms; which he would not comply with. Depones, That upon Saturday the 14th of the foresaid Month, the Deponent, with Provost Coutts, and Mr. Hathern, accompanied the Pannel while he went round the Walls to visit the Works that were carrying on. That, where he observed the Workmen diligent, he encouraged them, and told them, they should be very well rewarded if they were diligent; and where he observed any of them, that he suspected to trifle with their Work, he chid and checked them; and told them, they should be paid accordingly. That, upon another Occasion, when Complaints were made, that Materials were wanting for carrying on the Work, (whether it was the same Day the Walls were visited as aforesaid, the Deponent cannot be positive, nor what Day it was, but that it was in the Period of Time when the City-walls and the Town were to be put in a proper Posture of Defence against the Rebels), he was present when the Lord Somerville and the Pannel joined as Justices of the Peace, in granting a Press-Warrant for procuring Men and Horses for carrying the Materials, and forwarding the Work. And, upon an Interrogatory by the Prosecutor, Whether the Deponent had ever related to any Person whatsoever this Circumstance of the Message sent by Mr. Lauder, or at any Time since the Year 1745, down to this Day? and being at the same time desired to recollect himself, and name any one to whom he had told it; the Deponent says, That he verily believes he had made Mention of it to several Persons; but until it came to be a Subject to be spoken of in this Prosecution, he could not with Certainty say who the particular Persons were: But he condescends on two different Persons, Mr. Ninian Cunningham, Writer, and Mr. George Dunbar, Merchant, to whom he has mentioned this; particularly about a Fortnight ago: Neither does he call to mind the Names of any of the Persons who were whispering with the Provost, when the Message was said to have been sent up by Mr. Lauder at this Distance of Time; but that the two Ministers he refers to in the former Part of his Deposition, were, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. Patrick Cumming.

III. William Macghee, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he is one of those who signed the Petition or Representation which was given in to the Pannel, marked No. 8, of the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters. That he was present when the said Petition was delivered to the Pannel, which was just at the Door or Entry to the Goldsmiths-Hall: That he seemed to be in a very great Passion about it; and, turning about in an angry Manner, when he had got up to the said Hall, said to those who presented it, 'What do you mean? Do you think by Numbers to force me to grant the Desire of your Petition?' and with that forced to the Door, and turned the Deponent down the Stairs. And that this happened in the Afternoon of the 16th September 1745.

IV. Francis Kemptie, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he was present on the Afternoon of the 16th September 1745, when the Representation, marked No. 8, of the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, was presented to the Pannel in the Entry to the Goldsmiths-Hall. That the Pannel was very much offended with the said Representation, and said, 'What! do you think to cram your Petition down my Throat by Numbers?' and then he turned away.

V. Thomas Cochran, Esq. one of the Commissioners of Excise, depones, That, upon the 15th of September 1745, he was with Brig. Fowkes, and several others, in the Lord Justice-Clerk's House, where the Brigadier proposed bringing in his Dragoons to the Town of Edinburgh: But this the Deponent argued against, as being a Thing altogether improper, considering the narrow and long Lanes that lead to all the Ports of the Town. That the Brigadier still persisted in thinking, that the Design was very right; and that he could force his Way out at any one of the Gates he pleased. However, there was no fixed Resolution of bringing the Dragoons to the Town, so long as the Deponent remained in Lord Justice-Clerk's House. Depones, That after the Deponent went from Lord Justice-Clerk's, he went to the Meeting of some Gentlemen in Mrs. Clarke's House, where Captain James Murray, the Pannel, and a great many others were; and there they made a Disposition of the several Corps of armed Men, into the different Parts of the Town: And the Deponent heard the Pannel give his Directions or Orders agreeable to the Dispositions then made. Depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September, the Deponent meeting Capt. Murray, he was told, That the Pannel sent for them both to come to him to the Goldsmiths-Hall; where they both accordingly went. And, upon their going in, the Pannel desired, first, That Capt. Murray would give his Opinion, which he accordingly did; and afterwards desired the Deponent might do the same, which he also did; and which was to this Purpose, 'That it was the Duty of every one to defend the City as long as they could; and if there was a Necessity for their surrendering, then they ought to take care, that the King's Arms should not fall into the Hands of the Rebels. And being interrogate, If he took any Notice of the Arms which belonged in Property to the Town? depones, He did not, for this Reason; That he knew, when the Town-Guard marched out that Day, as he thinks, the Officers would not accept of them to do Duty with, as knowing them to be altogether insufficient; and, for that Reason, they had a new Set delivered to them. And further, he gave Advice at the above Meeting, That, in case the Town was pushed, and obliged to surrender, and those who had the King's Arms had not Time nor Access to deliver them into the Castle, that then they should break them, rather than let them fall into the Hands of the Rebels. And depones, That the Pannel, upon hearing Capt. Murray's and the Deponent's Opinion, said to the Meeting, 'I want, Gentlemen, that you should also give me your Opinion; for it is by your Opinion I am to conduct myself: And if you come to a Resolution of defending the Town, I will go wherever the Danger is greatest, and defend it to the last.'

VI. David Baird, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September 1745, he was in the Goldsmiths-Hall with the Pannel, and a great many other Inhabitants of the Town of Edinburgh. That while he was there, Mr. Grosset came in with a Message from the Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk, making Offer of 40 or 50 Dragoons to the Pannel for the Defence of the Town, in case he thought fit to accept of them. The Pannel's Answer to this Proposal was, That he would neither desire nor give Orders for them; but, if they came, they should be welcome: For, if any Accident happened to the King's Troops, they, and not he, should be answerable for it. And the Deponent, upon hearing of the small Number that was proposed to be sent, said, What did 40 or 50 signify? If they sent the Whole, it would be something; but the sending such a small Number, could be to no other Purpose, than having their Throats cut, and the Houses and Shops plundered. That Mr. Groft insisted for an Answer in Writing, which the Pannel complied with, by giving him a Letter to the Lord Advocate and Lord Justice-Clerk. Depones, That, while the Deponent was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, he stood up, and spoke to the Pannel, and told, That he appeared there, not only for himself, but for several Hundreds of the Inhabitants, whose All was at Stake, and whose Wives and Children were in Tears; and demanded, that the Pannel would give the Inhabitants a Hearing before he came to any Resolution for defending the Town; which, after some little Time, was agreed to; and that the Inhabitants were to meet in the New Church Isle about Six o'Clock that Night; and that the Fire-bell should be rung for convocating the Meeting. That the Deponent having come to that Meeting, the Pannel said, That he was sorry for the Occasion of calling the Inhabitants together; but, as the Rebels were then come near the Town, he wanted to have their Opinion how he should behave, he himself being willing to hazard his Life and Fortune in the Defence of the Town. To which severals answered, That they would stand by his Lordship: But that, as the Dragoons had been seen running away, and the Inhabitants altogether dispirited, they thought it more advisable to make the best Terms they could; and all agreed, with an Exception of one or two, not to defend the Town. And, being interrogate, Whether the Meeting in the New Church Isle consisted of People well-affected to the Government, and of Rank and Substance in the Town? depones, That he thinks they were; and that Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Keir, Baxters, Mr. Thomas Dundas, Merchant, and several others, such as these, were there. And, while the Deponent was there, he saw Bailie Stewart come in, and deliver up the Keys of the Netherbow Port; and he was desired by the Pannel to stay; but he would not. That Sir George Preston came there, and told, That he and his Company had been delivering their Arms into the Castle; and that Mr. Glen, Minister, came there, and said, He was obliged to go away; and that a fourth Gentleman came there, and said, He was obliged to go and see to his own Safety.

VII. Walter Hamilton of West-Port, one of the Captain-Lieutenants of the City-guard of Edinburgh, depones, That, on Sunday the 15th September 1745, he marched out with the City-guard to sustain the two Regiments of Dragoons: And when the City-guard was marching betwixt Colt Bridge and Bruce Hill, he thinks, but is not positive, that there was some Stop; but does not remember by whom. However, this, upon Recollection, he remembers to have heard, That Orders were given by the Pannel to the City-guard to take their Directions and Orders from the Commanding Officer of his Majesty's Troops. Depones, That he had no particular Access to examine the Condition of the City-Arms; but he has heard, that they were of little Value, and unfit for Service: And this he has heard from the Soldiers in the Town-guard who are under the Deponent's Command. And further says, That when the Rebels made themselves Masters of the City-guard, the Soldiers had been so harassed with extraordinary Duty all the preceding Week, and by being under Arms for three Days before, amongst and with the Dragoons, that they were hardly fit to do any Duty.

VIII. George Lindsay, Depute-Town-Clerk of Edinburgh, depones, That he commonly attends the Magistrates as a Clerk. That he was present when Application was made to the Pannel and the Magistrates for putting the Town in a Posture of Defence; and was also present when particular Directions were given by the Pannel and the other Magistrates for carrying into Execution the general Scheme for defending the Town. And particularly knows, that Directions were given by the Pannel and the other Magistrates, that the Work should be carried on without Intermission Night and Day, Sundays not excepted; and Warrants were granted to impress Labourers and Carts: And when Complaints were made, that the Work was not going so speedily on as the Nature of the Case required, some of the Tradesmen were sent for by the Pannel, and challenged for not doing out the Work they had undertaken; and some of them having complained, that they wanted Labourers, fresh Warrants were signed for impressing them. Depones, That, about the latter End of August 1745, the Pannel signed several Letters to the neighbouring Ministers and Magistrates, and, as the Deponent thinks, about 12 or 14 in Number, desiring that they would send Notice, by Express on Horseback, when they saw any Body or Company of armed Men marching towards the City of Edinburgh. Depones, That the Deponent came into the Goldsmiths-Hall on the Forenoon of Sunday the 15th September 1745, where he saw Mr. Hopewell talking with the Pannel. That the Deponent understood, that Mr. Hopewell had come from General Gues, to acquaint the Pannel, that a Proposal had been made to him, that 250 of the Volunteers were to go to the Colt Bridge to support the Dragoons; and to desire the Pannel, that 50 of the Town-guard should go along with them. Depones, That the Pannel, at first hearing of this, doubted how far he could send the Guard out of the City; and said, That that Corps were more to be depended upon than the Trained-Bands. Upon which the Deponent told the Pannel, That, by the Act of Parliament constituting the Guard, he was allowed to send them a Mile from the City. And then Mr. Bailie, one of the Magistrates at that Time, said, That if the Volunteers were willing to go out to assist the Dragoons, the City-guard could not be better employed than to go along with them, as it might have the desired Effect of obstructing the Rebels Passage to Edinburgh; or Words to that Purpose. Upon which the Pannel said, 'You are in the right, Mr. Bailie: In place of 50, the whole Guard shall go, and so many of the new-raised Regiment as are levied.' And Orders were given, and they marched out accordingly. Depones, That, upon the 14th, the Pannel signed an Order for bringing into the Town all the Ladders, Ammunition and Arms that could be found in the Suburbs; and the same was given to an Officer, who brought in several Arms. Depones, That when Sir Robert Dickson's Volunteers came to Town, they were ordered to one of the Kirks; and Bread and Ale was given to them by Order of some of the Magistrates. That when the Pannel came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, the Deponent acquainted him of it; who said, it was very well; and he hoped, they had got it soon enough. Depones, That, upon Sunday's Evening, the Deponent understood, that the Pannel was in Mrs. Clarke's, with some of the Captains of the Volunteers, who were employed in making Dispositions for those who were to defend the City, in case of any Attack. That, about Twelve o'Clock, he came to the Goldsmiths-Hall, and said, he was to go the grand Round; and returned therefrom about Four o'Clock. Depones, That Mr. Fowkes came in to the Pannel, upon Monday the 16th in the Morning, and said to him, That as the Dragoons at Certhorpe had been under Arms all Night, they would greatly stand in need of some Meat; and desired it should be provided. That, in consequence thereof, some of the Magistrates sent to a Butcher to provide Beef, which was provided, and, by Order of the Magistrates, boiled in the different Taverns of the Town. Depones, That, upon Monday Evening, the Deponent was in the Goldsmiths-Hall, when Mr. Griffith and a Sergeant came from the Castle at different Times from General Gues, desiring the Pannel to give Orders for spiking the Cannon on the Walls. To which the Pannel answered, That he could give them no Orders; but that the General might give Orders for so doing, for there was Nobody to obstruct them.

IX. John Yettis, Merchant, and late one of the Bailies of Edinburgh, depones, That, upon the Afternoon of Monday the 16th September 1745, as there was a great Stir in the Town, upon Account of the Dragoons going Eastward in great Haste, the Deponent and the Pannel went to see the West Port shut; which was accordingly done; and a Party of the City-Guard and Trained-Bands were posted there. That the Deponent went from the West Port to Brislow Port, and found it shut; and afterwards went to Goldsmiths-Hall. As he came from Brislow Port to Goldsmiths-Hall, the People on the Streets were calling after him, Why would the Magistrates pretend to defend the City, when the Dragoons had gone Eastward? He found in the Goldsmiths-Hall the Pannel, several of the Magistrates and Council, and a great Crowd of the Inhabitants, who were crying out against any Attempt to defend the Town, since the Dragoons had gone away and left them. That the Crowd and Preb was so great there, that it was resolved to remove to the New Church Isle; and, when they came there, the Deponent observed a very great Crowd of the Inhabitants and Burghesses; to whom the Pannel addressed himself, saying, That, as hitherto they had made a noble Stand for the Defence of the City, he hoped they would now give it up: And, as for himself, he should be the first Man that would mount the Walls, in case of Danger. That, nevertheless, the Deponent did not observe, that the Pannel's Words made any great Impression upon the Audience; for the Generality of them continued to declare their Sentiments against defending the Town; and a few only spoke to the contrary. And being interrogate, If the Deponent was acquainted with all, or a great many of the People he saw there? says, That he was not acquainted with them all; but that he knew a great many of them, whom he always looked upon as People well-affected; and some of them were People of good Credit and Substance in the City, and others of them not. Depones, That he knew there were two Deputations sent to the Camp of the Rebels; and he himself was one of the Deputies; and that the great Scope of the Deputations was, to gain Time, among other Things, with a View of consulting with the Inhabitants, what was proper to be done. That, as he returned with the first Deputation, he met with some one or other, whose Name he does not remember, who told him, That Bailie Mansfield had been dispatched after him, upon an Information laid before the Pannel and Magistrates, by Mr. Groft, That Sir John Cope, in all Appearance, would very soon land; and that Bailie Mansfield, if he had overtaken the Deputies, was to have stopped them. However, coming too late, the Deputies returned with an Answer; wherein, among other Things, there was this Condition, That the Pretender's Son was to be acknowledged as Prince Regent; and, when this Condition was mentioned, the Pannel declared, That it was such a Condition as he neither would nor could submit to. And depones, That, in his Opinion, no Man in Life could do more for the Defence of the City than the Pannel did.

X. Hugh Hathorn, Merchant, and late Dean of Guild of Edinburgh, a Witness formerly adduced in this Cause for the Pursuer, and now adduced and examined for the Pannel, depones, That, after the Pannel's Return from the New Church Isle to the Goldsmiths-Hall, in the Afternoon of Monday the 16th of September, the Letter from the Pretender's Son, being the first in the List of Writings subjoined to the Criminal Letters, was read publicly in the said Goldsmiths-Hall: And as it was now generally thought, there was little Hopes of defending the Town, after the Volunteers had delivered up their Arms; so there was little said there about it. Depones, That, about the same time, a Message was brought to the Pannel by Robert Griffith, desiring an Order from the Pannel for nailing up the Cannon that were mounted on the Town-walls: To which the Pannel answered, That he might nail them up if he pleased; and a Town-Officer should be sent with him, to shew him where they were. Depones, That, on the Evening of the said 16th of September, after Mr. Groft had brought Advice of Sir John Cope's being seen off Dunbar, he and Provost Drummond went away from Goldsmiths-Hall, in order, as they said, to bring back the Dragoons; but they did not return. Depones, That the two Deputations that were sent out to the Camp of the Rebels, were, in the Deponent's Apprehension, intended in order to procure a Delay, and to gain Time to put the People in a better way, who were then in a great Hurry and Confusion. And further depones, That the Pannel's Subscription for maintaining the Edinburgh Regiment was £. 20 per Month; and the Deponent does not know that any Person subscribed so much.

XI. Mr. Robert Pringle, Advocate, depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September 1745, he had been all Morning with the Volunteers in the College-yard, till about Ten or Eleven Forenoon, after the Churches were convened; and then they separated: And the Deponent and Bailie Stewart came up the High-Street, where they met Dean of Guild Allan, who informed them of a Measure that had been resolved on, That 250 Volunteers, with the Town-guard, and some other Troops, should march out with the Dragoons, to support them. That Bailie Stewart and the Deponent were were pretty much surpris'd with the Measure, believing that the Volunteers were not quite fit for such Service; and supposing that the Gentlemen who had concerted that Measure were at Gen. Gues's Lodging, Bailie Stewart and the Deponent resolv'd to go down there, and lay their Difficulties before them. That, in the Connemore, they met the Pannel and Provost Drummond coming up in a Coach together; and they stopp'd the Coach upon seeing the Deponent and Bailie Stewart: And very soon the intended Measure was spoken of; and Bailie Stewart and the Deponent began to tell them their Difficulties; and Provost Drummond said, 'Gentlemen, for God's sake! do not spoil a good Measure,' and desired them to come into the Coach; which they did; and persisted in representing the Difficulties in executing that Design; and the Pannel said, 'Gentlemen, This is no Measure or Proposal of mine, but proceeded from a Voluntary Offer of Provost Drummond's, which, he said, would be readily agreed to,' or Words to that Purpose: And this he repeated two or three Times in their way coming up to Town.

XII. Walter Scot, Merchant in Leith, depones, That, about two Days before the Rebels enter'd the City of Edinburgh, there came a Person to the Deponent at Leith, with a Letter from the Pannel, to be sent on board the Man of War lying in the Road, and desired that the Deponent would forward it. That it was a sealed Letter: but the Bearer of it told the Deponent, That the Purport of it was to get Gunners to serve the Cannon on the Town-Wall. Depones, That the Deponent forward'd the Letter, as he was desired; and the same Person who brought it to him, came to him afterwards, and told him, he had got an Answer to it; which, the Deponent thinks, was address'd to the Pannel. Depones, That, after the Return of the foresaid Letter, a second Message came to the Deponent, from the Pannel, desiring, that a Search might be made in Leith for Gunners to serve the said Cannon. That such a Search was made, but no Gunners found, except one Macgill, Commander of a Customhouse-boat; and he was sent up to Town.

XIII. William Henderson, Writer, a Witness formerly adduced in this Cause for the Pursuer, and now adduced and examined for the Pannel, depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September 1745, the Pannel concurred with Lord Somerville, in granting a Prefs-Warrant for pressing Men and Carts, to carry Materials for repairing the City-Walls. Depones, That the second Week of the said Month of September, the Pannel granted a Warrant for searching, seizing, and carrying into the Town, all such Arms and Ladders as should be found in the Suburbs adjoining to the Town. Depones, That, on Sunday Morning the 15th September, the Deponent was order'd by the Pannel, to go to the City-Guard, and get 24 Men of the Guard-Soldiers and Edinburgh Regiment, to assist Baillie Bryden in mounting the Cannon on the City-Walls. Depones, That, upon Sunday the 15th of September, the Pannel, at the Desire of Gen. Gues, upon being advis'd by him, that 250 Volunteers had agreed to go out with the Dragoons to Corstorphin, to sustain them, order'd out the whole Men of the City-Guard, and 50 Men of the Edinburgh Regiment, on the same Service. That, at Two o'Clock Afternoon, the Deponent heard Mr. Forrest and Bailie Mansfield report to the Provost, That they had deliver'd his Message to General Gues, who said, He was surpris'd that the Volunteers had not march'd out with the Dragoons; and, had he known that they would not, he should not have order'd Hamilton's Regiment to decamp from Leith to Corstorphin, but would have order'd Gardiner's to march from Corstorphin to the Links of Leith. Upon which the Pannel said, 'The Blame shall not lie at my Door;' and immediately sent the Deponent, with Orders for the City-Guard, and the 50 of the Edinburgh Regiment, instantly to join the Dragoons, and to take their Orders from the commanding Officer of the Dragoons. That the Deponent immediately went out, and found the City-Guard and Edinburgh Regiment in a Field betwixt the Cole Bridge and Bruce-hill, with their Arms ground'd; and the Deponent told them the Orders he had from the Pannel. Depones, That Capt. Dalyell then told the Deponent, That a Serjeant and 16 Men had been left at the Court of Guard; and that, if any thing should happen, it would be proper that they should be sent after them: And, upon the Deponent's reporting this to the Pannel, he immediately order'd the Serjeant and 16 Men to follow their Corps; and the Guard was supplied with 28 Constables. That, at the Deponent's Return from the Cole Bridge, which was about Five at Night, he found the Pannel in the Goldsmiths-Hall. That, betwixt Seven and Eight, the Deponent call'd at Lord Justice-Clerk's, and was there told, the Pannel was in that House. That, betwixt Nine and Ten, he sent for the Deponent to Mrs. Clarke's, to write out the Orders for the several Guards. That from thence the Pannel went to Goldsmiths-Hall, and, after Twelve at Night, went the Grand Round. Depones, That, upon Monday about Ten o'Clock, a Message came to the Provost, signifying, that the Dragoons wanted Provisions. Upon which the Pannel immediately sent for Mr. Steedman Vintner, and order'd him forthwith to provide as much Beef and Cheese as should be necessary for them. That, about Eleven o'Clock, Col. Clayton came to the Pannel, complaining, that no Victuals had been sent them. Upon which the Pannel immediately sign'd Prefs-warrants, for impressing Carts to carry out Provisions, and to go to the Fleish-market and Cheesemongers Shops, and take as much Cheese and Beef as was necessary, and get the Beef boiled in several Taverns; and recommended it to the Deponent to see these Orders executed: Which the Deponent accordingly did; and Bailie Gavin Hamilton went along with him. Depones, That, after Mr. Groset had, on Monday Evening, brought the News of Sir John Cope's being seen off Dunbar, and, as the Deponent thinks, about Seven o'Clock of that Evening, the Pannel sent the Deponent to the Guard at the Netherbow Port, which was then a Serjeant's Guard, Part of the City-Guard, with Orders to allow Nobody to go out or come in at the Port. That the Deponent went accordingly, and deliver'd his Orders to the Serjeant of the Guard, whose Name was Riddel.

XIV. George Lauder, Surgeon in Edinburgh, depones, That, on Monday Evening the 16th September 1745, about Seven or Eight of the Clock at Night, (he is sure it was not then quite dark,) the Provost, and a good many of the Town-Council, being then convened in the Council-Chamber, the Provost, now Pannel, said to them, Gentlemen, I think it would be proper to take Advice of the Officers of the Castle, or to let the Officers of the Castle know the Situation we are in by the Letter we have received from the Rebels Camp, threatening military Execution in case we should put out of the Way any of our Arms or military Stores, and to see if they shall think proper to do any thing. Upon which one in the Company said, That the Deponent would be a proper Person to be sent with such a Message to Gen. Preslon, because of his Relation to him. Upon which the Pannel directed the Deponent to go to the Castle, and acquaint Generals Preslon or Gues of the Situation the Provost and Magistrates were in, in respect of the said threatening Letter, on account whereof they durst do nothing themselves with the Arms or military Stores; and to see whether these Generals would think proper to do any thing in it. That, when this Message was propos'd, and agreed to, there were present in the Council-Chamber, besides the Pannel and the Deponent, Mr. Treasurer Forrest, as the Deponent thinks, and Mr. Orrock, and several other Members of the Council, whose Names the Deponent cannot recollect, and Mr. William Forbes one of the Principal Clerks, and Mr. Lindsay Depute Clerk; and the Message was propos'd, and agreed to openly, and above-board. That the Deponent went immediately up to the Castle; and, in the Way, pass'd Ensign Robertson, and a Party of the Castle-Soldiers, standing a little above the Weigh-house. That, when he came to the Castle, the Deponent call'd first at General Preslon, but was told, that he was gone to bed; and from thence he went to General Gues, and began to deliver him his Message from the Provost and Council, of the hard Situation they were in, by reason of the foresaid threatening Letter, in case they should put out of the way any of their Arms or military Stores; and then the General cut him short, and said, What then? Do you intend to deliver up your Arms to the Rebels? No, General, answer'd the Deponent; had that been our Intention, I had not come here; but I am sent to acquaint you of the Terror the Inhabitants are in; and that we dare not do any thing ourselves, for fear of military Execution: and therefore, if any thing occurs to you, you may do it; or Words to that Purpose. The General answer'd, And what would you have me to do? Will your Provost give me a written Order to send a Party for the Arms? No, replied the Deponent; that is what neither he nor the Council can do; for that would be constructed the same thing as if they did it themselves. That the General appear'd to be in a Passion, and said, That is like the rest of your Provost's Conduct; I will send no Party, unless he send me a written Order. And then Robert Griffith came in, and told the General, that the Party with Ensign Robertson were in the Streets, waiting his Orders. Then, said he, recall the Party, for the Provost will give me no written Order; and, unless he give me one, I will send no Party. Depones, That he now also recollects another Expression he had to the General, to wit, That, tho' we dare give you no written Order; yet, if you will send a Party, I don't believe that any of those who are possess'd of the Arms will refuse to deliver them. That the Deponent returned from the Castle to the Council-Chamber, and report'd to the Pannel, and the other Persons present, openly, and above-board, the whole that had pass'd betwixt General Gues and him; and remembers, that the Pannel said, I hope you took care to hint to the General, that he might send a Party if he had a mind; or Words to that Purpose. And further depones, That Mr. Griffith first went away from the General, and the Deponent immediately follow'd him; and, just as the Deponent was coming away, the General said, What do you intend to do with your Cannon? The Deponent answer'd, 'I fear, General, they must run the same Fate with the rest.' And the General replied, I don't believe they are of much Use. And, being interrogate by the Pursuer, depones, That the Matters above deponed upon, happen'd, in point of Time, before the Message that Mr. Groset and Mr. Coutts were sent with to the Castle. And, being further interrogate, depones, He does not remember, whether there was any Conversation in the Council afterwards, when Mr. Groset and Provost Drummond were there, upon the Subject of the City-Arms.

XV. Archibald Stewart, Merchant in Edinburgh, depones, That he was Praeses of the Society of Constables in the Year 1745. That, on Sunday the 15th September, in the Evening, the Pannel sent the Deponent, with a signed Order, address'd to Mr. Lyon Store-keeper of the Castle, for Matches for the Use of the Cannon mounted on the City-Walls; by virtue of which he received from him two Coils of Matches; for which he granted his Receipt on the Back of the Order; which was left in Mr. Lyon's Hands; which Coils he forthwith brought down, and deliver'd into the Goldsmiths-Hall. That a very little while after this, by virtue of another signed Order from the Pannel, he search'd a waste House in the Lawn-market, belonging to one Mr. Norvel, for Arms and treasonable Papers, which were suspected to be in it; but which, after a careful Search, was found to be a Misinformation. That, upon Monday Afternoon, the 16th September, about Three o'Clock, he attend'd the Pannel from the Head of Forrester's Wynd to the West Port; at which Place he the Pannel visit'd the Barricadoes; and desired the Deponent to get up upon the Town-Wall, to look-out for one Hundred Dragoons, which he expect'd in Town, for the Defence of the City: which accordingly the Deponent did; and remain'd there for about a Quarter of an Hour; and when he came down, desired one of the Captains of the Guard to send up two of his Men to keep the same Look-out, that the Ports might be readily opened when the Dragoons appear'd; and thereafter attend'd the Pannel in his Return from the West Port, from whence he intended to go to Bristow Port: But, in his Way, he was accosted by Mr. Thomas Dundas younger of Latham; who desired to know of the Pannel, if he intended to persist in the Defence of the City? and said, That he did not ask this out of a vain Curiosity, but at the Desire of several substantial Inhabitants of the City, whose Lives and Fortunes were at Stake, and who, as well as himself, would take their Measures according to his Resolution. To which the Pannel replied, 'You know, Mr. Dundas, that, at the Desire of the principal Inhabitants of this City, I wrote to London for Arms to be put in the Hands of the Citizens for the Defence of the City; with what Grace then can I, without striking a Stroke, desist from defending it? No, Sir; I am determin'd I will not; and will take that Place on the Town-Walls which I possess at the Council-Table.' Soon after which the Pannel came up to Town.

Then the Pannel declared, that as he was of Opinion he had fully proved his Defences, he would not trouble the Court with any further Proof.

Saturday 31st October 1747, betwixt Five and Six o'Clock in the Morning.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, ordain the Affize immediately to inclose in this Place, and to return their Verdict against Monday next, at Ten o'Clock Forenoon, in this Court-House; and ordain the haill fifteen Affizers to be then present, each under the Pain of Law, and the Pannel also to be present said Time, under the Pain of Law.

Curia Justiciaria S. D. N. Regis, tenta in nova Sessionis Domo Burgi de Edinburgh, secundo Die Mensis Novembris 1747. per honores Viri Magistros Alexandrum Frazer de Strichen, Patricium Grant de Elchies, Carolum Areskine de Tinwald, & Hugonem Dalrymple de Drummore, Commissionarios Justiciarum dicti S. D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Lord Strichen, Præses.

Intra. ARCHIBALD Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Pannel, indicted and accused as in the former Sederunt.

The Persons who passed upon the Affize of the Pannel returned their Verdict, in Presence of the said Lords; whereof the Tenor follows, viz. At Edinburgh, the Thirty-first Day of October one Thousand seven Hundred and Forty-seven Years, the Affize having inclosed, did make Choice of Sir Alexander Nisbet to be their Chancellor, and John Nisbet to be their Clerk; and having considered the criminal Libel, pursued at the Instance of William Grant of Prestongrange, Esq; his Majesty's Advocate, for his Majesty's Interest, against Archibald Stewart of the City of Edinburgh, Merchant, and late Lord Provost of the said City, Nota, The Jury sat till Five o'Clock Saturday Evening.

Pannel, with the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary their Interlocutors thereon, and Writs produced, and Depositions of the Witnesses adduced for proving thereof, with the Proof adduced for the Pannel's Exculpation: they, nemini contradicente, find the Pannel Not Guilty. In Witness whereof, their said Chancellor and Clerk have, in their Names, subscribed these Presents, Place and Date foresaid.

Signed,

ALEX. NISBET, Ch.
JO. NISBET, Clk.

The Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, in respect of the foregoing Verdict of Affize, absolve the said Archibald Stewart simpliciter, and dismiss him from the Bar.

Signed,

ALEX. FRASER, J. P. De

The Lords taking into Consideration, that the fifteen Affizers, who had passed upon the Trial of Archibald Stewart, Esq; late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, had undergone a great Fatigue, by no less Attendance than Ninety-four Hours; and being of Opinion, that, on this Account, they should be exempted from being summoned as Affizers to pass upon Trials before this Court for some Time to come; they therefore recommend to, and appoint the Clerks of Court, that, when the Judges make up Lists of Affize, they put them in Mind not to insert any of the said Fifteen their Names, in any Roll or List of Affize for the Space of five Years from the Date of these Presents.

Signed,

ALEX. FRASER, J. P. De

XLIV. The Trial of John Matthews, Printer, for High Treason, for Printing a Libel, entitled, *Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, at the Sessions House, in the Old Bailey, October 30, 1719, before the Lord Chief Justice King, Lord Chief Baron Bury, the Judges Powis, Blencow, Price, Tracy, Eyre, Montagu, Fortescue, Page, and Dormer†.

AT the Sessions House, in the Old Bailey, the 14th October 1719, the Prisoner, John Matthews, was brought to the Bar, but on the Motion of the Prisoner's Counsel, and on producing an Affidavit of one Carroll, the Court adjourned to the 16th: When the Court met again, the Prisoner being brought to the Bar, Mr. Justice Tracy, and Mr. Baron Price, attending,

An Objection was made by the Prisoner's Counsel, that by the Statute of the 7th King William, the Prisoner, in the Cases of High Treason, is to have a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff, two Days, at least, before the Trial; and that in the Copy of the Pannel so delivered to the Prisoner, and returned by the Sheriffs of London, was inserted the Names, without the Addition of Parish, Ward, or Place of Abode. And the Question was, Whether this is a right Pannel, according to the Act of the 27th Eliz. Ch. 7. the Title of which Act is, that no Juror shall be returned without an Addition of his Dwelling-place, &c. And for that purpose the Act provides, that no Juror, whether living within or without a Liberty, shall be returned without an Addition of the Place of his Dwelling or Abode, or some other Addition, by which the Party named may be known †.

The Judges then present differed in their Opinion, and adjourned to another Day, to take the Opinion of the rest of their Brethren, to whom the said Judges that attended made their Report, and on the 30th of October, the Court met again, when Eleven Judges attended, (viz.) Lord Chief Justice King, Lord Chief Baron Bury, the Judges Powis, Blencow, Price, Tracy, Eyre, Montagu, Fortescue, Page, and Dormer, (Lord Chief Justice Pratt, absent) who all agreed, that the City of London was not within the Meaning of that Act, and that the Pannel was a good and legal Pannel; and the Trial ought to go on.—Accordingly the Jury were called over, and after a great many were challenged by the Prisoner,

The Jury sworn, were

Thomas Clarke,	Charles Fox,
Robert Thorp,	Nathaniel Michlethwaite,
Elias Turner,	John Thompson,
Richard West,	Morgan Atkinson,
William Smith,	Richard Guy,
Robert Smith,	William Kent.

Lord Chief Justice. Are they all sworn?

Clerk of Arraignment. Yes, my Lord.

Lord Chief Justice. Then read the Indictment.

* By a Gentleman, who was at Rome in September 1765, we are informed that the Pretender was declining in his Health very fast; grown Superannuated and Childish; was never visited, or seen by any body, but those immediately attending upon him. He died at Rome, January 1, 1766.—Thank God, Jacobitism is in a manner extinct, and all the hopes of the Pretender and his Adherents, at an end: so we shall close the Trials relating to the late unnatural Rebellion in 1745-6, with the Trial of one who suffered for asserting those weak Doctrines of Hereditary Right, and the Rights of the Pretender, &c. which have occasioned the Effusion of so much Blood and Treasure in these Kingdoms; and we hope his present most sacred Majesty, King George III. may enjoy a long, very long, peaceable and quiet Reign, over a free and happy People; and after him, a Succession of Princes sprung from his illustrious House.

† This Trial was taken in Short-hand, with leave of the Court, by Mr. J. Shaylor.

‡ The little Tract, entitled, "The Method of Trial of Commoners, in Cases of High Treason," publish'd in the Year 1709, by Order of the House of Lords, directeth, "that the Additions of Dwelling-places, and Professions of the Jurors, be inserted in the Copy of the Pannel;" But the Act doth not require that Exactness, and the Practice is otherwise. Brittanie contra ligeanc' suam debet. contra pacem dict' D'ni Regis nup. Coron. et Dignitat. suas necnon contra formam Statut. in hujusmodi Casu nup. edit. & provis.*

The Cryer makes the usual Proclamation, O-yes, O-yes, O-yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inquest, now to be taken, of the High-Treason of which the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard, for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance, to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance: and all Jurymen of London, that have appeared, and are not sworn, may depart the Court for this time.

Clerk of Arraigs. John Matthews, hold up your Hand. You of the Jury look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands indicted, by the Name of John Matthews, of London, Printer, for that he being a Subject of our Sovereign Lord George, now King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. not having Rights! He could not have any, supposing him King James's Son; (which is not admitted) for his Father, under whom he must claim, having broke his Coronation-Oath, trampled on the Rights and Liberties of his Subjects, turned Papist, and abdicated the Throne, was very justly set aside by Act of Parliament. This Matthews was a vain, weak, conceited young Fellow, buoy'd up by the Jacobites, and for small Lucre printed their treasonable Papers, and dispersed them among the ignorant common People—Persons of Sense despising their nonsensical Doctrine of Hereditary Right, &c. Such idle Stuff having been long since exploded, every one now seems striving who shall appear most zealous in asserting those Principles which brought about the GLORIOUS REVOLUTION and the HAPPY ESTABLISHMENT of the present Royal Family.—

Mich. 15 Ann. Bedford's Treatise of Hereditary Right was held to be a Libel, though it contained no Reflection upon any Part of the then Government. Strange, Vol. II.

p. 789. Mr. Bedford having been found guilty at Guildhall, London, Feb. 13, 1713, of writing, printing and publishing a scandalous and seditious Libel, intitled, The Hereditary Right, &c. the Court, May 4, in Easter Term, gave Judgment, "That he should be fined 1000 Marks, imprisoned for three Years without Bail or Mainprize, and upon his Delivery, to be bound in a Recognizance with four sufficient Sureties in the Sum of 5000*l.* for his Good Behaviour during Life; and that upon the next Friday he was to be brought up, and shewn to all the Courts sitting in Westminster-Hall, with a Paper in his Hat expressing the Crime and the Judgment, and was committed to the Custody of the Marshal."

Upon Friday Mr. Kettleby, (one of the Defendant's Counsel) moved the Court upon a Paper which was delivered in and read; it was under the Privy-Seal signed by her Majesty, and directed to the Lord Chief Justice, the Justices of the Court, the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and Marshal of the Queen's Bench, and imported a Recital of the Conviction and Judgment; and that Mr. Bedford had humbly represented to her Majesty by Petition, That he was a Clergyman of the Church of England, and prayed, that the ignominious Part of the Sentence might be remitted; "These are therefore to require you, and every of you, not to put in Execution that Part of the Judgment which is, that he be brought to the Courts in Westminster-Hall, &c. and for so doing this shall be your, and every of your, sufficient Warrant."

The Court immediately made a Rule to discharge the Marshal of his Attendance with him that Day, and said they would consider how the Judgment ought to be entered upon. Gilbert's Cases, 297.

This Mr. Bedford (formerly Rector of Wickering, in the Diocese of Peterborough, and Fellow of St. John's, Cambridge,) was a nonjuring Clergyman, and though convicted as above, was thought to have had little or no Hand in writing the Book, he not being esteemed equal to the Performance. It was supposed to have been wrote by Mr. Harbin, a Nonjuror, (a West-Country Gentleman) who had been formerly Chaplain in the old Lord Weymouth's Family. The Preface to it was said to be wrote by Mr. Downes, a Nonjuror, of Baliol College at Oxford. It is imagined they had the Perusal of Lord Hales's MSS. of the Pleas of the Crown, by the Passages they have taken from thence. Those obnoxious Passages were omitted by Mr. Emyn, when he published that Work, by the Advice of two great Men in the Law.—

Mr. Bedford, by not discovering the Author, &c. was a great Gainer in the End; for setting up a Boarding-house near Westminster School, for young Gentlemen, by the Help of the above Persons, and others of that Party, he got a considerable Fortune; which he left to his Son, Dr. Bedford, a Physician in London, who died a few Years ago.

† Only wants to be known by us to be admired. The more he was known in Scotland, in the Year 1715, the more he was despised; being a great Bigot to the Popish Religion, refusing to appear at any Place of Protestant Worship.—A great Coward, flying before the King's Troops, and making no Stand; that even the Chiefs in that Rebellion looked on him, at last, in a contemptible Light.—And further he says, We only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. What, would a Popish Bigot, and a Tool of France make us happy! would Popery and Slavery make English-men happy! We are now as happy under our present most gracious Sovereign King GEORGE III. as our Hearts can desire (and were so at that Time); and God forbid we should ever change our Happiness for Misery and Ruin; which must be the Case, if ever God, for our Sins, should scourge us with a Popish abjur'd Pretender.

limited Monarchy must be so, (meaning a Jacobite); the Chevalier (meaning the Person in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, pretending to be Prince of Wales, and since the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third) being endowed with all Princely Virtues, so that all Rights (meaning all Rights to the Crown of this Kingdom) concur in him (meaning the said Person in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third); against his due Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. And further, that the said John Matthews, the Fear of God in his Heart notwithstanding, nor his due Allegiance considering, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traytor, against our said Lord the now King, his supreme, true, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the now King, towards our said Lord the King should bear, and of right ought to bear, afterwards and after the 25th Day of March, in the Year of our Lord 1706, on to wit, the 10th Day of June, in the fifth Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in a certain other false and traitorous Libel, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, which the said John Matthews, then and there maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously printed; and by the last aforesaid Printing, maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously did declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Person in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain, against his due Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the now King, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

How sayest thou, John Matthews, art thou Guilty of this Indictment whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty? Prisoner. Not Guilty.

Chief of Arraignment. How wilt thou be tried?

Prisr. By God and my Country.

Off. of Ar. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Foreman of the Jury. My Lord, we humbly pray the Court may be kept quiet, or it will be impossible for us to hear the Evidence.

Lord Chief Justice. Officer, make Proclamation for Silence.

Crier. O yes, O yes! My Lords the King's Justices strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the King's Council, you may proceed.

Mr. Booth. [afterwards Sir Thomas Booth.] May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel in this Case for the King. The Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted of High-Treason, upon the Statute made in the 6th Year of the late Queen Anne's Reign, and it is for maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Printing, declaring, and affirming, that the Pretender hath a Right and Title to the Crown of these Realms.

My Lord, the Indictment sets forth, that he being a Subject of our Sovereign Lord George, now King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor considering his due Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traytor, against our said Lord the now King, his supreme, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King should, and of right ought to bear towards our said Lord the King, after the 25th of March, in the Year of our Lord 1706, (to wit, the 10th Day of June, in the 5th Year of his present Majesty's Reign, at London, in the Parish of St. Botolph, without Aldersgate, in the Ward of Aldersgate, at London aforesaid, in a certain false and treasonable Libel, which he then and there maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously printed, entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, of and concerning the Person in the Life-time of King James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, and of and concerning his Right to the Crown of Great Britain, he did maliciously, advisedly, directly, and traitorously, by the said Printing, declare, maintain, and affirm, in one Part thereof in these Words, "From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's (meaning the Pretender's) Birth, the moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor upon the Nation, (meaning the Kingdom of Great Britain), after the manner pretended, and the Disappointment in the Attempt of proving him so, I (meaning himself the said John Matthews) think its Demonstration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he (meaning the Pretender) hath that (meaning an Hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom), to plead in his Favour; and all Assertors of limited Monarchy must allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Person having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern. And the great Opinion all Courts have of this Prince's (meaning the Pretender's) Virtues, shews he (meaning the Pretender) only wants to be known by us to be admired, and that we (meaning the People of England) only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy."

My Lord, there is laid to be likewise in another Part of this Libel, that he did maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously, by the said Printing, declare, maintain, and affirm, in these Words following, viz. "I (meaning himself the said John Matthews) will conclude with these Remarks. First, That every Assertor of Hereditary Right (meaning Hereditary Right to the Crown of this Kingdom) must be a Jacobite (meaning a Favourer of the Pretender). 2dly, That every Whig who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, must be so (meaning a Jacobite). And, 3dly, Every Assertor of limited Monarchy must be so, (meaning a Jacobite), the Chevalier (meaning the Pretender) being endowed with all princely Virtues; so that all Rights (meaning all Rights to the Crown of this Kingdom) concur in him (meaning the Pretender)." This is laid to be contrary to his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

Gentlemen, the Indictment further sets forth, That the Defendant, as a false Traytor against our said Lord the now King, his supreme, lawful, and indubitable Lord, altogether withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the now King, towards our said Lord the King, should and of right ought to bear, afterwards and after the 25th of March, in the Year of our Lord 1706 (to wit), the same 10th Day of June, in the fifth Year aforesaid, at London, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in another false and traitorous Libel, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, which he the said John Matthews then and there maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously printed; and by the last aforesaid Printing, maliciously, advisedly, and traitorously did declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain; and this is laid to be contrary to his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the now King, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

To this, Gentlemen, the Prisoner hath pleaded Not Guilty; we on the Part of the Prosecution shall call our Witnesses to prove the Facts, and if we do, I don't doubt you will think it your Duty to find him Guilty.

Mr. Attorney General (Mr. Lechmere, afterwards Lord Lechmere). My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Indictment which hath been opened to you, is an Indictment against John Matthews, the Person at the Bar, for High-Treason. This Indictment is founded upon an Act of Parliament made in the 6th Year of the late Queen, the Title of it is, "An Act for the Security of her Majesty's Person and Government, and of the Succession to the Crown of Great Britain in the Protestant Line." This Act recites, there had been a former Act, made in the 4th Year of the Reign of her then present Majesty, in which it is mentioned, by reason of the Union of England and Scotland, it became necessary to make divers Alterations in that Act. The first Provision made by this Law is in these Words, that "If any Person or Persons shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; or that any Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament made in England, in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, intitled, "An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown;" and one other Act made in England in the 12th Year of the Reign of his said late Majesty King William the Third, intitled, "An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject;" and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of this Realm, with and by the Authority of Parliament, are not able to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Descent, Limitation, Inheritance and Government thereof; every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason, and being thereof lawfully convicted shall be adjudged Traytors, and shall suffer Pains of Death, and Losses and Forfeitures as in Cases of High-Treason."

Gentlemen, the Facts that are enumerated in this Clause of the Statute I have read to you; at the Time when this Law was made, those Crimes, though Crimes of a very high Nature, yet were Crimes of a lower Degree, as Misdemeanours, &c. But for the Security of the Person of the late Queen and her Government, and for the securing of the Succession to the Crown in the Protestant Line, the Wisdom of Parliament thought it necessary, to deter People from such Crimes, to inflict the Punishment due for High-Treason. The Charge of this Indictment read to you, is one of those several Instances made High-Treason by this Act. The Substance of the Indictment is, that the Prisoner, the 10th of June last, did maliciously, advisedly, and directly, in a certain Libel, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, which he caused to be printed, he did by that Impression declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Person described by the Act of Parliament to be the pretended Prince of Wales, had a Right to the Crown of these Realms.

Gentlemen, the Words taken out of the Libel have been read to you, and stated to you upon the Opening of the Indictment, and I believe no Doubt or Question arises upon the proper Construction of those Words, but the Prisoner is Guilty of High-Treason. The Chevalier, the Name made use of to describe the Person, the Circumstance by which he is described, are of such notorious a kind, so well known, that it is impossible for any one not to understand them of the Person described in the Act of Parliament. The Law directs, that to involve any Person in the Crime of High-Treason, that the Writing with which he is charged, should be a direct declaring, maintaining, and affirming: this is what the Law prescribes. In the first Sett of Words, it is not a bare Assertion only, but the very Words are, that it is a Demonstration, that if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour. This is as strong an Instance, and as full and clear affirming as Words can invent. In the latter Part, by way of Conclusion from the Arguments of his Books, he there affirms, all Rights concur in this Person; all Right to the Crown of these Realms: it must be so understood, it is impossible to put any other Construction upon it. I conclude from the Premises, that all Rights to the Crown of this Kingdom concur in this Person. The Act of Parliament makes it Treason to affirm, that the Person therein described hath any Right to the Crown of these Realms: in the Beginning he affirms, that he hath an Hereditary Right; in the Conclusion there is a positive Affirmation, that not only that, but all other Rights concur in him.

Gentlemen, It being beyond all doubt, as I apprehend, that the Words set forth in the Libel amount to High-Treason, according to this Act of Parliament; it is therefore incumbent upon us that prosecute for the Crown, to shew that he is the Person that did print the Libel set forth in in this Indictment; that he did it with Malice, maliciously, is one of the Circumstances the Act of Parliament requires; that he did not do it ignorantly, or inadvertently, but advisedly; as to that, our Evidence will be this: The Prisoner lived with his Mother in the City of London, who kept a Printing-house, whether he be an Apprentice or Partner is not material; he is an Inhabitant there, and belongs to that Printing-house; and lives with his Mother who keeps the Printing-house. The Government having on former Occasions had this young Man under their Notice for Practices of this Kind, the 6th of June last they received Information of the traitorous Libel set out in the Indictment that was dispersed much about that Time. Having received Information that the Prisoner was concerned in printing of it, a Warrant was issued for apprehending him; accordingly being taken, there was found in his Pocket one entire Libel, bearing the Title, and importing the Words set forth in the Indictment. In his Lodging-room there were found two Half-Sheets; the Libel contained one whole Sheet and no more. Besides that in his Pocket, in his Lodging-room were found two first Half-sheets of this Libel; there were likewise another entire Libel found in his Lodging-room; and eight or ten Half-sheets of the latter Part of the Libel, which were superfluous Parts of the Impression, as we believe.

My Lord, on the View of these Libels when they come to be looked on, on the View of the two Half-sheets, and on the Proof we shall give you concerning them, it will appear that these two Half-sheets of the first Part of the Libel, that they are the very Proof-sheets from which the Impression of this Libel was worked off. There are other Circumstances appearing in the Papers themselves, that to your Observation I do not doubt will appear for; but especially when it comes to be explained by Masters in the Art of Printing, who are better able to give an Account of them; then it will appear that these were the very Proof-sheets of the Impression after it was wrought off. My Lord, there is, in the Language of Printers, a right and wrong Imposing; one of these Proof-sheets appears to be wrong imposed, the other is right imposed; the Impression was varied, as will appear to you by the wrong Imposition of the first Half-sheet, which occasioned another Imposition rightly imposed, and from which the Impression of the Libel was wrought off.

Gentlemen, on these two Half-sheets there are the usual Mistakes and Corrections, such as the inverting Letters, and other such literal Mistakes usual in this Trade, and in working of printed Papers.

Gentlemen, the Types and Letters of these Proof-sheets will appear to you to be the very Types and Letters of this Printing-house, to which this young Man belonged; and, Gentlemen, upon those Proof-sheets, there is an Addition and Interlineation of the Word fit, which we shall prove to be the Hand-writing of the Prisoner himself.

Gentlemen, It is observable from the superfluous Half-sheets, in Point of Evidence, that arises from the Facts themselves as discovered in his Possession: If these Papers had come into his Possession as Libels dispersed, it is reasonable to imagine they would have been found not imperfect Sheets, a Part of this Libel, but entire and complete. It is usual and common, where they print off by Reams, there may be a Superfluity or overplus Sheets: they do not always hit the same Number of the same Impression. It frequently happens there may be a Superfluity of Sheets or Half-sheets; these, with other Circumstances, as will appear to you, do concur, and in themselves carry a very high Evidence, strong, if not violent Presumption, that he was the Printer of this Libel, or at least privy and concerned, or co-operated in the printing thereof; and that is the same; for if many are concerned in printing a treasonable Libel, they are all guilty of the Treason. But it will be incumbent on the Prisoner, if he can acquit himself from the Weight of this Evidence, which must fall upon him from these Circumstances of the Papers being found upon him, being found in his Possession in the very Printing-house; it will be incumbent on him to acquit himself, and to account for these Things, to shew how he came by them; if by any other Means than as by these Circumstances, we shall endeavour to prove. My Lord, these Circumstances appearing, on the finding the Libel on the Prisoner, on his being apprehended, being under Examination—whatever his Defence may be now, let him make the best he can by Law; I am for giving him the full Liberty the Law allows—but I mention it as a Proof, when under an Examination, and disposed to a Behaviour that might have prevented this Trial, very far from denying the printing of these Papers when they were produced; if my Instructions are true, what he said amounted to an Acknowledgment and Confession that he printed them. He endeavoured to excuse it from his Necessity; sometimes gave Overtures and Reasons to believe that he would discover the Person that put the Manuscript into his Hands, and set him to Work. But throughout his whole Examination at that Time, it will appear on that Occasion, if my Instructions are right, so far was he from denying himself to be the Printer, that he confessed he was the Printer of those Papers.

Gentlemen, I shall not rest it on this, though if made out, I apprehend is very full; but we have the very Persons to produce to you in Evidence who were employed by the Prisoner, paid by the Prisoner for the Printing of these very Libels we shall offer to you in Evidence: That about a Month or six Weeks before he was discovered, I apprehend this might be about the latter End of May, he, early in the Morning, about three or four o'Clock, (the exact Time I will not undertake to prove) called up the Persons I shall offer as Witnesses, told them he had an Impression to work off; one of them will prove they saw him compose the Press from the Manuscript; they remember the Circumstance of his making the wrong Imposition of the first Part of this Impression, and the having wrong imposed it (as the Phrase is): He went out, and, on his Return, he swore he had wrong imposed it, and he must impose it a second time; and accordingly he made the second Imposition, which is the Paper we have to produce; he directed them to work it off while the Prisoner stood by, and did the Office which Boys do, for Dispatch and Secrecy; he took the Papers from the Press; there were about a Thousand wrought off complete of the first and second Part of the Libel; and he paid them for it, and took the Impression into his own Possession; he paid them fourteen Shillings, Part to the Witness, and the other Part to the Apprentice. Gentlemen, if we prove this, there can no Doubt remain with you, but that it will prove him fully, and to your entire Satisfaction, that he is the Printer of these Papers; that he hath done it maliciously. The Act of Parliament hath made that a Circumstance; but no other Proof is requisite by Law to be made, than by that which arises from the Nature of the Libel itself. A traitorous Libel, calculated to raise Sedition and Rebellion, imports Malice. A Libel pretending to condemn the Title of the Crown in his Majesty, and asserting it to be in the Pretender, carries Malice of the highest Nature: and if we shew he had the Direction of the Press, he composed it, afterwards corrected it, it cannot remain a Doubt with you as to the other Circumstance, but that it was done advisedly.

Gentlemen, I have stated to you the Circumstance of the Evidence, and I have done it without any Aggravation; I do not think it wants it; if the Evidence comes out as I have laid it before you, it will carry its own Force, and you will give it its due Weight. I am sorry for any one that falls under such an Accusation, but more especially for one so young; but, Gentlemen, Compassion is neither your Business or mine; that belongs to another Place, as the Case shall appear. I will call our Witnesses, and prove what I have opened to you; and if I do, you will do your Country Justice, as well as Justice to the King, to find him guilty.

Serjeant Chebbins. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, I am Counsel of the same Side with the King.—Mr. Attorney General hath opened the Charge so very fully, that it will be unnecessary for me to spend Time in adding to it. But, Gentlemen, since this is a Prosecution on an Act of Parliament, and for aught I know this the first Instance of a Trial of one discovered and brought before you in Judgment upon this Act, it may be necessary for me to add a few Words in relation to it. And, Gentlemen, a Man cannot but be sensibly concerned in his Mind, that, after fourteen Years that this Act hath been in Force, the first Instance should be a young Boy of this Person's Age; I hope, notwithstanding, when you hear the Evidence laid before you, you will be sensible that the real Author is a Person of greater Maturity and Proficiency; and this poor Youth worked up to be an obstinate Instrument in the Hands of some greater Person; and God forbid that such People, by their Artfulness and Cunning, should get off, by making use of such as are more apt to move Compassion.

Gentlemen, you will consider, as you have this young Man in Judgment, so you have the Rights of the King of England, under whom we live; and that you will do fair and right between the King and his Subjects, is what we expect.

Gentlemen, this must be an Offence against an Act of Parliament, made in the fourth Year of the late Queen, and in the sixth Year, whereby it was declared, that if any Person or Persons shall, maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printings, maintain and affirm; that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who stiled himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms, or that any other Person or Persons have or hath any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament, made in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and one other Act, made in the twelfth Year of the Reign of his said late Majesty King William the Third, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of this Realm, with and by the Authority of Parliament, are not able to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Descent, Limitation, Inheritance, and Government thereof: Every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Traitors, and shall suffer Pains of Death, and all Losses and Forfeitures as in Cases of High-Treason. And the Offence here is the declaring, maintaining, and affirming, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of England; That, Gentlemen, give me Leave to say, is the Treason in this Act of Parliament; but, Gentlemen, as it stood on the Old Acts of Parliament, that That made the Treason must be proved by open Deeds, as we usually express it by Overt Acts.—This Treason is to be determined two Ways, that is, by Printing or Writing; it is Treason for any Person or Persons to declare, maintain, and affirm, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; that Declaration must be made good by Printing or Writing; the Case before you is Printing; that Printing must have these Qualifications: It must be maliciously, it must be advisedly, and the Declaration must be directly.

Gentlemen, It is an Offence made up of these Gradations: He must do it maliciously; he must do it advisedly; he must do it directly; and that which is to be done so, is the maintaining and affirming that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of this Kingdom: If this be thus proved by Printing, then, Gentlemen, this is the Offence which is made High-Treason by this Act of Parliament. Gentlemen, it is necessary a little to open to you who is meant by the Chevalier, because you find by the Libel, he is called the Chevalier. Gentlemen, as it is known to you all, as here in England, he is called the Pretender to the Crown, very properly in many Acts of Parliament; so, on the Death of the late King James, he assumed the Title of James the Third King of England, and James the Eighth of Scotland. That being resented, justly resented by the Crown of England, to those Princes and States that seemed to favour it, they withdrew that Title, and he assumed the Name of the Chevalier de St. George. I believe it is as well known that the Pretender was meant by the Name of Chevalier, as any Prince whatsoever is known by his Title. As to the Person, we think it is very plain, the Person named the Chevalier in the Libel, to be the very same Person that pretended to be the Prince of Wales in the Life-time of King James the Second; and, after his Decease, that assumed to himself the Title of James the Third King of England, and the Eighth of Scotland. As this is the Person, so you will find a direct maintaining and affirming that he hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms; That will appear by the Libel. I would observe by the way, that this way of libelling, it well became the Legislature to guard against: because it is a sly, artful way of poisoning the Minds of People, and in such a Manner as is not easily discoverable. Here it is necessary first, to set out the Virtues of the Person you are next, from the Consideration of these Virtues, necessarily moved with Pity and Compassion, that a Person of those Virtues should be kept out of his Right. He says, all Rights concur in him; who, he says, is a Person endowed with all princely Virtues. If he hath all Rights concur in him, and is a Person of those princely Virtues, is it not a pity, and doth it not move Compassion, that this Person is kept out of his Right? It is a natural Inference. Then who is the Person he is speaking of, the Person whose Birth was so very solemn, that it was impossible to prove him an Impostor: These are the Words of the Libel before you. And then, Gentlemen, which comes more to the Purpose, he particularly and positively affirms, that if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; this is in the first Part of the Libel. In the latter Part he makes three Remarks; in these three Remarks he sums up all the Right any Prince can have. He says, Hereditary Right, that is one; the Voice or Choice of the People, that is another; and a limited Monarchy the third; he says he hath all these Rights concur in him; he being endowed with all princely Virtues, therefore all these Rights concur in him. Gentlemen, it hath been rightly opened by Mr. Attorney-General, that the Offence is to declare, that he hath any Right; but he hath maintained all Rights whatsoever concur in him; he hath an Hereditary Right, he hath a Right by the Choice of the People, he hath a Right, as it is a limited Monarchy. This, Gentlemen, is the Declaration; and we think upon the reading it, you will be satisfied, and I dare say my Lords the Judges will direct you, that this is a direct declaring that he hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms.

Gentlemen, it must be proved it was done maliciously and advisedly; if we make out what Mr. Attorney-General hath opened, that it was done with this Deliberation, that he paid for it, that he directed it, that he was the Person who composed it, first took off the Sheets from the Press, which is usually done by a Boy, and they call that Boy the Devil; it is the Devil's Work, as you will hear by the Witnesses, but that was done by him for Haste, Expedition and Secrecy too. Gentlemen, there was, as it will appear by the Witnesses, a Thousand of each Part printed off; it is to be feared they were dispersed, and God knows what Mischief they may have done; a few were found upon him, it lies upon him to account how he came by them; we will call our Witnesses, &c.

Mr. Lutwiche. Call John Hutchins and Thomas Roberts, the Messengers that seized these Things upon him.

JOHN HUTCHINS and THOMAS ROBERTS sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we pray in behalf of the Prisoner, that the Witnesses may be kept out of the Hearing of one another.

[Which was ordered accordingly.]

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire that the Witnesses may be kept out of the Hearing of one another.

Lord Chief Justice King. If there are any more of the Witnesses in Court, they must stay out till they are called.

JOHN HUTCHINS.

Mr. Attorney General. Shew him the Libel. Look upon the rest of the Half-sheets, Mr. Hutchins: you have the Libel in your Hands?

Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Have you looked upon them all?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, upon most of them.

Att. Gen. Are not any of them marked that you know of?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How many are they that are marked by you?

Hutchins. They are all marked by me.

Att. Gen. Hold them in your Hand, look upon those Libels, you say they are marked by you; do you know any thing of those Libels, and where you had them?

Hutchins. Some I found in Mr. Matthews's Pocket; the rest I found in his Room.

Att. Gen. Let us know the Time when.

Hutchins. The 7th of July last.

Att. Gen. Where, Sir?

Hutchins. In his Pocket, and in his Room.

Att. Gen. Where?

Hutchins. At the Printing-house of his Mother in Little Britain.

Att. Gen. At his Mother's Printing-house? Which was found in his Pocket?

Hutchins. This, Sir.

Att. Gen. Is that an entire Libel that was found in his Pocket?

Hutchins. Those two make an entire Libel.

Att. Gen. Those were found in his Pocket?—Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Where were the rest found?—Hutchins. In his Room.

Att. Gen. Why call you it his Room?

Hutchins. In his Room where he lay, in his Bed-chamber.

Att. Gen. They were found in his Bed-chamber?

[Now point to us those that were found in his Bed-chamber.]

Hutchins. The two Half-sheets; two Proof-half-sheets.

Att. Gen. There is another.

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, that is one that was found in his Pocket.

Att. Gen. Sir, can you be positive those are the very Papers you found in his Pocket, and in his Room?

Hutchins. I am very positive.

Att. Gen. I think you say you marked them.—Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did you look on those Marks?—Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Now look upon the rest of the Papers you have in your Hands, and let us know what they are.

Hutchins. These were taken out of his Room.

Att. Gen. Look upon those, that Bundle you have in your Hand.

Hutchins. These are more that were taken out of his Room.

Att. Gen. These are the imperfect superfluous Sheets; don't put them together, keep them distinct.

Hutchins. Sir, I shall.

Att. Gen. You were saying, they were found in his Room?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir, in his Room.

Att. Gen. Was there any Conversation between you and the Prisoner the Day he was in your Custody, or at any other Time, touching these Libels?

Hutchins. He owned they were all his.

Lord Chief Justice. How?

Hutchins. I asked him if they were his, he told me they were.

Att. Gen. That was at the time he was taken; afterwards had you any other Discourse with him at the time of shewing him his Papers?

Hutchins. He never denied them.

Mr. Lutwiche. Do you know of any thing that passed between you at the time of his Commitment?

Hutchins. I brought him to Newgate. When I came for him, I suppose, says he, I am going to Newgate, and that a Bill of High-Treason will be found against me? Yes, says I, that there is already.—I advised him to tell the Author, and it would be better for him. He said, I know I shall be hanged; but I have nothing to do, but let the Money fly, to get a good Jury, that's all. He said those that let him to work, were a Pack of Dogs, good for nothing, but over a Bottle of Wine, or a Pot of Beer.

Mr. Lutwiche. Repeat the first Words again.

Hutchins. He said that he knew he should be hanged, he had nothing to do, but to let the Money fly, to get a good Jury; they were a Pack of Dogs that let him to work, good for nothing, but over a Bottle of Wine, or a Pot of Beer.

Serjeant Cheshire. Who was with you at the time of the seizing of these Papers?—Hutchins. Mr. Roberts.

Mr. Hungerford. You say you took these Things at the Printing-house?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. In whose Name was the Printing-house kept?

Hutchins. It was kept by his Mother, or by his Brother.

Mr. Ketelbey. You are sure that these very Papers you deliver'd in, are the same numerical Papers you seized either in his Lodging-room, or in his Pocket?

Hutchins. These are the very same.

Mr. Ketelbey. From the Day that you seized them, have they been in your Custody, or do you only depend on the remembering of the Mark?

Hutchins. I depend on the remembering of the Mark.

Mr. Ketelbey. They have not been in your Custody ever since?

Hutchins. No, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. When did you mark those you found in the Room? at the same time you seized them?

Hutchins. I mark'd them after I went out of the Room, before I delivered them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were they in your Custody constantly from the time of your first seizing them, till you mark'd them? Had Nobody an Opportunity of altering them?

Hutchins. Yes, they were.—Nobody, except the other Messenger, meddled with them.

Mr. Ketelbey. And can you take upon you to say, the other Messenger never altered them?

Hutchins. I am sure he never altered them; for he was never out of my Sight.

Prisoner. I desire to ask Mr. Hutchins, whether he took them out of my Pocket or in my Room, or no. I am sure Mr. Roberts took them, I see him. (Here the Prisoner behaved in a Passion.)

Lord Chief Justice. You shall have a fair Trial according to the Laws of England, and as you expect a fair Trial, therefore it is expected that you behave yourself as you ought.—Who took them out of his Pocket?

Hutchins. Mr. Roberts.

L. C. J. Where was you?—Hutchins. Standing at the Door.

Att. Gen. Did you see them taken out of his Pocket?—Hutchins. Yes.

Att. Gen. Had you them in your Hand?—Hutchins. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Did you keep them in your Hand?—Hutchins. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. How far was you from Mr. Roberts when he took them out of his Pocket?

Hutchins. I was at the Door.

Mr. Hungerford. Could you read them at that Distance?

Hutchins. No.

Prisoner. You took them on the Ground?

Hutchins. He took them out of your Pocket.—He laid your Coat down, and laid the Papers upon them.

Mr. Hungerford. What Posture was the Prisoner in, when you and Mr. Roberts came into the Room?

Hutchins. He was in Bed when Roberts came in, and just getting out of his Bed when I came in.

Mr. Hungerford. Had you any Candle?

Hutchins. It was Day-light, between Eight and Nine o'Clock in the Morning.

Prisoner. My Lord, I desire to know how many Papers were found in my Pocket?

Hutchins. Two or three.

Prisoner. I desire to know if all these Papers were taken in this Room?

Hutchins. Some, two or three were found in a Box in another Room?

Prisoner. Which of those Papers were taken in another Room?

Hutchins. I can't tell.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were all those Papers taken in the Room where he lodged?

Hutchins. Most of them where he lay.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where were the rest taken?

Hutchins. In the Box in another Room.

Att. Gen. Whose Room was that?

Hutchins. He said it belonged to him.

(The Papers shewn him.)

Mr. Ketelbey. Where were these Papers produced?

Hutchins. Most of them in his Room.

Att. Gen. Look upon them again, can't you tell which were found in his Pocket, which in the Room where he lodged, and which in the Room adjoining? Have you not marked them?

Hutchins. I can't tell which were taken in the other Room.

Att. Gen. Shew him the two Proof-sheets. Look upon them, and recollect and tell us, if you can with Certainty, whether these were found in his Pocket, in his Lodging-room, or where else?

Hutchins. Yes, Sir—These were both taken in his Room.

Attorney

Attorney General. In his Lodging-room?
Lord Chief Justice. Or in the Box in the other Room? I ask you, do you know certainly where these were taken?
Hutchins. I am not sure whether they were taken in the one Room, or the other.
Mr. Lutwidge. What was that Room you call the other Room?
Hutchins. He called that other Room his, and said all that was there was his.
Prisoner. What Room was I taken in?
Hutchins. In your Bed-chamber.
Mr. Hungerford. Is there a distinct Door to that other Room where the Box was?
Hutchins. There is a Room, and a distinct Door to it.
Mr. Hungerford. Did that Door open into the Room that was his Bed-chamber?
Hutchins. No.—It opened in his Bed-chamber; you go through his Bed-chamber to it.
Prisoner. Was you there when Mr. Roberts came to my Chamber, when I was in Bed?—Hutchins. No.
Mr. Hungerford. Was there no other Opening to the Room where the Box was?—Hutchins. No, Sir.
Lord Chief Justice. You say it was found in his Pocket; in his Coat-Pocket, or his Breeches-Pocket?
Hutchins. In his Coat-Pocket, My Lord.
Mr. Hungerford. Were there one, and the same Mark to the Papers you found in his Pocket, and the other Papers?
Hutchins. There were the two first Letters of my Name to those that were not perfect, and my whole Name to the perfect ones.
Mr. Hungerford. Is there not some of the Papers of the same Mark?
Hutchins. My Name is at length, not to all.
Mr. Hungerford. To any?—Hutchins. Yes, Sir.
Mr. Hungerford. Then if I take him right, there was the same Mark to some of the Papers taken out of his Pocket, and that were took out of his Room.
Lord Chief Justice. By which Mark do you distinguish between the Papers?
Hutchins. Some I mark'd with the same Mark.
Lord Chief Justice. How do you distinguish?
Hutchins. Because I mark'd those found in his Pocket, 'taken in his Pocket'; those taken in the Room, 'taken in the Room.'
Attorney General. Read the Words you have written.
Hutchins. Taken in Mr. Matthews's Room the 7th July.
Att. Gen. Whose Writing is that?—Hutchins. My own.
Att. Gen. Were those taken out of his Pocket, or in his Room?
Hutchins. In his Room.
Att. Gen. Do you distinguish between the Room he lay in, and the other Room?—Hutchins. No, I can't.
Att. Gen. Look upon those mark'd, 'taken out of his Pocket.'
Hutchins. Taken out of his Pocket?
Att. Gen. Read.
Hutchins. 'This taken out of his Pocket by me and Roberts.'
Att. Gen. Whose Hand-writing is that?
Hutchins. My own Name is my own Hand-writing, but the rest not.
Att. Gen. Are you positive that Paper was taken out of his Pocket?
Hutchins. Yes, I am positive.
Att. Gen. Keep that distinct.
Mr. Ketelbey. You say the Name at length is your Hand-writing, but the Words not?—Hutchins. No, Sir.
Mr. Ket. Who wrote them?
Hutchins. The other Messenger.
Mr. Ket. How long after?
Hutchins. Two or three Hours.
Prisoner. My Lord, I desire to know how far he carried them, before they were mark'd.
Hutchins. I carried them to the Cock-Pit.
Mr. Ket. Did the other Messenger carry none?
Hutchins. Yes, he carried some.
Lord Chief Justice. Were they taken out of the Room, before they were mark'd?—Hutchins. Yes, my Lord.

THOMAS ROBERTS.

Attorney General. Mr. Roberts, Was you present with Hutchins when any Papers were seized?
Roberts. I went into the Room before Hutchins was there. I secured his Sword.
Lord Chief Justice. Was his Sword in his Room?
Rob. Yes, my Lord. Then I secured his Coat, and secured his Papers.—Then came in Mr. Hutchins; so with that Mr. Hutchins turns round and goes into another Room, and brings two or three Papers, several Papers he found, some in one Place and some in another.—Now as he found them, he asked Mr. Matthews, Are these your Papers, do you own them? Yes, says he, I do.
Attorney General. Did you put a Mark on the Papers?
Rob. Yes.
Att. Gen. What is the Mark?
Rob. 'The 7th July 1719, taken out of Mr. Matthews's Pocket.'
Att. Gen. Have you put your Name to it?
Rob. Yes, this is my Name.
Att. Gen. When did you put your Mark?
Rob. The 7th July.
Att. Gen. What Time of the Day?
Rob. About Twelve o'Clock.
Att. Gen. How long after they were seized?
Rob. About two Hours.
Att. Gen. Where had the Papers been?
Rob. This Paper in Hutchins's Hand, and the rest in mine.
Att. Gen. Was Hutchins ever out of your Company from the time of taking them till you mark'd?
Rob. He was so far out of my Company, he was in one Coach, and I was in another; we had three or four Prisoners; one Coach could not carry us all.

Att. Gen. Can you be positive that the Paper you have in your Hand, was taken out of the individual Pocket of the Prisoner?
Rob. Yes, that I can.
Att. Gen. Shew him the rest of the Papers.—Whose Mark is that?
Rob. '7th July, taken out of Mr. Matthews's Pocket.'
Att. Gen. Is that your Hand-writing?
Rob. This is my Hand-writing.
Att. Gen. Where did you put your Hand-writing to it?
Rob. In Downing-Street.
Att. Gen. When?—Rob. About two Hours after we had seized them.
Att. Gen. In whose Custody had they been?
Rob. In Mr. Hutchins's.
Att. Gen. Are you positive that was taken out of his Pocket?
Rob. Yes, Sir, I am.
Att. Gen. Where was he when you took them out of his Pocket?
Rob. He was in Bed.
 (The first Proof-sheet shewn to him.)
Att. Gen. Look upon that, see what is written upon that.
Rob. 'Taken in Mr. Matthews's Room the 7th July, T. R. and J. Hutchins.'
Att. Gen. Do you remember the taking of that?
Rob. Yes, I do.
Att. Gen. Do you remember in what Room?
Rob. I can't remember in what Room, because there were several Papers.
Att. Gen. In how many Rooms did you find these Papers?
Rob. Most of them in one Room, some under the Bed, in the Bed-chamber where he lodged.
Att. Gen. Was there Papers in any other Room?
Rob. I can't well tell that, because I kept the Door, but several Papers were taken in the Bed-chamber.
Att. Gen. Are you certain that Paper mark'd was taken in his Bed-chamber Room?
Rob. That I am positive of.
 (The other Papers shewn him.)
Rob. 'Taken the 7th July in Mr. Matthews's Room, T. R. and J. Hutchins.'
Att. Gen. Where did you put the Mark, and when?
Rob. In Downing-Street, at the same time.
Att. Gen. Can you be positive they were found in his Room?
Rob. Yes, I can.
Mr. Ketelbey. When you say his Room, do you mean his Bed-chamber?
Rob. His Bed-chamber.
Mr. Bootle. Look upon the rest. Read the Marks writ upon them.
Rob. Only John Hutchins, and Thomas Roberts.
Mr. Bootle. Were they taken in the Room?
Rob. Yes, Sir.
Mr. Bootle. Look upon that last, look upon the Mark, (Roberts look'd on it) where was that taken?
Rob. All were taken in his Room.
Mr. Bootle. Was that in his Bed-chamber, or the other Room?
Rob. In his Bed-chamber.
Mr. Bootle. What did he say when you had seized his Papers?
Rob. When Mr. Hutchins had seized them, says he, Mr. Matthews, are these your Papers? Yes, says he, I own them to be my Papers.
Mr. Bootle. I ask you whether the Proof-sheet was not found in his Bed-chamber?—Rob. Yes, it was.
Att. Gen. You have told us what he said the time the Papers were found, was there any other Conversation between you and him? Did you hear him say any thing while he was in your Custody, going to Newgate?
Rob. When we brought him to Newgate?
Lord Chief Justice. How long was it after?
Rob. The 9th of September, my Lord.—When we came into his Room, he asked, Where are you going with me? Are you going to carry me to Newgate? Yes, says I.—Is there a Bill found against me? I told him Yes, of High-Treason. I know, says he, I deserve to be hanged, and that he had nothing in the World to do but to let his Money fly, to get a good Jury.
Att. Gen. Did he say any thing more?
Rob. Nothing more as I know of.
Mr. Bootle. Did he not speak of any Person that set him to Work?
Rob. Nothing, as I remember.
Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Roberts,—As to those Papers you have produced, where were they writ upon?
Lord Chief Justice. That Question hath been asked, and answered several times.
Mr. Ketelbey. Were they all in your Custody from the time you seized them till they were mark'd?—Rob. I gave them to Mr. Hutchins again.
Mr. Ketelbey. The other Man in the other Coach?—Rob. Yes, Sir.

WILLIAM HARPER sworn.

Attorney General. William Harper, Do you know Mrs. Matthews's Printing-House?—Harper. Yes, Sir.
Att. Gen. Have you ever work'd there, how, and in what Capacity?
Harper. As an Apprentice.
Att. Gen. Are you now an Apprentice?
Harper. Yes, I was a Turn-over, I have been there two Years and a Half.
Att. Gen. Do you remember about the latter end of May, or the Beginning of June, when you was called up by the Prisoner to work off an Impression?—Harper. Yes, I remember it very well.
Att. Gen. Pray give an Account what he said, and when it was.
Harper. It was in the Morning about four o'Clock.
Att. Gen. In what Month was this?
Harper. The last was done on Saturday Morning the 6th Day of June.
Att. Gen. Tell us what he said when he called you up?
Harper. He asked me to get up, and told me if I did not get up, it would be too late to get it done.
Att. Gen. Do you know what he meant?
Harper. I heard him say, he had a Jobb to do.
Att. Gen. How long before?
Harper. I believe about a Day before, I can't remember how long, he said he had a Jobb to do.

Att. Gen.

Att. Gen. When he called you up, what did he say?
Harper. He desired I would get up and help him to work off that Jobb he had to do.
Att. Gen. What did you do?
Harper. I arose—he came twice to me, I believe he called twice.
Att. Gen. As soon as you got up, whither went you, and what did you do?
Harper. I went directly to the Press-room, and helped him and Mr. Vezey to work it off.
Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner there?—Harper. Yes.
Att. Gen. Do you remember the Composing the Press?
Harper. Yes, I do remember it.
Att. Gen. Was that Libel, (show him one of the Proof-sheets)---do you remember, was that composed---hold it in your Hand---was that composed by the Prisoner from the Manuscript?
Harper. I remember his composing Part of it, but not all, because I was not in the Room.
Att. Gen. Are you sure you saw him compose Part from the Manuscript?—Harper. Yes.
Att. Gen. Who had the Manuscript?
Harper. I laid it before him on the Case, and he composed the Press. I can't say as to all of it.
Att. Gen. Talk you, look upon the Paper, can you be positive whether that is the very Paper he composed from the Manuscript?
Harper. I believe it is.
Att. Gen. Why?
Harper. Because it was done after the same Manner as this is, and nothing was done in the House at that Time of such a Volume.
Att. Gen. Look upon the Paper. Is that right or wrong imposed?
Harper. This is wrong imposed.
Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of this being wrong imposed?
Harper. I remember he came up and said, I have wrong transposed the Page, and must alter it.
Att. Gen. And was this after the Proof-sheets of one of them was wrought off?
Harper. It was after one was wrought off.
Att. Gen. Then afterwards did he impose a second right?
Harper. Yes, Sir, he did.
Att. Gen. Look upon that which is right imposed, which is in your Hand. Was that the Paper imposed afterwards right?
Harper. I can't say, this is the very next Paper that was pulled off. I do verily believe this Paper was pulled off at the same time.
Att. Gen. Is that right imposed, or wrong imposed, the second Paper?
Harper. This is right imposed.
Att. Gen. Do you remember after he said he had wrong imposed one, that there was another right imposed afterwards?
Harper. I can't remember the Words.
Att. Gen. I don't ask the Words.---Do you remember another that was right imposed?
Harper. I know there was.
Att. Gen. By whom?---Harper. By him.
Att. Gen. Look upon those two Papers in your Hand (other Papers given to him), whether are they Proof-sheets?
Harper. Yes, they are in the way of Printing what we call Proof-sheets.
Att. Gen. Why, what are the Marks?
Harper. You see wrong Letters, and here that mark'd out, and that mark'd in, in the Margin.
Att. Gen. Are those the usual Corrections?
Harper. As far as I have seen.
Att. Gen. Look upon one of those Papers, and see if you can find the Interlineation of any Word?
Mr. Bootle. In written Hand---look upon it. Do you see it---what Word is it?---Harper. The Word fit.
Mr. Bootle. Do you know whose Hand that is?
Harper. Truly I can't swear to the Hand.
Mr. Bootle. Have you seen the Prisoner write?
Harper. Some small Matter, but not much.
Mr. Bootle. Can you tell, or do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?
Harper. I can't swear it.
Mr. Bootle. Is it like his Hand-writing?---Harper. It is something like it.
Mr. Bootle. I ask you now as to the Types and Letters, do you know the Types and Letters belong to your Mistress's Printing-house?
Harper. Nobody can tell that.
Mr. Lutwyche. You say, you saw him compose, what Letters did he compose with?---Harper. Mrs. Matthews's.
Mr. Bootle. Those Letters he composed with at that Time, what Resemblance do they bear, compared with those Letters in your Hand?
Harper. I can't tell.
Mr. Bootle. Don't you remember the Letters he composed with at that Time?
Harper. Yes, Sir, the same Letter as this.
Att. Gen. I ask you as to that, whether the Letters that were composed with, when the Press was set, was the same Letter with that Impression in your Hand?---Harper. Yes, Sir.
Att. Gen. When he called you up, and set you to Work, whether did he assist you himself, or did any Body else?
Harper. He took them off of the Press.
Att. Gen. How many were present?---Harper. I don't remember any but us.
Att. Gen. Name who.---Harper. We Persons that were up.
Att. Gen. Who were those?
Harper. Mr. John Matthews, Mr. Vezey and I---
Att. Gen. How many were printed off?---Harper. Nigh a Thousand.
Att. Gen. Of the whole?
Harper. A Thousand of each of the two Half-sheets.
Att. Gen. After you had wrought off so many, about what Time had you finished?---Harper. I can't tell exactly.
Att. Gen. You need not be exact.
Harper. Between eight and nine a'Clock, as I take it.
Att. Gen. What became of them?---Harper. He sent them away, but whither I can't tell.

Att. Gen. How do you know that?
Harper. Because he came and bundled them up, and laid one flaid for them below.
Att. Gen. Was there any Money paid?
Harper. I can't say any thing to that.
Att. Gen. Look upon those two Proof-sheets you have in your Hand, and I ask you whether you can be positive, or to the best of your Belief, those were the very Papers that were printed off at that Time?
Harper. To the best of my Belief they were.
Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any other Paper printed in Quarto?
Harper. No.
Mr. Reeves. (Afterwards Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas) Did you ever know printed at that Printing-press, any Paper that bears this Title afterwards?---Harper. No.
Mr. Reeves. At the Time of the composing, or at any time while the Impression was working off, did you read any Part of it?
Harper. I read the Title.
Mr. Reeves. Is that the Title?---Harper. Yes, this is the Title.
Mr. Bootle. After the first Proof-sheet that was imposed wrong, did any body else appear there to rectify the Mistake besides himself?
Harper. Not as I see.
Mr. Bootle. You was asked the Question of the Word fit, do you know of any body there to make that Correction besides himself?---Harper. No.
Mr. Hungerford. In whose Name is this House carried on?
Harper. In the Name of Mrs. Mary Matthews.
Mr. Hungerford. What is the Prisoner at the Bar, Master or Apprentice?
Harper. I don't know, he always carried himself as Master.
Mr. Hungerford. You say you saw the Writing before they composed it; pray, Sir, do you know whose Hand-writing it was?
Harper. No, Sir.
Mr. Hungerford. Do you take it to be the Prisoner's?---Harper. No, I do not.
Mr. Ketelbey. Have you not in your Trade one particular Person called the Press-man?---Harper. Yes, several.
Mr. Ketelbey. Who were they?
Harper. One Mr. Vezey, another Mr. Wiggins.
Mr. Ketelbey. Who were the Composers?
Harper. There were several in the House.
Mr. Ketelbey. Who were they?
Harper. There was Mr. Wiggins, Mr. Staples, and several others.
Mr. Ketelbey. What is their Work?
Harper. They composed and made ready for the Press.
Mr. Ketelbey. That Room that is adjoining to the Prisoner's Room, who lay in that Room?---Harper. I lay in it.
Mr. Ketelbey. How many Doors are there to the Room?---Harper. But one.
Ketelbey. Doth it go through out of his Room?---Harper. Yes.
Att. Gen. The Room that adjoins to the Room wherein the Prisoner lay, had you any Papers there?
Harper. I had one that was found in my Pocket.
Att. Gen. Was that all?---Harper. Yes.
Att. Gen. Was there any the Prisoner had there?
Harper. I can't be positive.
Att. Gen. Had you any more than that one in your Pocket that belonged to you?---Harper. No, Sir.

LAWRENCE VEZEY, sworn.
Att. Gen. Have you at any Time belonged to Mrs. Matthews's Printing-house?---Vezev. Yes, Sir.
Att. Gen. Where is it?
Vezev. In Little Britain, in Pelican Court.
Att. Gen. Do you remember whether, about June last, you was sent for, or called upon, by the Prisoner to come to work?
Vezev. No, I was not called for to come to work; but on Wednesday the third Day of June last, I went to work, as usual, in the Morning, between four and five o'Clock. When I came into the Court, the Apprentice lies backward, I called out, William! The Apprentice opened his Window up Two-pair-of-Stairs; says he, Old Gentleman, the Door is open. I went up into the Press-room. Mr. John Matthews came up; says he, Old Gentleman, I have a Jobb for you to do. Says I, Is the Work in haste? Yes, it must be done soon. Then came up William Harper; I asked him what it was. Says he, I don't know, he hath got a Jobb to do. About Nine o'Clock I went to Market, when my Companion went to Breakfast; in the mean time, there was a Form composed in Quarto, called Vox Populi Van Dei, I can't say who composed it; then John Matthews was gone out of the Room. When I came back from Market, and my Companion had breakfasted, I went to work again, as usual; and Mr. John Matthews came up, and said, Damn it, I have transposed the Pages; I saw no Proof-sheet; but he takes out the Form, and lays it on the Press, and puts it into Order.
Att. Gen. What do you call that, Imposing it right?
Vezev. Yes, Imposing it right.
Att. Gen. Did you see what it was?
Vezev. Yes, it was the Quarto, Vox Populi, I remember it very well, I laid it on, and he pulled it away himself.
Att. Gen. This was before the Impression was wrought off?
Vezev. Yes, Sir, after it was right imposed, he pulled off a Proof, and took it all away together.
Att. Gen. What did he pull away, a Proof that was right imposed?
Vezev. Yes.
L. C. J. Was that of the Libel?
Vezev. Yes, my Lord, he had got it off the Press, and corrected it.
Att. Gen. What, the Form of the Quarto, of Vox Populi?
Vezev. Yes. So having made it ready a Morning or two afterwards, Harper and I went to work, and worked off the Impression, and the Prisoner took it off.
Att. Gen. Do you remember how many were wrought off?
Vezev. A Thousand, a Ream.
Att. Gen. A Thousand of what?
Vezev. A Thousand of the first Half-sheet, and of the second.
Att. Gen. Did he give you any Money for this?
Vezev. After the Jobb was done, I had fourteen Shillings for William Harper's Share and mine.
Att. Gen. The Apprentice, had he any Money?

Vezey. Yes, he had as much as I; I had let Harper have the Money before, so I kept it.

Att. Gen. Now shew him the Libel;—what came of the Libel after the Impression was wrought off?

Vezey. He came up, and brought a great Hair-bag, and carried them away.

Att. Gen. Shew him the Proof-sheets: pray look upon them two, and tell us whether they are Proof-sheets?

Vezey. Yes, they are marked as Proof-sheets.

Att. Gen. Upon the Marks and View of the Paper, do you believe them Proof-sheets?—Vezey. Yes, I do.

Att. Gen. Do you remember the Letter?

Vezey. I remember such a Sort of a Letter, to the best of my Knowledge; I believe we had no other thing done in the House of the same kind before, or since.

Att. Gen. Look on those two Papers; is any thing wrong imposed?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, this is wrong imposed.

Att. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of the Prisoner?—Vezey. No.

Att. Gen. But you see him correct it?—Vezey. Yes.

Att. Gen. Do you remember, or can you by inspecting these Papers, recollect any of the Corrections he made?—Vezey. No, I can't.

Att. Gen. Did you look on the Paper that time it was worked off?

Vezey. Yes, I did, because the Title stood next to me; I took notice of Vox Populi, that is all; I never read the Paper.

Att. Gen. Do you believe those to be Proof-sheets of that Libel?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, I believe them to be two Proof-sheets.

Att. Gen. Do you believe That a Paper wrought from the Impression?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord, I believe That to be one of them.

Att. Gen. Shew him another.—Vezey. Yes, I believe them to be some of the same Papers, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Ketelbey. You say you believe these Papers shewn you, to be the Papers wrought off from that Impression?—Vezey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you any Reason for your Belief, only as you see the Title?—Vezey. Yes, I have Reason to believe it, because no Quarto or any thing was done of the same Form.

Mr. Ketelbey. Upon your Oath, was that the Title Vox Populi Vox Dei?

Vezey. That was the only Time I see it, it was Latin, I did not understand it.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you look upon the whole Title-page?

Vezey. I remember nothing but Vox Populi Vox Dei.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was there any more beside?

Vezey. Yes, there was the Head in Latin, and the Flower over it.

Att. Gen. Do you believe that very Paper to be one wrought off at that time?

Vezey. Yes, I do; and here is the Latin, I only read Vox Populi Vox Dei.

Mr. Reeves. I think you say there is a Flower, look upon that Flower, and see whether it be a Flower of the same kind?

Vezey. I believe it was like this Flower.

Mr. Ketelbey. Now you have the Paper in your Hand, pray read the other Line next to you if you can.—Vezey. From the Solemnity of the—

Mr. Ketelbey. The Line above it.

Vezey. Ex ore tuo te judico.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any Part of the Title of the Book but Vox Populi Vox Dei?—Vezey. No, my Lord.

Mr. Ketelbey. Had you any Discourse with Mr. George Matthews about this Matter, your giving Evidence on this Occasion?

Vezey. No, my Lord, I never see Mr. George Matthews since the Prisoner hath been in Custody; I was brought up lately from St. Albans.

Mr. Hungerford. Are you in Custody now?

Vezey. Yes, my Lord.

JOHN DARBY and JAMES ROBERTS, sworn.

Att. Gen. My Lord, these are Master-Printers; and we call these Gentlemen in Confirmation of the Evidence which hath been given; they will account for the Proof-sheets, that unless it be upon Proof-sheets no such Marks appear.

JOHN DARBY.
[The Sheets shewn him.]

Att. Gen. Sir, you are a Printer, and much versed in Printing, do you know what these are?—Mr. Darby. What they are, as how?

Att. Gen. In the way of Printing, are they Proof-sheets?

Darby. This may be taken either as a Proof-sheet, or a revised Sheet; a Proof-sheet is that which is first pulled after the Form is composed, and which is read by a Corrector; and what Faults are made by the Compositor are marked on the Side, and this appears to be of that Nature.

Att. Gen. What is a revised Sheet?

Darby. A revised Sheet is after a Proof is corrected, another Sheet is pulled and compared with that we call the Proof, to see whether the Faults are corrected; if not, they are marked a second Time.

Att. Gen. But it is either a Proof-sheet or revised Sheet?

Darby. Yes, it certainly is one or t'other.

Att. Gen. Your Reason?

Darby. Because there are several Marks on the Side.

Att. Gen. Is that according to the Custom?—Darby. Yes.

Att. Gen. Look upon them, are they both right imposed; how are they in that respect? Look upon the first, are they both the same?

Darby. No, Sir, I think not; this former doth not seem to be rightly imposed; for here the first Page is out of its proper Place, that is for certain.

Lord Chief Justice. That is what you called wrong imposed?

Darby. Wrong imposed, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Look on the other.

Darby. This seems to be right imposed.

Att. Gen. Are they imposed alike?—Darby. Certainly not.

Att. Gen. I ask you as to both these, I don't confine the Question to one only, whether they are Proof or revised Sheets?

Darby. I take them to be one or t'other, by their not appearing to me to be both Proof-sheets; by the one being wholly imposed wrong, and the other afterwards transposed and made right.

Att. Gen. In the Course of Printing, whether is it not usual, where the Impression is more than half a Sheet, that there may be a Superfluity of Sheets of one more than the other?

Darby. It is very common, if a Book consists of several Sheets, it is almost impossible the Number should be exactly even, sometimes it may happen.

Mr. Reeves. Look on the Corrections made on those Proof-sheets; give an Account if they are made in the usual Manner.

Darby. So far as I have observed, the Corrections are the same, they are made in the common way of correcting.

Att. Gen. Sir, you are asked whether the Corrections are in the usual Manner of correcting Proof-sheets?

Darby. They are, they are not all, a Colon is marked in one, and not in another, but a Comma; that is not material, and where it is as instead of in, that is a plain Mistake, but they are generally marked in both as they ought to be.

JAMES ROBERTS, sworn.

Att. Gen. Mr. Roberts, are you a Master-Printer?

Mr. Roberts. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Look upon these and tell us, in your Judgment, in the way of Printing, what these are; Proof-sheets or revised Sheets?

Roberts. They may be either Proof-sheets or revised Sheets; they are Sheets corrected after the Form is composed, but whether first or second, one or t'other, I can't say, because the Faults are marked in the Side; and that is always done, it is the usual way.

Att. Gen. Look upon the Imposing of those two Papers.

Roberts. This is wrong imposed, this Side-page ought to be here.

Att. Gen. Look upon the other.—Roberts. This is right imposed.

Att. Gen. You speak as to both of them, by the Manner of their Correction, both of them to be Proof-sheets or revised Sheets?

Roberts. Most certainly they are one or t'other.

Att. Gen. I think now, my Lord, we are intitled to read the Libel; put in That that was found in his Pocket, if you please.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Act of Parliament is, If any shall declare, affirm and maintain, by Writing or Printing, &c. that is the Offence pretended to be made out by this Indictment. Now I most humbly submit to your Lordship, whether any Part of this Evidence comes up to make out this Fact?

L. C. J. The Question now is, whether the Libel is to be read? Have you any Objection to it?

Mr. Hungerford. Surely, my Lord; unless it be a Proof by way of Evidence, that makes out this Offence charged in the Indictment, it is not proper.

Mr. Ketelbey. They may perhaps give Evidence, what they call a co-operating Evidence.

L. C. J. Read that found in his Pocket.

Clerk. Ex ore tuo te judico. Vox Populi Vox Dei. To all true Lovers of Liberty, Vox Populi Vox Dei. From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor on the Nation after the Manner pretended, and the Disappointment in the Attempt of proving him so, I think it is Demonstration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; and all Assertors of limited Monarchy must allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Person having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, shews he only wants to be known by us, to be admired; and we only want the Enjoyment of him, to make us happy. I will conclude with these Remarks: first, That every Assertor of Hereditary Right must be a Jacobite; secondly, That every Whig who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, must be so; and, thirdly, Every Assertor of limited Monarchy must be so: the Chevalier being endowed with all princely Virtues, so that all Rights concur in him.

Mr. Hungerford. Read on.

Clerk. I hope some Patriot will rouse up the People to shake off this arbitrary Government, and animate them with the Saying of the noble Roman, who defended the Capitol,

Livy: quousque tandem, &c.

How long will you be ignorant of your Strength? Count your Numbers: sure you ought to fight with more Resolution for Liberty than your Oppressors do for Dominion.

Count your Numbers.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I did not oppose the Gentlemen reading this Part of the Libel, but since they have made it a Part of the Evidence, it is my Duty to observe what the Spirit of this Patriot was; it is a direct Alarm to the People to rouse up, and throw off this arbitrary Government; the Malice plainly appears in this latter Part of the Libel; I hope some Patriot will rouse up the People to shake off this arbitrary Government, and animate them with the Saying of the noble Roman, who defended the Capitol, How long will you be ignorant of your Strength? Count your Numbers: sure you ought to fight with more Resolution for Liberty than your Oppressors do for Dominion—Count your Numbers.—A more dangerous Attempt to alarm and rouse up the People against the Government, can't well be.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Attorney is going on with a Clause that is not in the Indictment; he is well acquainted with the Nature of Proceedings, and that it is not regular.

Att. Gen. I don't mention them as Words set forth in the Indictment; but sure I may make use of another Part of the Libel to explain this.

Mr. Reeves. We humbly apprehend, it is necessary for us to produce not only these Papers taken in his Pocket, but these Proof-sheets taken at the same time.

Att. Gen. The other is the eight or ten superfluous Sheets, Part of the Libel as proved by the first Witness; there are eight or ten Half-

* Count your Numbers!—Thank God, the Number of Jacobites were at that time but small; but now, we have so GLORIOUS A KING on the Throne, (one of the most justly admired, and best belayed Princes, that ever adorned one) whose chiefest Happiness is to reign in the Hearts of his People, there is scarce such a thing as a Jacobite to be found.

heets which were found in his Possession, I insist upon that as a Circumstance, to shew that he is the Printer of this Libel.

Serjeant Cheshire. Mr. Darby told your Lordship how it could be accounted for.

Attorney General. I desire the Jury may have a View of them.

(They were all accordingly given to the Jury, and being taken back again.)

Att. Gen. The Jury shall have them again by and bye.

Mr. DELAFAY sworn.

Att. Gen. Sir, pray look upon those Papers.—Have you looked upon these printed Papers?

Mr. Delafay. I have, Sir.

Att. Gen. Was you ever present, and where, when the Prisoner was examined touching these Papers? If you was, what passed?

Dela. He was examined before Mr. Buckley and me, at the Secretary's Office.

Att. Gen. Touching what?

Dela. Touching these Papers.—The first Question I asked him, whether he owned them?—He did own them; the Examination was taken in Writing, and signed by us both. I desire it may be read.

Att. Gen. Were the Papers there, had he them before him at the Time of that or any other Examination?

Dela. They were before him on the Table at that Time.

Att. Gen. Had he the Sight and Perusal of them at that Time?

Dela. He owned them to be taken from him.

Att. Gen. Did he say any thing relating to these Papers, how he came by them; whether did he deny before you that they were printed by him?

Dela. I can't justly remember; I desire the Examination may be read.—I remember in general he was very shy of owning any Thing; this Paper contains what he said.

Att. Gen. That Paper can't be made use of.

Serj. Cheshire. Did you enquire concerning the Author of these Papers?

Dela. I can't remember I did.

Att. Gen. Was you present at any Examination at any other Place?

Dela. He appeared afterwards before my Lords Justices, and was examined.—He was told, that he was charged, with two other Persons then named, (I don't remember their Names) with printing such a Paper; he answered, So it seems.—He was asked, how came you to busy yourself concerning it? My Lords, says he, it was Necessity; his Brother did not give him his Allowance.—He was asked about the Author.—That he refused to tell. Some Time after that he writ a Letter to me, desiring to be brought before the Lords Justices again, intimating some Discoveries; then he told them a Story that a Gentleman from the Secretary's Office had told him, if he could procure himself to be brought before the Lords Justices, the Secretaries would be kind to him.—By the whole of his Discourse, it was taken for granted he printed it, but he would not discover the Author.

Serj. Cheshire. Repeat then his Words before my Lords Justices.

Dela. He said that his Brother had promised to make him an Allowance, and did not; Necessity, Want of Money, made him do this.

Serj. Cheshire. I think you say he was charged with printing the Libel? The Answer he gave was, So it seems. Upon this there was a farther Question, How came you to do a Thing of this Nature? He did not directly say, I did not do it, but he excused himself upon not having received Money from his Friends, intimating that it was Necessity put him upon it.

Att. Gen. Is that the Letter you received from him?

Dela. Yes.—I will tell you how I came to know I received it from him. He did not disown it.

Att. Gen. Was it read to him as his Letter?—Dela. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did he deny it?—Dela. No.

Att. Gen. Did you enter into any Expofulation about it?

Dela. I told him, when you writ this Letter you was of another Mind. Truly, he said, he did not know the Author, and he could not discover him.

Mr. Boote. Did he describe any Person that came to him?

Dela. He said, a Person in a Tye-wig came to him, he apprehended him to come from the Secretary's Office.

Att. Gen. A Letter directed to an Under-Secretary of State relating to Mr. Matthews, desiring to be brought up before the Lords Justices; when there, he is asked about the Letter; he says he did write it, hoping he should find Favour from the Secretaries.

Lord Chief Justice. Pray give an Account when the Letter was read to him, what Answer he made. Did he acknowledge That to be his Letter?

Dela. I can't directly say he did; but I told him, When you writ that Letter, you seemed to be of another Mind. He was asked what was the Occasion of his telling us of making Discoveries; this is trifling with us; when you writ that Letter, you seemed of another Mind.

Lord Chief Justice. What did he say to that?

Dela. He said, I can't discover the Author.

Mr. Hungerford. Now, in your Lordships Judgment, whether any thing mentioned proves that Letter to be his?—Pray, Sir, repeat what you said.

Dela. When he was brought before the Lords Justices, on my receiving that Letter, when he was brought in, he was told, he had written a Letter to me.

Mr. Hungerford. What did he say to that?

Dela. He told them a Person whom he apprehended came from the Secretary's Office, a Gentleman in a Tye-wig, had been with him, and told him, if he could procure himself to be brought to the Lords Justices, on his Submission the Secretaries would be kind to him.

Att. Gen. My Lord, here is a Letter sent in the Name of this Man, desiring to be brought up, and he is brought up; the Letter is read to him, he is asked the Occasion of his sending it, and he gives an Answer; tells you, that which he says was the Occasion, a Gentleman, that he apprehended came from the Secretary's Office, and told him, if he could procure himself to be brought up to the Lords Justices, the Secretaries would be kind to him. These are his Words; is it necessary a Man in direct Terms should confess, It is my Hand-writing? But these are probable strong Circumstances of his acknowledging it, I think.

Mr. BUCKLEY sworn. Was you present when this young Man was examined? or had you any Discourse about this Libel?

Mr. Buckley. I desire to see the Examination. I find on the 7th of July, the Messenger that brought in the Papers laid them down; says he, These were found in his Pocket, and these in his Room; he laid them down on Mr. Delafay's Table; I asked him if the Papers were taken in his Possession? he said they were; he was also asked how he came by them.

Att. Gen. Did he say any thing in direct Answer or Excuse?

Buckley. No.—I told him, you are charged with being concerned in printing these Papers, which is a great Crime.—He made no Answer, but took Snuff.

Att. Gen. Do you know any thing more fell from the Mouth of the Prisoner touching these Libels?

Buckley. No, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case with the Prisoner at the Bar, who (as the Counsel for the King observe) is a Boy, a Youth, and an Apprentice; I thank them for that Observation; that is an Age which is usually exempt from Malice and Design, and without proving both being in the Prisoner at the Bar, he must be acquitted of the Offence in the Indictment. Malice and Design are commonly the Temper of advanced Years, and not of Apprentice Boys. The Accusation against the Prisoner is founded on an Act of Parliament, made in the 4th Year of the late Queen, and re-enacted on the Union in the 6th Year of her Reign; the Crime made High-Treason by that Act of Parliament, so far as I remember, (for it being dark I cannot read) is, that if any Person or Persons shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now stiles himself King of Great Britain, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; or that any other Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament of the first of King William and Queen Mary, and an Act of the twelfth of King William, every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason.

This is the Crime the Act of Parliament makes to be High-Treason; the Evidence to support this Indictment, and that lays this Offence to the Prisoner's Charge, are six Witnesses, two Messengers, the Apprentice, the Journeyman, and two Gentlemen of the Secretary's Office, Mr. Delafay, and Mr. Buckley.

I shall, my Lord, on the behalf of the Prisoner at the Bar, humbly offer to your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, some general, and likewise some particular Considerations, which I hope will plainly shew him, the Prisoner, to be an innocent Man, and that there is no just Ground for the heavy Charge he now lies under. In the general, my Lord, as to the Act of Parliament upon which this Indictment is founded, I humbly offer it to your Lordship's Consideration, whether it was calculated for such a Case as the Prisoner's is supposed to be.

The Words of the Act which describe the Offence are—I just now repeated them; and the next Paragraph in the Act gives Direction for proclaiming the next in Succession of the House of Hanover, immediately upon the Queen's Death; and it makes it High-Treason in the Privy Counsellors and others who should neglect their Duty in that Matter; and we all know that the Matter under the Consideration of the Parliament at that Time was, that since upon the Queen's Death, the next Successor was like to be beyond Sea, to secure that the Protestant Succession should take place (as now, God be praised, to all our Comforts, it hath), for this Reason it is, that upon the Queen's Death a Regency is appointed, the proclaiming the Protestant Succession secured by a Law which makes it Treason in all Persons of all Degrees who neglect doing it; for this Reason likewise, I humbly presume it is, that denying the Title of any of the Successors in the Protestant Line, is not made Treason as denying the Queen's is; for can any Man think why otherwise denying his present Majesty's Title to the Crown when he is in Possession, should be a less Offence than denying the Queen's, when she was alive? The only Reason which occurs to me for this Difference is (I speak it with all Submission), that the Parliament did look upon it, that when the Protestant Succession had taken place, that Act had attained its End, and was in effect to determine; for surely as to the Nature of the Thing, he who oppugns his present most gracious Majesty's Title, is as great a Criminal as he who should oppugn the Queen's, or the Title of former Kings or Queens of this Realm, and yet such oppugning or denying the King's Title to the Crown is not (as I think it at least) made Treason by this Act. But supposing (though not admitting) that the Act of Parliament was intended to operate upon such a Case as the Prisoner's is supposed to be, yet the Witnesses do not prove that the Prisoner did maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, affirm or maintain, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms. And yet further, if it should be supposed that the Prisoner did affirm and maintain the Words in the Indictment, yet with humble Submission the Words don't amount to an Affirmation that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of this Realm, which is the Offence he is charged with.—The Criminal described by this Act must maliciously, advisedly, and directly, maintain and affirm; what he doth must be malicious: surely his Youth, and the Inoffensiveness of his Carriage, and Course of his Life hitherto, will make the Imputation of Malice groundless; besides, there is no Malice proved. The Word advisedly, which must likewise be an Ingredient in this Offence, is mentioned in Opposition to a rash and inconsiderate Act; and in this Case the Proof is so far from charging the Prisoner with having done it advisedly, that he doth not appear so much as to have read it. And it is not pretended that he was the Author, Contriver, or Publisher of it. The Word directly, is likewise inserted in the Act, in Opposition to

Inauendoes

Innuendoes or forced Constructions.—As to the Evidence, the two first Witnesses, they manifestly contradict one another. Each of them contend for the Honour of picking the Boy's Pocket.—Hutchins swears he took the Papers out of the Prisoner's Pocket; and Roberts, that he took them out of his Pocket, and Hutchins only peeped in at the Door. And as to the Papers found in the Room next to the Bed-chamber, it doth not appear who put them there; and since every probable thing is to be presumed in favour of a Man's Life, the Messenger may be as well presumed to put them there as the Prisoner. And it must be remarked too, that the Papers sworn to be taken out of his Pocket, are not taken upon the Prisoner's Person, but said to be found in his Coat Pocket lying in the Room; and it is no necessary Inference that the Prisoner did put them there, some other Person may have done that. As to what one of these two Witnesses (the Messengers) swears, about a Discourse betwixt the Prisoner and him in the Coach, as he brought him to Newgate, relating to the Prisoner's getting to be acquitted, by Bribing the Jury; it is so improbable, that I can hardly think any one can believe it; that Evidence seems rather to be calculated to inflame the present Jury than to relate a Truth; but the present Jury are too wise to be imposed upon, especially in the Case of a Man's Life; upon the whole, these two Witnesses have contradicted each other upon their Oaths, and little or no Credit is to be given to them.

The next Witnesses are Harper the Apprentice, and Pezey the Journeyman, and by the Notes I have taken of their Evidence, it doth not amount to make out a criminal Charge upon the Prisoner. The Prisoner is not thereby made the Author, Contriver, Printer, or Publisher, of this Libel. One of the Witnesses indeed says, that he was called up to assist the Prisoner to do a Jobb, and that the Prisoner did overlook some of the Proof-sheets; but it doth not appear that he over-looked all the Proof-sheets, or that the Sheets he did look over, were those supposed to be criminal.

We are, my Lord, in the Case of a new Law, upon which none hath been yet tried, I think none accused, till the unfortunate young Man at the Bar; and we hope we are intitled to a favourable Construction of any inadvertent Thing the Prisoner may have done; surely to co-operate in some little Part of Printing a Side or Part of this Libel, cannot be Treason. Printing itself is but a Mechanical Art, and one may print a whole Volume, and not know one Jot of the Contents, Drift, or Tendency of the Book; and in the present Case, the Prisoner is not the Master Printer; he is but an Apprentice, and the Trade is carried on by his Mother, and elder Brother. And I hope it will always, in an English Judicature, be deemed a severe Construction of a Law, that a Man should be judged guilty of a capital Offence, for a Fact in committing of which he did not know that he sinned or offended against his own Life.—As to what the Gentlemen, Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley, say, they say nothing which can affect the Prisoner; they could not prove the Letter for which they were called, tho' Mr. Attorney seemed to press them hard upon that Head; what Mr. Delafay says makes for the Prisoner. He says, the Prisoner told him, that what he had done was done out of Want and Necessity; how then can it be said to be done maliciously, advisedly, and directly? without which it cannot be the Offence contended for. And now, my Lord, having remarked upon the Evidence, all that my Memory or Notes could enable me, I humbly crave leave to insist, that the Words laid in the Indictment do not amount to any affirming, or maintaining, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of this Realm. I neither have, nor ever had, this filly as well as wicked Libel; and I have therefore taken the Words as they are laid in the Indictment, omitting the Innuendoes only, and I have compared them with the Book, when read by the King's Counsel, in the Course of their Evidence; and they are these: From the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor on the Nation, after the manner pretended, and the Disappointment in the Attempt of proving him so; I think it is Demonstration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour. Is there in that Paragraph any affirming, and maintaining, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms? The Words are, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his favour; the Sentence begins with an if, and is no Affirmation at all, and but a loose way of talking, as we call it, with ifs and ands; it can never amount to an Affirmation that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms.—The Libel goes on and says, that all Assertors of limited Monarchy must allow that ought to be preferred, if the Person having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, shews he only wants to be known by us to be admired, and that we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. Surely, my Lord, this Part of the Libel, tho' assisted with several unnatural Innuendoes, neither affirms, nor maintains any thing at all.

The other Words are these: I will conclude with these Remarks. First, That every Assertor of Hereditary Right must be a Jacobite. Secondly, Every Whig, who makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government, must be so. Thirdly, Every Assertor of limited Monarchy must be so.—The Chevalier being endowed with all Princely Virtues, so that all Rights concur in him. This, my Lord, I think is the only Paragraph in which the Word Right is mentioned; and yet, with humble Submission, it doth not amount to an affirming, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of this Realm. The Author seems to please himself with mixing of Companies, he puts Whig and Jacobite together, and so let them continue; for my Part, I believe there will be no High-Treason in that; surely the Words that all Princely Virtues concur in him, gives no Colour for the Inference: he may paint or describe him with the Perfections of an Angel, if he pleases; but if he doth not affirm, and maintain, that he hath a Right to the Crown of this Realm, it is not Treason. I say, affirm and maintain, for the Words are in the Conjunctive, so that a bare Assertion, or Affirmation, that the Pretender hath a Right, is not sufficient, unless he support such Assertion by Reason or Argument; and for my Part, I think there is not one Word of Argument in the whole Book.

Your Lordship observes how many Innuendoes this Indictment is supported with, and how foreign and unnatural some of them are, even the chief of them; Chevalier, Innuendo the Person lately called the Prince of Wales, &c. is, with humble Submission, in a Case of Life and Death, not to be tolerated because of the Uncertainty, there being more Knights than one, and more Orders of Knighthood than one in all Kingdoms and Countries. It is said by all the Judges in Griffith's Case, third Adversum, fol. 202, that an Indictment is the Declaration of the King against the Life of a Subject, and ought therefore to set forth a sufficient Certainty of the Facts, which shall not be supplied by Arguments or any Intendment whatsoever. This, my Lord, was the Opinion of the Judges; and I will be bold to say, let any one read over this Indictment without the Innuendoes, and they can make nothing of it as to the present Accusation. Upon the Revolution, the highest Court of Justice in the Kingdom, the House of Peers did brand this Practice of Innuendoes, which were but too familiar in the preceding Reigns. It is in the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston, which being quoted in Dr. Sacheverell's Trial, Mr. Attorney can be no Stranger to it. Sir Samuel was accused for a Paragraph of a Letter that was intercepted at the Post-house; the Offence was described or ascertained by five or six Innuendoes in the Information, upon which Sir Samuel was convicted and fined; and the Record being removed by Writ of Error before the House of Lords, the Lords reversed the Judgment; and the Reason assigned for the Reversal is, that Innuendoes, or supposed and forced Constructions, ought not to be allowed, but that all Accusations ought to be plain.

I must therefore humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether this Liberty of supporting Accusations by Innuendoes, ought to receive any Countenance from a Court of Justice, or from a Jury of substantial Freeholders of the City of London; sure it is hard that any Subject should be made guilty of a capital Offence by a laboured or forced Construction of doubtful Words; we therefore, upon the whole, humbly hope that the Prisoner will be acquitted.

Mr. Kettleby. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am likewise assigned Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar; and indeed, my Lord, I must own, that from the time I first saw this Indictment, I have been somewhat at a loss to know upon what Statute it was grounded; what Act of Parliament had made the Facts therein charged to be High Treason. But since Mr. Attorney hath been pleased to insist upon the Sixth of the Queen, Chapter the 7th, as the Foundation of this Indictment, I shall beg leave to consider that Statute, and submit it to your Lordship's Determination, supposing this Fact as laid in the Indictment to be true, whether it amounts to High-Treason within that Statute or not.

My Lord, I would observe, that this Statute is introductive of a new Law, penal in the highest degree, making that High-Treason which was never High-Treason before, but was an Offence of a lower Species; and the Prisoner is the first Instance, the first Precedent against whom this Act has been endeavoured to be put in execution.

That Clause of the Act which makes it High-Treason to deny the Power and Authority of the Parliament to limit the Succession of the Crown, does not, as I take it, at all relate to the present Question; and therefore, I shall only trouble your Lordship with some Observations upon the other three Cases which the Statute has made High-Treason. To each of these the Act hath annexed, that it must be by Writing or Printing directly; I beg leave to lay what Weight I can upon this Word directly: the Words of the Act are, That if any Person or Persons shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms; or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; or that any other Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the same, except the Persons to whom it is limited by the several Acts of Parliament, every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason. The Word directly goes to all these three Cases; there must be a direct Affirmation of the Truth of one of these three Propositions, or else it cannot be High-Treason within this Statute. I desire to know if, in the Libel that hath been read to you, there is any such Expression as the Crown of these Realms, the Pretender, King James the Third, the Prince of Wales, or any other of the Periphrases or Descriptions mentioned in the Statute; I admit there is something said in the Libel about the Chevalier, but who this Chevalier is, or who is meant by that Name, I will not take upon me to determine. But sure I am there is no such Word in the Statute; it is a general, a common Appellation, a meer individuum vagum, and without some particular Addition, some explanatory Restriction, cannot properly be applicable to one Man more than another; how then the Prisoner came to be charged with affirming directly, that the Pretender had a Right to the Crown of these Realms, when there is no such Word in the whole Book, when the Statute expressly confines the Offence to such particular Propositions in the Words there set down, without saying to that or the like Effect, I cannot conceive.

The Reason why we desired to have the whole Book read, was to see whether there were any such Words there; and we had no other Way of being satisfied in that Point, since Mr. Attorney, upon the Application of our Solicitor, was pleased to deny us an Opportunity of seeing the Libel; and by the Tenor of the Indictment, the Gentlemen who drew it, were conscious, or at least seemed to be, that there is no direct Affirmation of this Nature in the Libel. If they were not of this Opinion, why have they put in their Innuendoes? If the sense had been plain, full and direct, what Occasion was there for propping and supporting it with auxiliary Clauses and Explanations? They have inserted one Innuendo: If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that, Jus hereditarium ad coronam hujus regni, Innuendo; and in another Place, All Rights concur in him, Innuendo all Rights to the Crown of these Realms; is there any thing of the Crown of these Realms preceding? All Rights concur in him; Rights to what? Is it directly affirmed, or doth it necessarily follow, it must be Right to the Crown of these Realms? Are not these most strange and strained Innuendoes? It may as well be understood to be a Right to any Part of Africa, or any thing else, as to the Crown of these Realms.

In my Lord Coke's fourth Report, Folio 17, adversus Rutlech, it is resolved, That an Innuendo cannot alter the Matter or Sense of the Words themselves, themselves, nor extend the general Words by an Imagination of an Intent, which is not apparent by the preceding Words to which the Innuendo refers, and in effect it stands in the Place of a Prodiſt. I shall mention but one other Case, which several of your Lordships well remember when it was in Agitation, and some of the Gentlemen of the other Side were concerned as Counsel in it. It was Misbaillmas the 9th of King William, the King against Gripe (Lord Raymond's Reports, Vol. I. p. 256.) an Information for Perjury; and laid, that the Defendant swore that Mr. Stroud was not at Newbam, Innuendo Newbam in Devonshire. The Court, in giving Judgment, laid it down as a Rule, that no Innuendo could supply the Defect of a sufficient Certainty; and that the only Use of it was to denote some Person or Thing before-mentioned.

My Lord, I could offer several other Cases which explain the Doctrine of Innuendoes; and would shew the Absurdity of the Innuendoes in this Indictment; but I shall not trouble your Lordship with them at present, relying upon the Cases already cited; and therefore we humbly insist upon it, that the Prisoner is not guilty of directly affirming that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; neither is he, as we apprehend, within the reach of either of the other two Clauses; the first relates only to the Queen, her late glorious Majesty, now dead; whether the whole Act was temporary, and determined upon the Demise of the late Queen, and the establishing the Succession in the House of Hanover, I shall not at present debate, submitting that Point to your Lordship's Determination, upon the Weight of what Mr. Hungerford hath offered on that Head; but this I think I may humbly insist upon, that this first Clause at least was temporary; and since the Statute expresses it in Words of the present Tense, Whoever shall affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, no Person at this Time, by the Efficacy of this Clause, can be guilty of High-Treason.

As to the third Clause, Whoever shall affirm, that any other Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament made First Gulielmi & Mariae, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and one other Act, made the Twelfth Gulielmi Tertii, intituled, An Act for the Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and the several Acts made for the Union of the Two Kingdoms, &c. surely it will not be contended, that the Prisoner is guilty of the Offence charged in this Clause; for then this Indictment can never maintain the Charge; proper Clauses of those several Statutes should, in such Case, have been set forth in the Indictment, and proper Averments to bring the Prisoner's Case within this Clause.

I must admit, that if it was done advisedly and directly, the Law will imply it to be maliciously; I shall therefore only beg Leave to add one further Observation upon one other single Word of this Statute, and that is upon the Word advisedly. Whoever shall advisedly maintain, affirm, &c. Advisedly here must necessarily import, not only a competent Capacity, but the actual Exercise of that Power of thinking, and, in some Degree, Maturity of Judgment and due Premeditation; it stands in Contradistinction to a rash, heedless, and inconsiderate Act. Some of the Gentlemen of the other Side have been pleased, with a laudable and generous Compassion, to take Notice of the Prisoner's Youth; can a Boy of Seventeen be said advisedly to maintain an Assertion contrary to one of the three recited Clauses, when the Matter is so far from being plain and clear to much older Heads; and at the most is so dubious, that your Lordship, in your great Justice, hath permitted it to be debated for several Hours, and perhaps the Debate may hold some Hours longer, Whether the Paragraphs of the Libel, set forth in the Indictment, are a direct Affirmation of what is made criminal by either of those Clauses in the Statute? I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will likewise have a compassionate Regard to the tender Years and Unadvisedness of the Prisoner.

My Lord, the next thing we are to submit to your Lordship's Consideration is, whether the Evidence that hath been given be sufficient to convict the Prisoner of the Fact, supposing it to be High-Treason. Upon a Trial for High-Treason, the greatest Crime, the Strength ought to be adequate, in some measure, to the Nature of the Offence; for a Person that is indicted for High-Treason to be found guilty upon dubious Evidence, strained Constructions, Implications, or far-fetched Innuendoes, never was yet thought just, nor will be by your Lordship.

My Lord Coke, in his third Institutes, fol. 12, hath laid down the Rule of Evidence, in Cases of High-Treason, where he comments upon the Words of the Statute of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, proveably, that is, upon direct and manifest Proof, not upon conjectural Presumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit, but upon good and sufficient Proof; and several Statutes have provided, that there shall be, at least, two credible Witnesses to every Species of Treason, and each Overt Act laid in the Indictment.

Whether the Evidence, that hath been offered in this Case, comes up to my Lord Coke's Rule, or be sufficient to convict the Prisoner of the Crimes laid to his Charge, I must submit to your Lordship's Judgment, when I have made some few general Remarks, without repeating or going into the Particulars thereof. They have examined the two Messengers, the two Servants in the House, two Gentlemen belonging to the Secretary's Office, and some Master-Printers.

What the Printers have said, in relation to the Method of printing, composing, correcting and imposing right or wrong, we have no Reason to controvert, not apprehending that the Prisoner is the least affected thereby.

As to those worthy Gentlemen, Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley, they delivered their Evidence with such a tender Regard to Truth, without stretching one Tittle beyond what they certainly remembered to be exact matter of Fact, that I should do an Injury to myself as well as to them, if I suspected in the least of the Reality of what they said; but the utmost that can be collected from their Evidence, as I apprehend, amounts only to some youthful Imprudences in the Person's Behaviour upon his Examination, and not to any Confession of the Fact charged upon him in the Indictment.

I appeal to your Lordship's Observation, whether John Hutchins and Thomas Roberts, the two Messengers, did not directly contradict one another; and Hutchins, that was first examined, directly contradicted himself? Hutchins swore he found two of the Libels, now produced, in the Prisoner's Pocket, and some more in his Bed-chamber; but upon his being cross-examined, he acknowledged that Roberts went first into his Room, and took them out of the Prisoner's Pocket; and when he said him strictly to the Room where the other Libels were taken, he could not be sure whether it was in the Prisoner's Room, or in the inner Room, where the Apprentice lay. Hutchins swore, they were never out of each other's Company, till they came to the Secretary's Office; and Roberts owned that he and Hutchins went in two different Coaches from the Prisoner's House.

William Harper the Apprentice, and Laurence Vezey the Journeyman, were next examined, and said indeed the Prisoner corrected one of the Sheets that was wrong imposed; and Vezey said, he took off the Proof-sheet; but is this Printing? Is correcting, or right imposing a Proof-sheet, the Overt Act that is made High-Treason by this Statute? Mr. Attorney is pleased to call it, Co-operating; but, my Lord, there are several preparatory Acts in this Art, the distinct Offices and Employments of different Persons, before it can be properly called Printing, and in the Course of our Evidence, we shall endeavour to explain its previous Parts and Gradations; and if it had been unquestionably proved that the Prisoner had a hand in preparing Sheets for the Press, yet we hope your Lordship will not construe that to be Co-operating, much less Printing; the most that can be made of it is, that he caused it to be printed; but causing or procuring such a Libel to be printed is not, as we apprehend, the Offence laid in the Indictment; it must be nothing less than actual Printing. In other Indictments for publishing Libels, you say, publicavit et publicari causavit, and thereby you are let in to give Evidence of either. But in a penal Law, and especially in Cases of High-Treason, your Lordship will in the strictest Manner construe that only to be the Offence, which the express Words of the Act of Parliament have made so, and not extend or give any equitable Latitude to it. However, if your Lordship should be of Opinion, that this Part of the King's Evidence any ways affects the Prisoner upon this Indictment, we shall, according to our Instructions, be able to produce a great Number of Witnesses to contradict what these Witnesses have sworn, and to give such an Account of Vezey, that if we had no other Answer to his Evidence, his own Character would cut him down, and utterly deprive him of any Credit with your Lordship and the Jury.

We will call our Witnesses, and hope the Prisoner's Case will appear to be such, that we shall have your Lordship's Directions for his Acquittance.

WALTER HUTCHINSON, and GEORGE MATTHEWS, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Matthews, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account what you heard Mr. Harper and Mr. Vezey declare concerning this Accusation.

Mr. Matthews. All I can give an account of is this. About the 5th or 6th of June, the 6th particularly, it being my own Birth-day, I came to my Mother's House about Eleven o'Clock in the Morning, the Time I generally do, because I do not live in the House; a Person met me coming along in the Blue-coat Hospital, and told me there was something Printing in our House, in my Mother's House, and desired I would search the House; upon this I was very uneasy, and directly went home and made all the Search I could; the Persons they gave me Information of were Vezey and Harper, the Apprentice and Journeyman.

Lord Chief Justice. Who gave you this Information?

Matthews. A young Woman that met me.

L. C. J. What was her Name?

Matthews. It was my own Sister; she told me she was afraid there was something doing in our House, because they were up earlier than usual. I made a strict Enquiry, and could find nothing at all that was doing. Upon this, having a great Suspicion, I took Vezey into my Closet, and asked him, Have you printed any thing? Nothing, he told me, of any particular Title had been printed, but something had been printed; and being done at an unreasonable Time, gave me a Suspicion it was contrary to my Orders and Directions. Mr. Vezey, says I, hath there been any thing printed in this House concerning or against the Government? No, there hath not. You know, says I, Mr. Vezey, that as my Brother happened to be under Misfortunes before, and through the Favour of the Government shewn to him he was discharged; therefore when he came into the House again, I publicly gave Orders, that if ever they found he did, or talk'd any thing against the Government, they would come and give me Information, that I might take a proper Method to prevent it. Upon this Vezey owned I had given that publick Notice; but also, when my Brother came home—

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe, Mr. Matthews, you are going foreign to the Matter; I would have you go on with the thing in Question, and come to the Matter in hand.

Matthews. Upon that, my Lord, I ordered a Lock to be put upon the Press-room Door.

Mr. Ketelbey. When was this done? now?

Matthews. No---a Twelvemonth ago---I ordered a Lock, the Key of which Lock was always in the Custody of the Press-man, never any thing was done then. But now to speak to the Matter I am to speak of---After this Information, I took Vezey into the Closet, and tax'd him with it; he there told me, and made a great many Imprecations, that he knew nothing of any thing done directly or indirectly, in my Mother's Printing-house, against the Government; and then Harper I interrogated, and he did publicly in the Printing-house, first in the Closet, then publicly in the whole House, declare the same. I asked them publicly, severally and both together, whether they knew any thing printed in the House directly or indirectly, against the Government, or no? They declared, they knew nothing directly or indirectly printed against the Government.

Mr. Ketelbey. How old is your Brother?

Matthews. I cannot exactly tell---I was twenty-four Years of Age last June, and my Brother I take it is six Years younger than I.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he an Apprentice still?

Matthews. My Brother is an Apprentice still, he was bound in September 1715.---He hath three Years yet to serve.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who is the Owner of the Printing-press?

Matthews. My Mother; but I have the Direction of it, and some small Concern in it.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Servants are employed under you? Put them in Order and Degree, as I think they are in the same Nature as in other Businesses.

Matthews.

Matthews. There is the Master or Mistress, and a Journeyman, the eldest — is generally looked upon to be the Head in that Way of Business.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Office hath he?

Matthews. That is as it happens. — The Composers; the Pressmen, they are ignorant, silly Fellows, only made use of to take off the Sheets. These are the Horses, as they call them.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Composers, who are those?

Matthews. They are Men generally better learnt.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who was the Head Composer in your House?

Matthews. Mr. Thomas Wiggins.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who were the other?

Matthews. Mr. Thomas Wiggins, Mr. Robert Staples, and John Smith.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Share had your Brother in the House?

Matthews. My Brother had no manner of Share or Right in the Printing-house.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think there is another busy Officer, what is he?

Matthews. They generally have Boys, and sometimes Men to be Runners, and Messengers to the Press. The Devil is generally the Boy, and sometimes they dirty his Face, and by a metaphorical way of speaking, they call him the Devil.

Mr. Ketelbey. I pray, what Character generally speaking is Harper of?

Matthews. I desire to be excused.

Att. Gen. Shew Mr. George Matthews that Paper. Look upon the Name subscribed. Do you see it? — Matthews. I do.

Att. Gen. Whose Hand-writing is that? — Matthews. To give a direct and positive Answer to that is very difficult, you yourself must judge.

Att. Gen. Give me an Answer. I ask you, Whether you know who writ that Name, John Matthews? — Matthews. No, I cannot take upon me to swear that, because I did not see John Matthews write it.

Att. Gen. You are acquainted with your Brother's Hand-writing?

Matthews. I cannot say I am.

Att. Gen. Consider, can you say you are acquainted with your Brother's Hand-writing, or you are not? Do you believe it to be his Hand-writing? — Matthews. I cannot directly say as to believing it, but I am not able to swear it.

Att. Gen. Have you never seen him write?

Matthews. I cannot say but I have.

Att. Gen. You have frequently seen him write. — I ask you (mine is a direct Question), Do you, or do you not, believe the Name John Matthews to be your Brother's Hand-writing, upon the Oath you have taken?

Matthews. Really I declare upon the Oath I have taken — according to the best of my Knowledge, I positively declare, I cannot take upon me directly to swear it is his Hand.

Att. Gen. I ask you, upon your Oath, do you, or do you not, believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Matthews. I answered you the Question before, very plain.

Att. Gen. That is no Answer to my Question, Whether you believe it, or not believe it? — Matthews. Really, I cannot be positive.

Att. Gen. Why do you trifle with the Court? Cannot you say, whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Matthews. I say, if you please to give me leave to introduce what I have to say, I believe it is something like it.

Att. Gen. You are to give an Answer, as well for the King as your Brother: Do you believe That to be his Hand-writing? or do you not believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing?

L. C. J. Come, you must give an Answer, whether you do, or do not believe it. — Matthews. At the Time of this Paper being writ I did believe it; I cannot say but I do believe it now.

Att. Gen. I think you say, when this Paper was first writ, you believed it was; and you now believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing. — When I asked you whether you believed it or not, your Answer was, you believe it is something like it. I ask you, do you now believe it to be your Brother's Hand-writing or not, upon your Oath?

Matthews. I do not know what Answer to make.

Att. Gen. Cannot you say Ay, or No?

L. C. J. Let the Consequence be what it will, you must give a direct Answer to the Question; the Question is not, whether it is your Brother's Hand-writing; but whether you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Matthews. I have some reason to believe it.

Att. Gen. Don't let me mistake you, I think you say you do believe it? Do you believe it is not your Brother's Hand-writing?

Matthews. Give me leave, let me state the Question; what you ask me is, Whether I believe it is my Brother's Hand-writing? I do believe it.

Att. Gen. Then I ask you now as to the Substance and Body of the Paper. Do you believe That to be your Brother's Hand-writing, or not?

Matthews. No, it is not, it is my Hand-writing.

Att. Gen. You believe the Name to be your Brother's, and the Substance is yours? — Matthews. Yes.

Att. Gen. Was you present when the Name John Matthews was subscribed? — Matthews. No, I was not.

Att. Gen. I ask you, whether you did not carry this Letter to Mr. Secretary Craggs? — Matthews. Yes, I did.

Att. Gen. Did you not declare you brought it from your Brother?

Matthews. Yes, I did.

Att. Gen. Did you not then say, it was subscribed by your Brother?

Matthews. No, I did not.

Att. Gen. Then who sent you with this Paper, to Mr. Secretary Craggs?

Matthews. I might say I came from my Brother. I went first of all to the Secretary's Office, it was, I think, on a Thursday, or a Tuesday, and the Regency was broke up; and upon this I asked, Where Mr. Secretary Craggs was? Somebody said he was gone to dine at my Lord St. John's, at Battersea. I went there, and desired to speak with Mr. Craggs. He sent out Word, he would wait on me when he had dined; and he came out to me in the Garden. I told him, Sir, I have gotten a Paper from my Brother.

VOL. IX.

Att. Gen. Did you not bring this Paper from your Brother?

Matthews. How bring it from him?

Att. Gen. Did your Brother ever see it or read it?

Matthews. I cannot say my Brother read it, because I never saw him read it. — Give me leave, my Brother was in Newgate, and lock'd up there; to say I see him read or sign the Paper, I cannot.

Att. Gen. Did you not receive it from your Brother?

Matthews. I received it from him as I took it; there was a Paper brought to me, something of this kind contained in it.

Att. Gen. What Paper are you speaking of? I ask you as to that Paper; Did you receive that Paper from your Brother, or did you not?

Matthews. I tell you, Sir, it was put thro' the Grate at Newgate.

Att. Gen. By whom? — Matthews. By my Brother.

Att. Gen. Into whose Hands?

Matthews. It was put into my Hands.

Att. Gen. That very Paper in your Hand was put into your Hands thro' the Grate, by your Brother?

Matthews. I believe it was so. I will tell you, if necessary I should, any thing of that kind. — When we had read the Paper —

Mr. Hungerford. Prove it — you have not proved it.

Serj. Cheshire. Mr. Matthews, I ask you if you have ever had any Talk with your Brother about the Matters he was charged withal?

Matthews. What, about this Libel? I remember I have had some Discourse with him about it.

Serj. Cheshire. By the Oath you have taken, did he never own to you he assisted in printing of it?

Matthews. I never troubled myself one way, nor the other.

Att. Gen. Let me not mistake one Passage. At the Time your Brother delivered this Paper to you out of the Grate at Newgate, did he not desire you to carry it to the Secretary of State?

Matthews. If you would give me leave —

Att. Gen. What did he say to you at that Time?

Matthews. I cannot remember any particular Words.

Mr. Hungerford. I did not observe that he said the Letter was put thro' the Grate by his Brother into his Hand. — Do you say your Brother gave it you thro' the Grate?

Matthews. If I might have the Liberty of telling the Connexion of Circumstances —

Att. Gen. I have not done with him, you break in upon us; I think you own the Body, the Substance of this Paper, is your Hand writing?

Matthews. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How long was it after you writ the Substance of this Paper, before the Time your Brother put it into your Hands out of Newgate?

Matthews. I writ it in my Mother's House; from thence I went to Newgate; I asked for my Brother, he was locked up, and there was the Man called Mr. Matthews, and he came down; it was very dark, I could not see my Hand. I put the Paper thro', and he gave it me again, I believe in seven or eight Minutes Time.

L. C. J. Did you give it him?

Matthews. I put it thro' the Grate.

Att. Gen. Did you put it down in Writing of your own Head? or by whose Instructions?

Matthews. The Paper was brought to me by a Messenger; the Words to this Effect, that I will recollect, if I can. The Copy of the Paper intitled so and so, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, &c. The Papers entituled by that Title were given to me by one John Broderick; one of them he gave me in Cock-pit-alley, Drury-lane; and the other he gave me at the Black-boy, somewhere by Drury-lane. Now in my Account as it seemed a very confused Paper, I drew it in a Hurry, with a little sort of Address, that I thought civil and handsome. Please to let me see the Paper.

Att. Gen. Ay, see the Paper. You say a Paper was brought to you, wherein John Broderick is mentioned to you as the Author of this Libel; that the Papers were given your Brother by one John Broderick.

Matthews. This Message was brought to me in Writing.

Att. Gen. By whom? — Matthews. By one Mr. Plunkett.

Att. Gen. Whether did you form this Paper upon that?

Matthews. I tell you, I did form it so far as this; something, — I made an Addition to it. — It was the current Opinion my Brother was the Printer of it.

Mr. Bootle. I would ask you this, you say you had Intimation that the Copy from which this Libel was printed, was delivered by one Broderick; to whom was it delivered?

Matthews. I took it to be delivered to my Brother.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I am in your Lordship's Direction, whether it is not a proper Time to desire this Paper to be read; with great Submission, this arises upon the Evidence of Mr. George Matthews; he pretends to have added something by way of Explanation. — I desire this Paper, which he hath sufficiently proved to be his Brother's Paper, and subscribed by him, may be read.

L. C. J. You don't oppose the Reading of it?

Mr. Hungerford. Yes, my Lord, we do: if this Paper is read at all, it must be read to make out the Indictment: it is a Paper, as by what appears, is neither writ nor subscribed by him. — The Gentleman says he guesses at it, and he says he doth not know that his Brother ever subscribed or underwrit such a Paper: so that it stands as a meer Cypher, and is no Manner of Evidence, therefore we hope it shall not be read.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we humbly conceive, there is not sufficient Evidence for the Reading of this Paper. As to the Body, he writ it; as to the Subscribing of it, he is not well acquainted with his Brother's Hand-writing, and cannot say he writ it. Then, my Lord, as to the Business, of having the Paper from his Hands; he brought it to Newgate, he cannot be positive he delivered it into his Brother's Hands, or that he had it from his Brother. Therefore we must submit it to your Lordship, whether they have produced any Evidence sufficient to entitle them to read this Paper.

Attorney General. Notwithstanding this Objection, I humbly insist, that we are certainly entitled to the Reading of this Paper, on the Evidence given by this Mr. George Matthews. I beg leave to open the Paper. The Paper amounts to a Confession of the Prisoner.

Mr. Hungerford, and Mr. Ketelby. We pray, we may have your Lordship's Judgment.

Lord Chief Justice. The Question now is, whether this Paper must be read?

Att. Gen. My Lord, let the Contents of this Paper be what it will, and a Paper proved in the manner as this is, we are to be sure entitled to read it; what hath been sworn, I dare say they cannot, as I humbly apprehend, controvert: Here is one Brother swears to the Hand-writing of another: That speaks itself. Nobody can doubt who he swears it to, who believes it to be his Hand-writing; this alone entitles us to the Reading of this Paper, the Evidence of so near a Relation, who is, and must be acquainted with his Hand-writing, who swears positively to it. In all the Course of Experience I have seen, there cannot be a fuller Evidence to entitle us to read this Paper, than hath been given; there are other Circumstances carry it so far, no Doubt can remain with your Lordship. This Paper is not only subscribed by John Matthews, but dictated by John Matthews; how much less doth what he swears amount to? He says, he received a Paper from one Mr. Plunkett, who came from his Brother; he formed this Paper by that, something he added; afterwards he delivered the Paper so formed into the Hands of his Brother; the Brother had it in his Custody, after it was so delivered, six or eight Minutes, and it can't be supposed but he should read it in that Time, and afterwards delivered it to him again with his own Hand, with Directions to carry it to the Secretary of State; this makes it as much his Paper as if he had written the whole Paper himself; the whole Paper had his Approbation, and it was made with a Design to carry it to the Secretary of State; with these Circumstances, which are the Truth of the Fact, I insist upon it, with great Submission to the Judgment of the Court, that we are entitled to read it.

Lord Chief Justice. I take it, it is a common Case. Suppose a Trial between Party and Party, the common Method of proving a Man's Hand is, a Person is called who hath seen the Party write. He is asked, whether do you believe it to be his Hand-writing, or no? Nothing more is expected, than that he hath seen him write, and believes it to be his Hand-writing. Mr. Matthews swears he hath seen him write, and he believes it to be his Hand-writing. He goes on further and swears, he received a Message brought to him by Plunkett; upon which he went to Newgate, his Brother was called down to him, he delivered him the Paper, and in six or eight Minutes he came to him again, and delivered it him with his own Name to it, which he believes to be his Hand-writing.

Judge Tracey. We must have never an end of things, at this rate.

Lord Chief Justice. I think the Paper ought to be read; if my Brothers are of another Opinion, they will tell you so.

(Then the Paper was read.)

Clerk of Arraignment. Signed John Matthews—"I John Matthews, now in the Masters-side of Newgate, being heartily sorry for the Crimes I have been guilty of against his most sacred Majesty King George, and his Administration; and from a thorough Conviction of my Errors, an unfeigned Contrition for them, and out of a Desire to serve his Majesty, do hereby make the following Declaration and Confession, (viz.) That the Papers, (entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei; to all true Lovers of Liberty, Vox Populi Vox Dei) were both given to me, by one John Broderick, as also the Money for printing them.

"And further I do declare, that the said John Broderick took the foul Proofs of the Papers aforesaid from me, in order to correct them; and when they were printed, fetched them away.

"And further I do declare, that the Place where the aforesaid John Broderick gave the Copy of the Paper, entitled, To all true Lovers of Liberty, &c. was in Cock-pit-alley; and he the aforesaid John Broderick gave me the Copy of the other, entitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, &c. at the Black-boy, in Stanhope-street, both near Drury-lane; the Place of his Abode, to the best of my Knowledge, is in Shire-lane.

"Of all and every the Premises herein contained, I am ready to make Oath, when called thereto by the Government. I had three Guineas June the 6th, and seven more the 19th, of the aforesaid Broderick."

Prisoner. I ask my Brother whether he can distinguish my Hand from another?

Lord Chief Justice. He hath sworn already that he believes it to be your Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. I am not displeased that this Paper comes to light. Here is a Witness bound to do Service to a Brother in Prison. Moved with Compassion, he forms a Paper of this Nature, not by any Instructions from the Prisoner at the Bar.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I hope they are not at Liberty to go on in this manner.

Mr. Hungerford. The Instruction is handed from Plunkett, not immediately from his Brother. There is nothing in this matter brings an Offence home against the Prisoner at the Bar, within the Statute.—Please to call Walter Hutchinson, and Thomas Tove.

THOMAS TOVE sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Tove, what Account do you give of Mr. Vezey? How long have you known him?

Tove. About a Year and Half.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character can you give of him?

Tove. I can give him no Character at all, good or bad.

Mr. Hungerford. Hath he the Character of an honest Man?

Tove. No.—Not about his Printing.

Lord Chief Justice. What Reputation and Character hath he among his Neighbours?

Tove. I know none of his Neighbours, I am little acquainted with any but he himself, and I have not known him above a Year and a Half.

Mr. Mott, and WILLIAM BODEN, sworn.

Mr. Ketelby. Mr. Mott, how long have you known Vezey?

Mott. I was never in his Company but once.

Mr. Ketelby. What do you know about his Character? this general Character.—Mott. I know nothing of his general Character.

Mr. Ketelby. Boden, Do you know Vezey?—Boden. Yes.

Mr. Ketelby. What have you heard him declare?

Boden. I came here last Monday was Se'nnight to hear this Trial; he was got here, and he told me he was an Evidence in this Cause, and that after the Publishing of the Book, he bethought himself that he should get into some Danger; so he went to the Mother of this Matthews, and told her, if she would give him Money, he would keep out of the way; accordingly he went to St. Albans, and staid there nine Days; but no Money coming, he could not stay out of the way, but must come to his Business.

Mr. Ketelby. I don't know why we should trouble your Lordship with any more Witnesses; I shall therefore only beg leave to observe from the Purport of that Paper, which hath now been read, whether there is any thing contained therein, that could prove the Confession of this Fact, that is now criminally objected to him?—There are some Particulars he confesses in this Paper, he received a Copy, and delivered Copies back; but what we insist on in behalf of the Prisoner is, that nothing in this Paper amounts to charge him with High-Treason, nor can properly be made use of against him on this Indictment.

Mr. Hungerford. The Offence he is charged with is, that he maliciously, advisedly, and directly, did maintain and affirm, that the Pretender had a Right to the Crown of these Realms. Now, my Lord, with humble Submission, this Paper, be it what it will, take it in the utmost Latitude, cannot be construed to come up to this Indictment. As it stood before we called our Witness, it could not be read; but we are so unfortunate, by plowing with our Heifer, they've got it to be read; but then there is no Confession of a Treason, or that he printed this Libel; there is a Story told that he received it of somebody, but there is nothing at all of the Confession of the Offence, and therefore we stand, with respect to the Prisoner at the Bar, in the same Circumstances we were in antecedent to the Reading of that Paper; and as to the Libel, it doth not contain such a Treason as the Act of Parliament requires, and they have laid in the Indictment.

Att. Gen. My Lord, before I reply, I desire to call a Witness, or two to support the Credit of the Evidence we have given.

ROBERT BENTLEY sworn.

Att. Gen. Mr. Bentley, Do you know Lawrence Vezey?

Bentley. Yes, Sir, I have known him some time.

Att. Gen. How long?

Bentley. About six or seven Years, I don't see him perhaps once in a Twelve-month.

Att. Gen. Are you acquainted with his Character?

Bentley. I don't know but he works honestly for his living.

ROBERT PROCTER sworn.

Att. Gen. Do you know Mr. Vezey?—Procter. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. How long have you known him?—Procter. Four or five Years.

Att. Gen. What is his Character?

Procter. I never heard any thing ill of him.

Att. Gen. Hath he the Character of an honest Man?

Procter. I never heard nothing but that he is an honest Man.

Att. Gen. My Lord, I won't trouble your Lordship to call any more Witnesses to support the Credit of Vezey; it would have been necessary if they had affected him, but I think the little Imputation thrown upon him is sufficiently answered.

My Lord, I am sure I ought to have a principal Regard to your Lordship, considering how much Time hath been already spent, and some Consideration to myself, therefore shall trouble your Lordship as little as may be by way of Reply.

My Lord, as to the Evidence that hath been offered on the behalf of the Crown: My Lord, I must say, that even no Occasion hath been given, in my Opinion, by any Observation I have heard made by the Counsel for the Prisoner, to make any Answer by way of Reply, had nothing been misrecited. But I shall leave that to your Lordship's stating to the Jury, which I am sure your Lordship will do with the utmost Justice, and more I neither ask nor desire.

As to this supplemental Evidence I have offered, I must beg leave to answer, that they would have it that nothing collected from this Paper in particular amounts to the Offence, much less confirms what I have offered to prove, that he was the Printer of this Libel.

I think it impossible for any that hath heard and considers this Evidence, to understand this Paper any otherwise than a Confession by the Defendant, that he printed this Libel; that is the Fact to be tried; what else is the amount of those Words? I John Matthews, out of a Desire to serve his Majesty, do hereby make the following Declaration and Confession, That the Papers, intitled, Ex ore tuo te judico, Vox Populi Vox Dei, were both given to me by one John Broderick, as also the Money for printing them; certainly this is a Confession that they were delivered to him; the Papers from whence the Impression was taken, that is the Manuscript, that is delivered to him by John Broderick, in order to have it printed, and at the time he gave him Money for the printing them; doth not this necessarily imply, that he received the Papers and the Money, either to print it himself, or procure them to be printed? Is not this a necessary Implication without any forced Construction? And in the Conclusion he says, I had three Guineas given me the Day the Impression was wrought off, seven more the 19th, of the aforesaid Broderick. The very Day it was wrought off, the very Day that he paid fourteen Shillings to the Men that assisted him, he confesses that he had three Guineas from John Broderick.

My

My Lord, if this doth not amount to a Confession that he received a Paper in order to have it printed, that he did actually print this Paper, it must amount to that or to nothing. But take it in Conjunction with the rest of the Evidence given, when he shall confess that he received the Papers so entitled from Broderick, with the Money for printing them; when it is proved that this very Libel is so entitled, as described in this Paper; that he directed the printing that Libel with the same Title; that he paid for printing it the very same Day, he says in his Confession, he received Three Guineas from John Broderick. Whatever Import this may have, taken separately, in Concurrence with what hath been offered in Evidence, it must amount to an absolute and direct Confession, that he was the Printer of this Libel in Judgment before your Lordship. — I shall say no more in Answer to this Paper.

The Evidence of George Matthews is so far from being doubtful, that it is confirmed by the Evidence given by the Witnesses for the Crown. Mr. Matthews had heard, by his Sister, that something was done that very Day against the Government; he went directly to the Printing-House, called for Vezey and Harper, examines them first in his Closet, then afterwards makes a Declaration in publick, intimating (as it comes out) this very Man had received Information, that something of that Nature was doing.

What is to be inferred from the rest of his Evidence, because Vezey and Harper did not think fit to own they were concerned in printing it, therefore it is to be inferred the Fact is not so? So far from any such Conclusion, Vezey doth not pretend to know any more of the Paper than Part of the Title, therefore he might justly answer the Question; when the Man tells you, upon his Oath, he read nothing but Part of the Title, therefore so much of the Evidence given by him, goes in Confirmation of what Vezey swears; nothing he hath sworn throws any Imputation, nor carries any Inconsistency with what Vezey says.

I shall trouble your Lordship no further as to the Evidence.

There are some Things of which I am obliged to take Notice: My Lord, I think both the Gentlemen of the other Side insinuate as if this was a temporary Act. Mr. Hungerford would not say, that the Law, on which this Prosecution is founded, is a temporary Law; but the Insinuation came from him, and is followed by Mr. Ketelbey, as if that Branch of the Statute, on which this Prosecution is founded, had not, at this Time, an Existence. Mr. Hungerford says, it was calculated not to be determined with the Demise of the Queen, but if it operated so far as to bring the King to the Throne, it had its Effect. My Lord, there is not the least Colour or Foundation arising from the Words or Nature of the Act of Parliament for such an Objection. —

There are four distinct Provisions: The first is the Person of the Queen; that if any Person or Persons shall, maliciously, advisedly, and directly maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful or rightful Queen of these Realms, &c. The whole Tenour following relates to the Title on which the Settlement of the Crown is founded; and it is penned, not in Words personally, but in Words that carry a Perpetuity. That Branch on which the Prosecution is founded, is in these Words: Or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the Third, or King of Scotland, by the Name of James the Eighth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms. This the Law hath provided against, and made it High-Treason, and it is fit it should be so. The next Provision was for securing the Succession: Or that any other Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament, made in England, in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and one other Act made in the twelfth Year of his said late Majesty, King William the Third, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown, and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms. It is plain by the Connection, Or that any other Person or Persons, &c. which shews that the Provision here was intended to go along with the Settlement, much less to determine with the happy Accession of his Majesty to the Crown, that Minute of Time which placed his Majesty on the Throne. So the fourth Part: Or whosoever shall deny the Right or Power of Parliament, to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Descent, Limitation, Inheritance, and Government thereof. This is one Foundation of his Majesty's Title to the Crown; this is a Principle will remain as long as the Government itself.

My Lord, I would not have said so much, if it had not been from the Nature of the Objection. This is a Law, say they, that hath not been put in Execution since it was made; in the Course of fourteen Years Time, there hath been Nobody found guilty on it, not one Prosecution. There is no Instance of any Law necessary to be enforced but as far as Justice will admit, no such Insinuation as this should pass in the World, for the Encouragement of People to offend; but it must do it in an effectual Manner, if they are persuaded that the Law is not in Being. My Lord, a great deal hath been said on the Learning and Doctrine of Innuendoes; there hath not been a solemn Case of the Learning of Innuendoes as was thought material, but hath been quoted, as though some Occasion was given for it by this Prosecution. The Gentlemen have thought themselves intitled to draw in all that hath been said on this Head, tho' there is not the least Foundation, on this Prosecution, to take any Notice of any Thing that hath, in former Times, been condemned on the Account of Innuendoes; the Office of an Innuendo is no more than to explain, no more than a Predict; but if in an express Averment in the Body of the Indictment, the Innuendo is put there to explain that Averment; in such a Case, there never was a Time or Instance that any Hardship was imputed to make an Innuendo, nor any ill Consequence; now, my Lord, there are two Averments, that he the Prisoner by printing the Libel in the Indictment do concern the Person described by the Statute to be the Prince of Wales, and of and concerning the Crown of these Realms; the Innuendoes following relate to these two Facts expressly averred: Will these Gentlemen say, this is making a wrong Use of an Innuendo? No, it is not; this Use of Innuendoes hath been justified by the same Authority that condemns them.

It lies upon this, and what the Jury are to try, is, whether upon the Evidence, they are not necessary and fully proved by the Libel itself. As to the first, who is this Chevalier, how then comes it by an Innuendo? I believe, my Lord, it won't be pretended in any Case (the Case of any Civil Action), that the Person to be found guilty of High-Treason on this Act of Parliament, cannot be convicted unless he made use of the same Terms, the same Words, as are in the Act of Parliament. My Lords, there is no Colour, no Pretence to say it; if there be such a Description of the Person in the Libel, that the Jury on their Oaths, who are to consider on it, cannot but necessarily believe, cannot otherwise believe but to be the Person, that is sufficient.

That this is so is most apparent, from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, the moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor on the Nation, and the Disappointment in the Attempt of proving him so, I think is Demonstration, &c. If this doth not mean the Pretender, I would be glad if they had told us, who it is. Is it not notorious, that these are Circumstances that relate to the Person pretending to a Right to the Crown of these Realms? That thus to describe him doth not amount to a sufficient Description; Nobody that reads it can doubt, though the Name used in the Act of Parliament is not followed; it goes on, And the great Opinion all Courts have of this unfortunate Prince's Virtues, shews he only wants to be known by us to be admired, that we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy. What other Prince is it? Who is it? Can it be suggested to be any body else here meant but the Pretender? What is the Conclusion of the Libel? The maintaining that such and such Persons are Jacobites, and an Innuendo to that, that was not objected to; but if the Subject of this Libel be true, that he hath an hereditary Right, a Right by the Voice of the People, and as it is a limited Monarchy, then they must own his Title; The Title of whom? Of the Person that styles himself King James the Third. That plainly shews who it is that is meant in the former Part of the Libel; and that this hath relation to the Crown of these Realms. I must say, it can relate to nothing else; the Business is to prove the Right: Whether it be hereditary, by the Voice of the People, or a limited Monarchy. The Conclusion of the Libel is to admonish the People to throw off this arbitrary Government, and not be ignorant of their Strength; these are Averments the Jury are to enquire into, and the Innuendoes are not strained, but plain, and such as arise on the reading of the Libel; and such as the Gentlemen themselves have not been able to invent any other Construction for. They say, here is no direct Averment. Mr. Hungerford hath endeavoured to make some Difference between maintaining and affirming; he is proving Arguments and drawing Conclusions; is this maintaining and affirming? Here is maintaining by Arguments, by Proof, by such as the Libel says amounts to a Demonstration: Say they, here is no positive affirming? What is the first Part of the Libel? If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he has that to plead in his Favour. Mr. Hungerford says the Sentence begins with an If, and is no Affirmation at all; and he says it cannot amount to an Affirmation, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms; but I apprehend the necessary Sense must be, he hath that, he hath such a Right to plead in his Favour. The Assertion is, If hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he hath that to plead in his Favour; so here is more than a plain Assertion, he hath that to plead to convince others, that he hath this Right.

My Lord, if that won't do, what is the Conclusion? The Chevalier being endowed with all princely Virtues, so that all Rights concur in him; Is not that an affirming, the strongest Way of affirming by Conclusions from Premises? So that all Rights concur in him, as well all other Rights as a Right to the Crown; they would have it relate to princely Virtues; that all Rights, that is, all princely Virtues concur in him.

My Lord, it is impossible there can be more full, direct, positive affirming of such a Right in this Libel, than both these Assertions import.

My Lord, I don't remember any Thing else I think necessary to trouble your Lordship with. My Lord, I say, these are all, at least the most material Objections that have been made by the Gentlemen of the other Side, to the Proof we have given in order to bring this Crime within the Act of Parliament. Whether this Act was temporary, and determined upon the Death of the late Queen, and the Establishment of the Succession in the House of Hanover, I am willing to go into that Question now, if your Lordship and the Court think fit to give your Opinion: if not, I am sure the Gentlemen that speak after me, will supply any Thing that I have omitted. —

My Lord, I apprehend this is a conclusive Evidence against the Prisoner, as to the Fact charged, that he by printing, maliciously, advisedly, and directly maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms; not in the very express Words of the Act of Parliament, no more was it necessary to make use of the Word Pretender, but in Terms that amounted to that, and can bear no other Construction than that he hath maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms.

Mr. Serjeant Cheshire. My Lord, I beg Leave to make some few Observations on what the Gentlemen on the other Side have said; and the first Objection that they make is, that this is a Prosecution on a Law, which is determined on the Demise of the late Queen, and by his Majesty's happy Accession to the Throne, and the Government taking place in the House of Hanover; the Reason of the Act hath taken Effect, and therefore the Act ceases. For my Part, I think it was very becoming Mr. Attorney General to take notice of it; but to dwell on that Matter, as if it deserved an Answer, I think will be unbecoming me. What would be the Consequence, but to let any villainous Libeller be at Liberty to treat his Majesty as an Usurper? To call out on the People, how long will they be ignorant of their Strength? To suppose this, is to suppose the Act of Parliament so very weak, that it doth not become me any farther to debate it. — Therefore I forbear to pursue it any farther.

There seems to be three other Things I beg Leave to take Notice of: They say we have not proved the Charge, there is an Inconsistency in the Evidence, and the Facts are not proved. I submit to your Lordship, if possible, if the Evidence that hath been given in this Case won't serve, what Evidence can? Can it be expected when a Man is guilty of High-Treason, if he prints such a Libel, will call Witnesses to it, tell them the Contents of it? It is not to be expected, but in a clandestine Way to be stolen into People's Pockets, and read in Corners, and to expect stronger Evidence, is to expect an Evidence of which the Nature of the thing is not capable; if there is the least Weakness in the Evidence, they have taken care to supply it. As to the calling George Matthews for a Witness, if I had been a Friend to the Prisoner, I should have reckoned myself very unhappy in so doing; can it be otherwise, than that natural Inclination should prevail upon him to be very tender in this Point? But this Man hath given the strongest Evidence, that if we had not half the Evidence, that would have supplied it; doth he not come to the very Day? "The 6th of June, my Birth-day, I met my 'Sister.' First he was met by a Woman, she had a great Suspicion of it; and it was he, that is the Brother, was to deliver the Brother. "My Sister bid me take care, there was something doing in our House, against the Government; I myself, upon Examination, had great Reason to suspect it." If this was known in the Family, if the Sister told of it, the Brother examines into it; doth this weaken the King's Evidence, or doth it not strengthen it? Then what he hath written and his Brother hath signed, that hath determined it, in the Prisoner's owning and confessing it; and what he would verify with his Oath, if required.

But supposing (say they) this Charge is believed to be true, yet the Evidence doth not come up to a Charge of printing. If I took Mr. Hungerford right, he said, a Charge of printing must not be on the Man that actually serves as an Instrument in the Art of Printing; will you say this Man is guilty? Yes, every one of them. But surely that Man will be so that rises out of his Bed to call these Persons up early, and tells them he hath a Jobb to do, and takes upon him the Office of the black Boy for Expedition, and corrects it with his Pen, bags it up and sends it away. Is not this Man guilty? I would not have every Composer in this case be guilty of printing, if it could be supposed that a Composer did not know what it was, which it would be hard to suppose, because they are Men of Letters; but sure the Man that from the Original Manuscript set it in the Form, corrects it; it is once wrong, and he makes it right; doth of the one Part one Thousand, of the other Part one Thousand; bears such a Share in the Printing as is within this Act of Parliament, or else you will have no Offender upon it.

My Lord, in relation to this Indictment, they say there must be a direct Charge, that he maintained and affirmed that the Pretender hath a Right and Title to the Crown of England; they say true; and if there be that Term used, by which it is commonly allowed is meant and understood the Pretender, we asked no forced Constructions or strained Explanation and unnatural Innuendoes, God forbid we should; we hope and expect, in Justice, there will be the same Construction of those Words as is usually given to them, when used in Speech in all other Cases.

I think that what they went upon here, is hereditary Right; and Right to the Crown of this Kingdom is not mentioned in this Libel; there is an Innuendo (Innuendo, jus hereditarium ad coronam hujus regni); be pleased to consider what the Nature of this Thing is; I don't know what the Use of Speech is, but to be understood.

I don't doubt but every body takes the Chevalier and the Pretender to be the same Person; then this Person, this Chevalier, whose Birth was so solemn that it was a moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor on the Nation, and hath personal Virtues and Endowments, that we only want an Opportunity to know him to admire him, and only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy; Now what one Person in the World can make the People of England happy but the King?

But please to consider, when they speak of Right, the Subject-matter must needs be a Right and Title to the Government and Crown of England. Say they, in three Remarks, whether it be hereditary Right, the Voice of the People, what Right the Voice of the People gives; and the third Remark is, limited Monarchy; what can that be applied to, but a Kingdom, when it is affirmed that the Pretender hath all these Rights? That, Gentlemen, I do rely upon, is an express affirming and attelling, that he hath all these Rights, and consequently a Right to the Crown of these Realms.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lord, I shall trouble your Lordship with saying but very little: The Prisoner hath been so unfortunate, by his Defence, to strengthen and confirm our Evidence. I shall only mention two or three Things insisted upon by the Gentlemen of the other Side, by way of Objection; the one was, and particularly by Mr. Hungerford, that it is not every mechanical Writing or Printing which is an Offence against this Act of Parliament: The Person, says he, is a Servant, an Apprentice, employed in this Trade of Printing, and is not as a Printer within this Act of Parliament: Surely a Printer may be within this Act of Parliament: But I must submit it, on the Nature of the Case, it doth not appear he acted as a Servant, but as a Master; acted so throughout the whole Affair; paid the other People their Wages; received the Copy himself, and undertook the whole Business, transacting it all. This is what the Evidence prove, that he assisted in every Act of printing; therefore, as to the Art of Printing, if that is an Excuse because it is a Trade, and so not within this Act of Parliament, if the Printer won't discover the Author, Nobody can be convicted on this Act. As to the Case of the Innuendoes, we must submit that to your Lordship, whether there is not a positive Assertion, which the Jury are to try, whether the printing do concern the Person mentioned in the Indictment, is not printing de & concern the Pretender; this being left to the Jury, you have a fair and equal Trial, whether this Person in the Indictment, is intended by him or no. I don't know how any Indictment can be framed, unless a Man takes this Method; it is impossible that any Libel should be formed so, to have every Word of the Act of Parliament in it: Then it is proper to bring it in, in this usual Method, by Innuendoes; I take it, without these Innuendoes; and if he hath printed de & concern a Right to the Crown of these Realms; and that is brought in by an Innuendo a Right to the Crown of these Realms; and that Matter being found by the Jury, that this Paper is printed de & concern such a Right, that Matter of Fact being so found, and we apprehend there is sufficient Evidence for it, nothing so positively asserted; where is there any forced Constructions occasioned by the Innuendoes? as to say, when all Rights concur in him, is to say he hath a Right to those Virtues; that is very unintelligible to me, and seems to be a strained Construction indeed: We submit it to your Lordship on the whole Matter, whether we have not plainly proved the Prisoner at the Bar to be guilty of this Indictment; the rest of the Matters we must submit to your Lordship's Direction.

Lord Chief Justice. One thing I must mention to you, whether or no this Clause of the Act of Parliament is in force? You say, the Act is temporary, and determined upon the Demise of the late Queen, and the Establishment of the Succession in the House of Hanover.

Mr. Hungerford. I did not say it was temporary, I did submit it whether it was calculated for such a Case as the Prisoner's is supposed to be.

Lord Chief Justice. If one Part is calculated for the Queen during her Life, so the other Part is calculated for the Pretender as long as he lives; there is as much reason to calculate the one for the Life of the Pretender, as the other for the Life of the Queen: If you think there is any Doubt in it, I must desire the Opinion of my Brethren.

Mr. Hungerford, and Mr. Ketley. No, my Lord, we had never any such Thought of it, nor don't insist upon it.

Lord Chief Justice King. Gentlemen of the Jury, this hath been a long Evidence; I will endeavour to state the Matter as well as I can. I hope I shall not mistake; if I do, my Brothers will set me right.

Gentlemen, This is an Indictment upon a Statute made in the Time of the late Queen. It is an Act intituled, An Act for the Security of her Majesty's Person and Government, and of the Succession to the Crown of Great Britain in the Protestant Line. By that Act it is enacted, "That if any Person or Persons from and after the 25th Day of March 1706, should maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm, that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms; or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain, or King of England, by the Name of James the IIId, or King of Scotland by the Name of James the VIIth, hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; or that any other Person or Persons hath or have any Right or Title to the same, otherwise than according to an Act of Parliament made in England, in the first Year of the Reign of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, of ever blessed and glorious Memory, intituled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and settling the Succession of the Crown; and one other Act made in England in the 12th Year of the Reign of his said late Majesty King William the IIIrd, intituled, An Act for the further Limitation of the Crown and better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; and the Acts lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the Union of the two Kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of the Realm with and by the Authority of Parliament are not able to make Laws and Statutes of sufficient Force and Validity to limit and bind the Crown, and the Descent, Limitation, Inheritance, and Government thereof; every such Person or Persons shall be guilty of High-Treason, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Traytors, and shall suffer Pains of Death, and all Losses and Forfeitures as in Cases of High-Treason."

I mention only that Branch of the Statute, because the Indictment is only on that Branch.

Gentlemen, this Indictment sets forth, That the Prisoner at the Bar, that he, as a false Traytor to our Sovereign Lord the King, after this 25th March 1706, to wit, the 10th Day of June in the 5th Year of the Reign of our now Lord the King, at London, in the Parish of St. Botolph without Aldersgate, in a certain false and treasonable Libel, which he the said John Matthews then and there maliciously, advisedly and traitorously printed, intituled, Ex ore tuo te judies, Vox Populi Vox Dei, of and concerning the Person in the Life-time of King James the Second, late King of England, &c. pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself, the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, and of and concerning his Right to the Crown of Great Britain, he did maliciously, advisedly, directly and traitorously declare, maintain and affirm, in one Part thereof, in these Words, That from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's (meaning the Pretender's) Birth, the moral Impossibility of putting an Impostor upon the Nation after the manner pretended, and the Disappointment in the Attempt of proving him so, I think it's Demonstration, if Hereditary Right be any Recommendation, he has that to plead in his Favour; and all Assertors of limited Monarchy must allow, that ought to be preferred, if the Person having it is endowed with other Qualities fit to govern; and the great Opinion all Courts have of this Prince's Virtues shews, he only wants to be known by us to be admired; and we only want the Enjoyment of him to make us happy; and in another Part thereof, in these Words, I (meaning himself the said John Matthews) will conclude with three Remark. First, That every Assertor of Hereditary Right must be a Jacobite. Secondly, That every Whig that makes Vox Populi his Rule of Government must be so. Thirdly, Every Assertor of limited Monarchy must be so; the Chevalier (meaning the Pretender) being endowed with all princely Virtues, so that all Rights concur in him. There is another part of the Indictment generally, that he, the said John Matthews, the same Day and Year, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in the same Libel, maliciously, advisedly and traitorously did declare, maintain and affirm, that the Person in the Life-time of James the Second, late King of England, pretending to be the Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England by the Name of James the Third, hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain.

This is the Indictment wherewith the Prisoner is charged: Now whether he be guilty or no, that you are to inquire on the Evidence that hath been given. In order to make out this Charge, the first Witness that is called was John Hutchins; the Substance of his Evidence was, That in the Morning he came to the Printing-house of his Mother Mrs. Matthews; he says, one Thomas Roberts went with him; that the Prisoner at the Bar was in Bed; that Thomas Roberts seized his Pockets, and he saw him take out two Papers, which he delivered to him; he says, there were other Papers in the same Room, and likewise in another Room, and he went into that Room, and in a Box there he found other Papers; some were found in the Room where he lay, others in another Room, but which were in the one and which in the other, that he can't positively say; they were found in the one or in the other; and he asked the Prisoner at the Bar, whether they were his?—He says, he owned them all to be his. He says, within two Hours after he put his Mark upon them, and he is sure these are the self-same Papers. Afterwards, when he was sent to Newgate, a pretty while afterwards he says to him, You must go to Newgate. What, says he, must I go to Newgate? Upon that he advised him to tell who was the Author of the Libel. The Answer he made was, I know I shall be hanged; I have nothing to do but let my Money fly to get a good Jury.—This is the Substance of that Evidence, both upon the Examination and the Cross-examination. The next Witness is Thomas Roberts; he swears he was with Hutchins; and he says, he went into the Room before Hutchins, and he secured the Sword which laid upon the Coat, and then he secured the Pockets, and Hutchins went into another Room and brought out some Papers: He says, afterwards they took up the other People, the Prisoners: They could not go all in one Coach; he went in one, and Hutchins in another. Then you have it from him that they marked them; and he is positive they are those Papers that were found upon him. As for these Papers, what they are, I will give you an Account when the Papers come to be read. He was asked about the Papers taken out of his Pocket; he says he gave them to Hutchins: As for those two Libels taken out of his Pocket, he swears positively when he came into the Room he was in Bed, and he took them out of his Pocket. He was asked as to the Proof-sheets, and the several Papers produced, and he swears to them all. He says, the 9th September afterwards, when they had Orders to carry him to Newgate, when he came into his Room, the Prisoner asked him if he was going to Newgate? Says he, Is there a Bill found against me? He told him there was a Bill found against him of High-Treason. He said he deserved to be hanged, and he had nothing to do but to let the Money fly to get a good Jury; but as for those who set him to Work, they were ungrateful Dogs, and good for nothing except over a Bottle of Wine or a Pot of Beer.—These are the Witnesses that prove the finding of these Libels and the other Papers in the Custody of the Prisoner, and the Prisoner's owning them.

The next Witnesses were to prove the Printing of them. There are two Witnesses called, William Harper and Lawrence Vezey. William Harper is an Apprentice to Mrs. Matthews. He says, on a Saturday Morning, which was the 6th of June, about four o'Clock in the Morning, the Prisoner called him up; he knew he called him up for printing this Paper, because, he said, the Day before he heard him say he had a Jobb to do: When he came up, he found Lawrence Vezey there, and he saw the Prisoner, and he helped the Prisoner and Vezey to work off this Libel. He remembers the Composing Part of the Paper, and he saw the Prisoner at the Bar compose Part of the Paper now produced, and the Manuscript did lie before him; and that he composed Part of it, but whether all he cannot tell; but says, he composed Part, the Manuscript lying before him; and he believes the Papers now produced are the same.

There is likewise another Paper produced, which is wrong imposed: Now the wrong imposed Paper was found upon him. He says, there was a Sheet wrong imposed, and the Prisoner at the Bar came up and told him he had transposed the Pages, and he must alter it; afterwards it was right imposed; he saw it when it was wrong, and afterwards when it was right imposed, and the Prisoner at the Bar did it; he says, that as they printed them, the Prisoner at the Bar took them off the Press, and there was nigh a Thousand printed, and they had done about eight or nine o'Clock in the Morning; and then the Prisoner bundled them up, and carried them out of the Printing-Room, and said one staid for them. He says, to the best of his Belief, the Paper now produced was printed off at that Time; he knows no other Paper printed then; he says, he at that Time read the Title, and that is all.

Gentlemen, He was asked upon his Cross-examination, whose this Printing-House was? He says, it is Mrs. Matthews's; but the Prisoner, who is her Son, always carries himself as Master; and he doth not know whose Hand-writing this Manuscript is.

Then there is another, the next Witness, Lawrence Vezey; he swears, That he belonged to Mrs. Matthews's Printing-House; he came there in June last, in order to go to Work: When he was in the Court-Yard, he called out, William, who was the Apprentice; who opened his Window and told him the Door was open: Upon that he went into the Press-Room, and while he was there his Master the Prisoner came up and told him, he had a Jobb to do; that he afterwards went to Market; that in the mean time, when he came back, there was a Form composed of Vox Populi Vox Dei; who composed it he can't tell; but the Prisoner told him, he had transposed the Pages, and he took it out of the Form, and lays it on the Stone, and transposed it right. He laid it on the Press, and the Prisoner pulled it off himself, the Proof that was right.—That a Morning or two afterwards he came again, and then they worked off the Impression, and they printed about a Thousand of each; and after the Jobb was done, he received fourteen Shillings for Harper's Share and his own; Harper owed him Money, and so he kept all upon his own Account. The Proof-sheets are produced, and he upon the View of them says, they are the same. He says, one of the Papers is wrong imposed; he never read the Book; but, on his Cross-examination, he says, there is a Line at the Top, and a Flower over that. He was asked, whether he knew George Matthews? He says he doth, but he never saw him since he was taken and carried up by the Messengers.

There are two other Witnesses called to give their Opinion of Printing: You hear from both of them, that these are the Proof-sheets, or revised Sheets, which are in effect the same; and that appears from the Amendments upon them; and one of them is right imposed, and the other of them is wrong imposed. Having made this Way for the Reading this Libel, and the Papers found in his Pocket, they are produced; and the Libel that was found in his Pocket hath been read, and I believe they will consent on both Sides, that you shall have the Libel with you, when you go out to consider of your Verdict. There are two of them produced, and in those Libels all these Words as laid in the Indictment are there; the Beginning of the Libel is laid in the Indictment, and the latter Part: There is a Clause in the latter End not laid in the Indictment. There are likewise produced two Proof-sheets, of which, all the Witnesses say, there is a Sheet right imposed, and a Sheet wrong imposed, which they think to be the same the Prisoner worked off: Then there are eight or ten superfluous Half-sheets. Mr. Darby says, it is impossible to make the Half-sheets agree, so as that there must be superfluous Half-sheets. In these Libels there are contained all these Words that are in the Indictment.

Now to fix this Fact on the Prisoner, they have produced Mr. Delafay and Mr. Buckley. Mr. Delafay, he says, that these Papers now produced are the Papers which the Messengers swore they took upon him; and when he was examined touching these Papers, he owned them to be his, and the Papers then lay before him on a Table, and he owned that these Papers were taken from him; and as to answering any other Questions, he was shy. Afterwards he was brought before the Lords Justices; the Brother gives you an Account how that happened. When he was brought before the Lords Justices he was told, that he was charged, with two other Persons then named, with printing such a Paper; the Answer he gave was, So it seems. He was asked, how he came to be concerned in such a Business? He said, it was Necessity. He was asked, who was the Author? but he would not tell. This was the first Time. He says some time afterwards, upon a Letter received from the Prisoner, he was brought before the Lords Justices again; he told them a foolish Story, but would not tell who was the Author: On the Evidence of Mr. Delafay, I did not think it Ground sufficient to read the Letter, though it was afterwards sufficiently proved by an Evidence he called himself.—Mr. Buckley, all he says is, that he was present at the first Examination; he says, when the Messengers brought these Papers, and laid them down on Mr. Delafay's Table, he asked him whether these Papers were his? He said they were. I asked him how he came by them? He refused to tell me. He says he told him, You are charged with printing these Papers, which is a great Crime; he made no Answer, but took Snuff. This is the Substance of the Evidence given for the King against the Prisoner at the Bar. Now, on the other Side, what is insisted on by him and the Counsel for him are several Things; some Points in Law, and several Points of Fact. The first is, that this Law was temporary; that is over, and is so plain they did not think fit to insist upon it. The other is, that supposing the Matter contained in the Indictment to be proved upon him, it is not High-Treason within this Act of Parliament; that it is not to be supported against him, but by these Innuendoes.

Now, Gentlemen, as to that, I do agree with what the Counsel for the Prisoner say, that by an Innuendo you shall not put a Meaning upon a Man which is not his. This is not the Case: The Case here is a positive Charge, that the Book he wrote relates to the pretended Prince of Wales; and the Matter of Fact you are to try is, whether it is so or no.

Now as to that the Objection is, you can't understand what is meant by the Chevalier to relate to him, from the Solemnity of the Chevalier's Birth, and the other Things which follow.

I take it as to that, we are to understand it as all Mankind do. You are to consider, whether that Book is written concerning the pretended Prince of Wales, and his Right to the Crown; therefore the first Consideration is, whether this Libel is written concerning the Pretender, and his Right and Title to the Crown of England, then all these Innuendoes signify nothing; for the Innuendo relates to a Thing that is proved. Now, Gentlemen, it is not said, nor the Counsel for the Prisoner don't any way shew who else it is applicable to, or whose Right it is concerning.

That is the Matter of Fact you are to consider: Is it possible for Men of common Understanding and Sense to imagine, that this Right is concerning any body else but the Pretender? If so, then the Defendant will be acquitted.

Therefore the first Part of your Consideration will be, whether this Libel relates to the Pretender, and his Title to the Crown of England; as to the Words themselves, they do not appear in the Indictment; the Treason is, to affirm that the Pretender hath any Right whatsoever to the Crown of these Realms; and therefore, as to the affirming that, say they, it doth not appear in the Indictment.

Then the next Consideration will be, whether or no the Prisoner at the Bar hath printed it. It is Printing, and declaring by Printing, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms.—They say, Printing is a mechanical Art; but if nobody else appears to you to be the Printer, and if People will use dangerous Arts, they must use them lawfully, how mechanical soever; or if he caused it to be printed, that makes no Odds.

The first Witness they call is George Matthews. Brother to the Prisoner at the Bar. He says, he remembers very well, the more exact because it was his Birth-day, as he was going to his Mother's House, his Sister met him, and told him something was printing in his Mother's House; that he examined Vezey and Harper both in his Closet privately, and publicly before the rest of the People, and asked them, whether they or his Brother had printed any Libel against the Government? They told him, No, they had not; this is what they told him. He says, his Brother is a young Man, that you see he is; he was an Apprentice to his Mother. Then he gives you an Account of the Manner of their Printing.

He was cross-examined concerning this Letter, which Mr. Delafay did speak to, but could not prove: He says, he went Home and drew a Letter, and after he had drawn it, he made some Amendments of his own. It was the common Vogue that his Brother was the Printer. Upon this he went to Newgate to carry this to his Brother; his Brother came to the Grate, and he gave it to him thro' the Grate, and in six or eight Minutes Time he brought it, and delivered it to him again, with his Name signed to it; and he believes this is his Brother's Hand-writing: That proves the Letter to be his, and makes it Evidence. The Letter being read, the Purport of the Letter is this: "I John Matthews, being heartily sorry for the Crime I have been guilty of against his most Sacred Majesty King George, and his Administration, and from a thorough Conviction of my Errors, and unfeigned Contrition for them:" There he professes his hearty Sorrow for his Errors and Offence; then it follows, "I do hereby make the following Declaration and Confession, that the Libel now in Question was given me by one John Broderick, as also the Money for printing of it; and further I declare, that the said John Broderick took the soul Proofs of the Paper aforesaid from me in order to correct them; and when they were printed fetched them up. This Mr. George Matthews, though produced as an Evidence for the Prisoner at the Bar, they now make use of him as a further Evidence, that the Prisoner at the Bar was the Printer of this Libel, as he acknowledges that he received it from Broderick, and received of him Money for printing it; he acknowledges likewise, that he had three Guineas the Day he printed it, and seven Guineas afterwards of the said Broderick. Then as to Vexey's Character—they call Thomas Towie: he hath known him a Year and a half, and can give him no Character good or bad. Then they call Mr. Mott; he says, he never was but once in his Company, he knows nothing of his Character. Then they call William Boden; he says, last Monday was Se'nnight he saw Vexey, and he told him he was an Evidence in this Cause, and he had been with the Mother of the Prisoner at the Bar, and told her, if she would give him Money he would keep out of the way; that he went to St. Albans, and staid there nine Days, and no Money coming, he came in, and was a Witness on the other Side. By way of Reply, they call two Witnesses to support Vexey's Character, Robert Bentley and Robert Prosser: They believe him to be an honest Man, and never heard any Ill of him.

This is the Substance of the Evidence that hath been given on both Sides. Gentlemen, you are upon this to consider, whether the Prisoner at the Bar hath maliciously, advisedly, and directly declared, maintained, and affirmed, by Printing, that the Pretender hath a Right to the Crown of Great Britain.

The Words in the Indictment seem very sufficient, supposing it relates to that Matter, that he hath a Right, and all Rights do concur in him.

Now, in the first Place, you are to consider, whether, by the Words contained in the Libel, is meant the Pretender, and that he hath a Right to the Crown of England: you are to consider, it is not necessary to have the same Name in the Indictment as in the Act of Parliament; but you are to consider, whether the Person in the Libel, that is called the Chevalier, and is the Person spoken of in the Libel, and the Person called the Pretender in the Act of Parliament, be not the same; and the Person commonly called the Pretender; and whether that Libel doth declare, that he hath a Right and Title to the Crown of England. This is the first thing for your Consideration.

In the next place, supposing that to be so, the next Thing is, whether he hath done it maliciously and advisedly. The Fact implies Malice; and the doing of a Thing advisedly, is doing it with thinking. The Witnesses say, for several Days they were desired to assist him.

Upon the whole, if it shall appear to you, that the Prisoner at the Bar hath printed this Libel, or caused it to be printed; and that by this Libel, he hath maliciously, advisedly and directly maintained and affirmed, that the Pretender hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms; then he is guilty of the Indictment, otherwise you must acquit him.

[The Jury withdrew, and after a short Stay, returned Holm and said, we are now ready and brought in the Prisoner GUILTY.]

Attorney General. My Lord, I humbly pray the Judgment of the Court against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I humbly hope that your Lordship will not proceed to give Judgment upon this Indictment, but that Judgment shall be arrested.

If it shall appear to your Lordship, that the Offence made High-Treason by this Act is not described in the Indictment with such a Certainty as the Law doth require, then in consequence there is no Offence; and if so, there can be no Offender. I take it to be a Rule in Law, that where a Latin Word hath several Meanings, or doth denote several Things, and in the Indictment or Declaration it is intended that it shall import one single Sense or Meaning only; in order to restrain it to that single Meaning, it must be assisted with an Anglicè; this was the Rule the Judges went by in the case of Hexam and Coniers, four Jacobi secundi, 3 Modern, Folio 238. where an Ejectment was brought de uno Tenemento. This was adjudged naught, though after a Verdict; because the Word Tenementum signified several Things, in truth every thing that can be held, as Titles, Advowson, an Office, an House, and under that Head, any Sort of Houses, a Brew-house, &c.

And now, to apply this to the present Case: The Thing made Treason by the Act is Writing or Printing; the Charge upon the unfortunate Youth at the Bar is, that he impressit such a Libel; which Word, with humble Submission, doth not necessarily import Printing, unless explained by an Anglicè, for the Word impressit may signify several Things besides Printing; as Sealing, Stamping, and is usually made use of to signify these things. If I were to say that such a one stamped a Book, I should say he impressit Libellum; and the common Language of Attorneys in their Bills, where they charge the Stamp-duty is, pro Impressione regali, &c. And as to the original Meaning of the Word, it could never be taken to express Printing: The Romans had no Printing; and where they had not the Thing, they could not have the Appellation proper for it; for Things were before Words, which are but the Signs of them: wherefore I humbly hope, that Judgment will be arrested in this Case, and the rather, for the Reason that was given by the Judges in Griffith's Case, that an Indictment being a Declaration at the Suit of the King, against the Life of a Subject, ought to set forth a sufficient Certainty of the Fact.

Mr. Ketelby. My Lord, the last Service we can do for our unfortunate Client is, to move in Arrest of Judgment; and if the Words inserted in the Indictment to set forth the Substance, the very Gift of the Treason, are uncertain, and do not sufficiently denote the Offence intended to be charged; this is the proper Time, as we apprehend, to take advantage of that Defect.

My Lord, this Word impressit is an equivocal Word, of different Significations, imports several Senses in English; and though we should admit that it likewise signifies to print, yet if it equally signifies other Things, if no Latin Word be added to it to restrain, nor any Anglicè to explain the Sense of it, we hope your Lordship will not proceed to Judgment upon this Indictment; and in this Case more especially, since Printing is essential to the Offence of which the Prisoner is found Guilty; and some of the Significations of this Word impressit are criminal, and others not criminal within this Act of Parliament: And for this I shall only cite the common known Case of an Action of Trover de uno Pullo without any Latin Adjective or Anglicè; there the Declaration has been held to be naught, for the Uncertainty, even after a Verdict; and we apprehend the Objection will hold much stronger in an Indictment for High-Treason, and that an Anglicè, or some other proper Latin Word, ought to have been annexed, to pin down the Word impressit to that Sense only, which the Act of Parliament hath made criminal.

But, my Lord, I shall beg leave to go a little further, and to observe upon the Word imprimis, that it doth not, nor can signify Printing at all: Imprimis is a classical Word, and as such cannot properly signify Printing, which is a modern Invention, never known in the World till many hundred Years after the Word Imprimis had obtained its just and determinate Sense; but if they will have a Latin Word for Printing, without the Assistance of an Anglicè, it must be by such Phrases as will import that, and that only; such as the best modern Latinists have made use of to express their Sentiments, when they treat of that Subject.

This is what we have to offer to your Lordship against the Word Impressit, and hope it will be thought sufficient to arrest the Judgment.

Attorney General. My Lord, I do not know how this Motion comes to be made now, after the Opinion given by your Lordship. If this be any thing, it is improper Latin; that is, it is not a Word proper to denote what is intended to be expressed in this Indictment; that is the Meaning of this Objection, which should have been made before Plea pleaded and Evidence given, and not moved in arrest of Judgment, according to the Statute for regulating of Trials in Cases of High-Treason: That if the Word impressit or impressione is not a proper Word to denote Printing, which is the Amount of this Objection, they are not entitled to take Advantage of this as improper Latin now after Plea pleaded and Issue joined. What I shall say (still denying they are right in Time, but to satisfy the Gentlemen and Mankind) in answer to this Objection, is, if it had been made before Plea pleaded, there is not the least Colour in it, whatsoever Signification the Word may have, taken abstractedly; if it be a classical Word, and was before the Invention of Printing, which was but four or five hundred Years ago, I believe Nobody that is acquainted with the Latin Language, but will allow that the Usage of two or three hundred Years will give a Sanction and Signification to any Word, though it hath been applied to a Fact not at that Time used; therefore imprimatur liber is as much known of all Men of Literature, all Bodies of Literature, to mean that that Book shall be printed, as any Latin Word whatsoever is known what it means. Let them look into any Books licensed by any of the Universities, what is it but imprimatur by the Archbishop? what is it but imprimatur by the Secretaries of State, or any other Person? Is there any other Word made use of but imprimatur, when any Trial hath been printed by the Authority of your Lordships the Judges, the Word is used there; look into a Law-book, have they not seen it signed with the Word imprimatur under the Authority of all your Lordships the Judges? What can give more Sanction than the Opinion of all the Judges to the proper Use of this Word? What other Word is there for the denoting of Printing? Why, my Lord, imprimatur libellum, it is the joining of it to libellum, diversifies it from any other Meaning, however indefinite, or, as they say, equivocal, the Word is; it is according to the Subject-matter to which it is applied: If to a Book, it is to be applied to the printing of that Book. Is this the first Time this Word impressit was ever used in an Indictment? I appeal to every Record, whether ever any other Word was used, or Anglicè put to it, but the Subject-matter it was applied to? I say still, they are in the right to do every good Office to serve their Client; but they have mistaken their Season; they are excluded by the Words of the Act of Parliament, and the Opinion of your Lordship. But still I insist, this is the constant Opinion of the Use and Application of this Word, by Men of the Law, without making Use of any Anglicè, by all Men of Literature and Bodies of Literature; if all these Experiences can give a Sanction to the Use of that Word, we have that to justify us in making use of the Word here.

Serjeant Cheshire. I perceive the Gentlemen don't say this is an improper Latin Word, because they know then this is not a proper Time to offer it in arrest of Judgment: But, be that as it will, I beg leave to insist upon it that it is a proper Latin Word, and properly applied; and I would beg leave to consider, whether Words that may be capable of several Significations, when applied to Particulars, may not be understood what they mean, without any Anglicè? If I mistake not, Liber, that very Word may be capable of four Significations: It signifies Bacchus, it signifies free, it signifies a Book, and it signifies the Bark of a Tree. Now, imprimere hunc librum, would any body think this improper without saying imprimere hunc librum, anglicè this Book? Therefore, admitting impressit could be capable of other Significations to many Purposes, yet when it is impressit libellum, it must be understood to be Printing; as when it is imprimere hunc librum, they should say they don't mean a Book, but impressit the Bark of a Tree—I think this Objection is so contemptible, that it ought not to have a further Answer.

Mr. Lutwch. My Lord, as to the Time, I only beg leave to mention the Clause in the Act of Parliament; that gives him the Liberty of having Counsel, and Copy of the Indictment, and several other Privileges; therefore, as this Law hath given him these Privileges, which they had not before, it comes in by way of Proviso, and takes away this Part of the Advantage they had before, that they shall not take Advantage of any Miswriting, Mis-spelling, false or improper Latin, after Plea pleaded and Evidence given: So that they are out of Time, as they have had the Advantage of this Act of Parliament, if it depended singly on that Matter. As to the Notion of the Word impressit being improper, I believe somebody would have lit on this Objection before, if any thing in it; for it hath been the constant Method to use this Word impressit, to signify printed, without an Anglicè, or any thing like it. I believe the Precedents are all so. We apprehend it is a very vain Objection, and no Weight in it; and therefore we hope no Regard will be had to it.

Mr. Reeves. I must agree, that when imprimis was a Latin Word, it was long before Printing was; but when Printing came to be in use, that Latin Words we see have been improved; and tho' they have signified other things, yet when they come to be applied to particular Circumstances, are improved thereby. Every body knows what that is, when it determines the the Signification of the Word according to the Subject-matter. Nothing is more plain than to determine it not to signify any thing but Printing; to say per prædictam impressionem, he declared and affirmed by Printing; no other Sense can be put on the Word but by Printing; and since it hath gained that use, no other Word is made use of either in legal Proceedings or otherwise; and what other Word can be applicable to this Impressu libellum, but Printing? We humbly hope this is as clear a Case as can be. They admit, if we had added an Anglice, it would have been proper; I don't know any Anglice that would have help'd it, taking it to be an improper Word: though, as we apprehend, they are not in proper time to make this Objection; it should have been before Plea pleaded.

Mr. Boyle. Admitting they are in proper Season to make this Objection (which we apprehend they are not), there is nothing in the Objection. This is the new Light that hath sprung up in this Cause. The first Objection was equally of consequence with this; they don't pretend that any other proper Word was used by the Romans; altho' they have used this ever since the use of Printing was found out, as the proper Word to signify Printing.

I believe there is not one Instance to be shewn, wherever any other Word was used to signify the printing of a Libel. They say, it is of an equivocal Sense, and may mean Stamping as well as Printing. In this Case, as the Word impressu is coupled with other Words, it can't mean Stamping—impressu libellum—Is it possible for any Prefs or Stamp to signify in his Anglican verbis? Therefore, to shew how groundless this Objection is, that it is impossible it should have any such Meaning, can a Stamp set forth all these English Words in the Indictment? That he impressu, therefore, must signify that he printed. My Lord, with great Submission, we think it is an Objection taken merely for the sake of Objecting, because driven to the last Extremity. As for the Instance of uno tenemento, and uno pullo, it is not to the purpose; pullo signifies any young, and tenementum is well known in the Law for a very universal Term; therefore it becomes necessary to be explained. This Word can't want any Explanation. Therefore we hope no Regard will be given to this Objection; and pray your Lordship's Judgment against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, they object to us, in the first Place, that we are improper in point of time as to this Objection; that it ought to have been made before the Prisoner pleaded or Evidence given.—And it is further said, that tho' we were proper in point of time, yet there is nothing in the Objection itself. As to the time of making this Objection, surely, considering the Nature of it, it may be made at any time. The Offence made Treason by the Act of Parliament, is Printing: we say, there is no Word in the Indictment which imports (at least necessarily imports) Printing; and, if so, then consequently there is no Charge of Treason before the Court: and surely, it may be at any time urged, that the Proceeding is null and void, if there be any fatal Error in it whereby to make it so. But the King's Counsel seem to have waived this Objection as to the Impropriety of the Time, by going into the Nature of the Objection itself; and I shall therefore apply myself to what they have said upon that Head.

Mr. Attorney observed, that the Word used in Licensing of Books is Imprimatur, and that Impressu (which is the same Verb in the Active Mood) is the Word used in the Indictment. I will admit it, that Imprimatur is used for licensing the Printing of Books, particularly when Books are licensed by the Universities (and for my Part I wish all Books were licensed by them, I am sure there would then be no Heresy or Treason in them); but generally Licences for Printing are in English: But that which I offer to your Lordship's Consideration in this Matter is, that tho' in an University Imprimatur, a loose or allegorical Word, which may have several Meanings, may be made use of, yet we are now in a Court of Justice, in a criminal Case, in a Case of Life and Death, where if the chief Word which describes the Offence hath various Significations, it shall not be taken in the worst Sense or Meaning, unless restrained to that Sense by an Anglice.

Mr. Serj. Chebire, by way of Illustration of what he hath said in this Matter, was pleased to be very critical upon the Word Liber: It signifies, says he, a Book, it signifies Bacchus, it signifies free, and it signifies the Bark of a Tree.

Give me leave, my Lord, to follow him a little in this Criticism. I believe the Word Liber doth not denote so many different things as the very learned Serjeant would seem to intimate. In the very early Ages of the World, before Writing was a common Accomplishment, before Vellum, Parchment, or Paper were found out, People writ upon the inward Rinds or Barks of Trees, which Bark was called Liber; and, from thence, when Parchment or Paper was, in After-ages, writ upon, that was called Liber too: The same Practice hath likewise given Occasion that Codex signifies both the Bark of a Tree, and a Book: As for liber, free, it is always used in an adjective Sense, and a Noun Substantive is always express or understood. And as for Liber signifying Bacchus, the Serjeant hath been at Dinner, he hath eat and drank plentifully, I dined with him, and I find he hath forgot part of the Name of Bacchus, for he is called Liber Pater, and not Liber only, that I remember.

But what I insist upon in this Matter, my Lord, is, if a Man were to be charged with Stamping of a Book or Paper; it would be said that he Impressu the Book or Paper; and the Charge against Mr. Dyett for forging the Law-duty-Stamp was in those Words; and since, by the Charge of Impressu Libellum, Stamping (which is not High-Treason) may be as well meant as Printing, unless explained by an Anglice; I humbly hope Judgment shall be reversed in this Case.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I shall be very short in what I am going to say. It hath been insisted on, that the common Form of licensing Books to be printed, by the Judges, Archbishops and Universities, is by using the Words Imprimatur Liber cui titulus, &c. If any one Instance could have been produced where my Lords the Judges had used that Word in allowing the Printing of any Books, such a Precedent would have stopp'd our Mouths as to this Objection; but I have here in my Hand a large Volume of Trials and other Tracts, that have been licensed, some of them by the Judges, and others by the Secretaries of State, and Lord Mayors; yet the said Imprimatur is not used in any one of them.—All these Licences are in English, and I don't remember any one Law-book that was ever licensed by the Judges in Latin.

I pay all the Respect imaginable to the Archbishops and Bishops, and to what they do; but, as I take it, their Licences are generally signed by their Secretaries or Chaplains: Whether they have any legal Authority for the licensing of Books, or if it amounts to any thing more than a Bare Recommendation of the Goodness of a Book, under the Protection of a great Name, I cannot tell; and therefore with the utmost Deference submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether any Weight can be laid on those Instances.

The Universities have certainly, at this time, a Right to license Books printed within their respective Jurisdictions, and I believe they generally use the Word Imprimatur, and it is signed by the Chancellor; but this Privilege is of a very late date, it being not many Years since Books were first printed there. I pray God bless the Universities, continue to them their present Authority, and increase it: But we must not admit that the modern Use of a Word, tho' by those learned Bodies, can give such a Sanction to the Sense of it, as to make it a conclusive Answer to our Objection.

Mr. Boyle says, it hath been a Word used ever since Printing was found out, to signify Printing; and that no Information hath been brought for printing a Libel, where that Word hath not been made use of; but he is not pleased to mention any ancient Precedent, nor any Case where this Point hath been judicially determined; Indictments for printing Libels were very rare in former times, and are scarcely to be met with in the old Law-books; lately indeed they have been more frequent, but I believe have not always been drawn by the most skilful Hands; and if some Mistakes in them have been past over in Silence and without an Exception taken to them, we hope a faulty modern Precedent, upon the Rolls in the Crown-Office, shall not have more Weight with it than the Universities.

They are pleased to insist, that we have not the liberty now of making this Objection, as being out of time; because, in the point of falsæ and improper Latin, it ought to have been offered before Plea pleaded; But, my Lord, we must beg leave to put this on a right foot; we don't object it as falsæ and improper Latin; we say there is no Offence charged in the Indictment; the Act of Parliament says it must be by Printing; if they have used a Word that doth not signify Printing, the Indictment cannot be good, this cannot be High Treason; my Lord, we submit it to your Lordship.

The Judges were all of Opinion, that the Objection did not come out of time, because they did not take it for falsæ and improper Latin. But all agreed, the Word Impressu was very proper to signify Printing, as used in the Indictment, and that there was nothing in the Objection.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, there is another Objection, which I humbly take the liberty to make: It is this; the Offence made Treason by this Act of Parliament is, that if any Person shall maliciously, advisedly and directly, by Writing or Printing, maintain and affirm that our Sovereign Lady the Queen, that now is, is not the lawful and rightful Queen of these Realms, or that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain, &c. hath any Right or Title thereto; the Language of the Act of Parliament is, "and now" (that is, at the time of the making of the Act) "styles himself" so and so: But the Indictment doth not pursue the Words of the Act of Parliament, in describing the Person of the Pretender; for the Words in the Indictment are these; Persona in vita Jacobi secundi nuper Regis Angliæ, &c. pretend. esse princip. Walliæ, et post dicti nuper Regis decessum pretend. esse, & suscipien. sup. se stilum & titulum Regis Angliæ per nomen Jacobi tertii; so that who now styles himself, &c. is not mentioned in any Part of the Indictment, and consequently the Person described or intended by the Act of Parliament, and the Person described in the Indictment, may be two different Persons; for if a Person doth now, or five or six Months ago, stile himself King of Great Britain, it answers the Description in the Indictment of Stiling himself King of Great Britain post dicti nuper Regis decessum, for it is not laid—immediately after his Death, and yet that Person may not be the Person who at the Time of the Act took upon himself the Title of King, &c. and since, by the wording of the Indictment, it doth not appear that the Person there described is the same Person with him in the Act of Parliament, the Indictment ought to be assisted with an Averment, that the Person described in the Indictment is una & eadem Persona with him described by the Act of Parliament, whereby the Identity of the Person would appear; and, for want of this Averment or following of the exact Words of the Act of Parliament, we hope this Offence is not sufficiently laid, whereby to affect the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ketelbey. If they had said immediate post decessum, they had taken in a greater Length of Time, than now they have done; and having only laid post decessum, generally, it may, or it may not, be immediately after the Death of the late King James; and then that intermediate Space of Time is not accounted for or ascertained in the Indictment, without such Averment as we contend for. The Indictment ought to have been certain, in all respects, and to all Intents and Purposes whatever; but here, since the late King James died before the passing this Act, it doth not necessarily appear, 'tis no natural Consequence, that the Person who in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be the Prince of Wales, is the same Person that after his Decease pretended to be and took upon himself the Stile and Title of King of Great Britain.

Attorney General. My Lord, we are not bound, with Submission, to pursue the very Terms of the Act of Parliament. If, upon the Face of the Indictment, it appears the same Person is described in the Indictment as in the Act of Parliament, it is sufficient. There are two Descriptions of this Person in the Act of Parliament; the one is, that the pretended Prince of Wales, who now styles himself King of Great Britain; the one is the pretended Prince of Wales, and the other King of Great Britain. If Mr. Hungerford may be allowed to mean there may be many Pretenders, tho' I believe he won't suppose that there were any before the Pretender himself, that called himself the Prince of Wales; so that that is plain who is meant by the Pretender. The second part of the Description, "who now styles himself King of Great Britain," post decessum Jacobi secundi nuper Regis Angliæ, is not that semper post decessum; was not the decessum of King James the Second before the making of the Act of Parliament; and is it not the pretended Prince of Wales who, immediately post and semper post decessum, styles himself King of Great Britain, that brings it down to the Time of the Act of Parliament, and continues it to the Time of the Indictment.

Indictment laid. The post decessum, as it stands here, over-reaches the Act of Parliament in point of Time, goes along with it, and continues with it till the Indictment preferred.

Serjeant Cheshire. My Lord, the Expression in this Indictment says, who in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be the Prince of Wales, and after his Death pretended to be, and took upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England. The Expression in this Indictment says it more plain than as they would have it; the late King James was dead before any of the Acts of Parliament, and that which they would have us have said, is a much less Assertion, and not so proper and pertinent; for when he died before the Act of Parliament, he assumed now, (he that in the Life-time of King James the Second pretended to be Prince of Wales, he assumed now) and ever hath, the Stile and Title of King of England; so that we have taken in both the Times of these Acts of Parliament, in the Life-time of King James the Second, and after his Decease.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I will crave Leave to offer a few Words by way of Reply. The Description in the Act of Parliament, as Mr. Attorney truly observes, consists of two Parts, (viz.) such a Person as in the Life of the late King James pretended to be Prince of Wales, and who, (viz.) at the Time of the Act, took upon himself the Title of King, &c. The Words are in the Conjunctive, and therefore, if the Description in the Indictment takes but one Part of the Description in the Act, it is an imperfect Description, and consequently the High-Treason not perfectly laid. If it had been, as Mr. Attorney seems to hint, that the Person described did semper post decessum of King James, or immediately post his decessum, take upon himself the Title of King, &c. it would have been well enough, because it would have amounted to an Averment, that the Person in the Act, and the Person in the Indictment, was the same individual Person; and for want of such a Certainty, we humbly insist, they have failed in a material Part of this Accusation.

Lord Chief Justice. This Act of Parliament makes it High-Treason only with respect to this individual Person, who is here called the pretended Prince of Wales: Now, if the Person hath no where any Christian Name, or Surname, must we not take Notice of the Description of him, and how he is called in almost all the Acts of Parliament? In one Act of Parliament he is called the pretended Prince of Wales: In the Act on which this Indictment is founded, he is called the pretended Prince of Wales, and that now takes upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England: In the Abjuration Act, he is called by the Name in the Indictment; if it be the same Person, must not we take notice, this is one and the same Person? and if so, no matter which of the Names he is described by.

Mr. Ketelby. My Lord, I beg Leave to mention one Word more. The Act of Parliament says (any Right to the Crown of these Realms), and so it goes through in the Plural Number (hath any Right or Title to the Crown of these Realms); it relates to the Union of the two Realms of England and Scotland, and from one End to the other mentions them plurally; they have expressed it in the Indictment only in the singular Number (hujus Regni), and afterwards, Innuendo, Coronam hujus Regni.

Attorney General. The Words are Magna Britannia.

Mr. Ketelby. With Submission, the Words are, Innuendo, jus hereditarium ad Coronam hujus Regni, without Magna Britannia.

Attorney General. The Words in the Beginning of the Indictment are, de & concernen. Coron. Magna Britannia; you have got upon Innuendoes again.

Mr. Ketelby. Why if you do not like the Innuendoes; you may leave them out of the Case, and see how it will stand then; if the last Innuendo—(jus hereditarium ad Coronam hujus Regni) be laid aside, the Words of the Indictment will be barely, "he hath that to plead in his favour," without any thing more, and then it doth not appear, if you go thro' without the Innuendoes, that it is any Offence against the Statute.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Objection is this, the Act of Parliament makes it High-Treason to affirm, &c. that any Person hath a Right to the Crown of these Realms; which Expression comprehends Great Britain and Ireland; in the Indictment they have not mentioned Ireland, it is only ad Coronam hujus Regni; it is indeed Magna Britannia in the Beginning; though England and Scotland make one united Kingdom, Ireland is not included.

Attorney General. My Lord, we have done, and pray your Lordship's Judgment.

Then the Recorder passed Sentence, as usual in Cases of High-Treason; and he was executed at Tyburn, November 6th, 1720, aged Nineteen. I don't find he made any Speech, or left any Paper behind him.

Being sworn of the Grand Jury,

Mr. Justice Foster, spoke to them as follows:

Gentlemen of the Grand Inquest,

It must certainly give great Satisfaction to every Man, who has a due Concern for the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Honour of his Majesty's Government, to see so numerous an Appearance of Persons of great Rank and Fortune attending the present Service. For without a vigorous, steady, and impartial Administration of Justice, the Ends of Government will be totally defeated.

And what are the Ends of Government? They undoubtedly are, the Welfare of the whole Community, and the Happiness of every single Man in it; as far as the Happiness of Individuals is consistent with the Welfare of the whole.

These are the great Ends of Government. And it is very certain they cannot be obtained without a due Execution of the Law upon Offenders of all Kinds.

And it is no inconsiderable Instance of the Wisdom of our Law, that the Opportunities of bringing Offenders to Justice are as frequent, as the Nature of the Case, in the ordinary Course of Things, seems to require. Justice is, as it were, brought home to every Man's Door twice in the Year, at the stated Returns of the Circuits.

By this Measure, two very wise and salutary Purposes are at once served. The Prosecution is ordinarily commenced and finished while Things are recent, while Facts and Circumstances are fresh in Memory, and while Witnesses may be presumed to remain under a proper Impression. And, on the other hand, the Person who is the Object of the Prosecution, hath an early Opportunity given to him of clearing up his Innocence, if it shall happen to be his Case.

It were to be wished, that these stated Seasons had been at all Times found sufficient to satisfy the Demands of publick Justice. But the History of former Times informs us, that they have not; and our own Experience convinces us, that they are not at present sufficient for that Purpose.

For what has been the Case of this, and of some of the neighbouring Counties

Countries for many, too many, Years past! Dangerous Confederacies have been form'd, for very unwarrantable, very wicked Purposes; for robbing the Publick of that Revenue which is absolutely necessary to its Support; and for defeating the fair Trader in his just Expectations of Profit. These, to mention no more, are the necessary unavoidable Consequences of the Practice, which now goes under the general Name of Smuggling.

And however Persons may palliate the Matter to themselves or others, I wish every Man who hath been directly or indirectly concern'd in this Practice, would lay his Hand on his Heart, and put this Question to himself, Wherein lies the real Difference, (I speak now of a Difference in Foro Conscientie) wherein lies the real Difference, between this sort of Robbery, and the Crime which usually goes under that Denomination?

But this is not all; this wicked Practice hath been supported by an armed Force: By Numbers of dissolute People assembled together, and acting in open Day-light; in Defiance of all the Law, and all the Justice of their Country; and to the Terror of his Majesty's peaceable Subjects.

And the Mischief has not ended here. In some late Instances, deliberate Murders, attended with Circumstances of great Aggravation, have been committed in consequence, as 'tis to be fear'd, of these Combinations.

These Things loudly call for the Animadversion of the Publick. They have been humbly represented to his Majesty. And his Majesty, out of his Royal Concern for the Welfare of his People, the ruling Principle which guides and animates his whole Conduct, hath been pleas'd to intrust us, with his special Commissions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery for this County.

Our Commissions do not extend to all the Crimes which are cognizable under the general Commissions which are executed in the Circuit. They are confined to the Offences of Murder, Manslaughter, and other Felonies; and to the Accessories to those Offences: But as far as they do extend, they are just of the same Nature as the Circuit Commissions. The same Law, the same Method of Trial, and the same Rules of Evidence, are to take place in these as do in those.

Gentlemen, I shall have no occasion to enter into the several Distinctions between the Offences of Murder, and what we commonly call Manslaughter; because those Distinctions are grounded on Circumstances, which possibly may have no Place in your present Inquiry.

It is sufficient to say, that wherever it appears that the Fact was committed with any Degree of Deliberation, and especially where it is attended with Circumstances of Cruelty, the usual Distinctions between Murder and Manslaughter can never take place. The Fact is, in the Eye of the Law, wilful Murder of Malice prepense. And it involves every Person concern'd, as well those who are barely present, aiding and abetting, as those who actually commit the Fact, in the same Degree of Guilt.

For where Numbers of People engage in any felonious Design, either for Murder, Robbery, or any other Felony, every Person so engaged, and present, aiding and abetting the Fact, is consider'd as a Principal in the Felony. And the Reason the Law goes upon is this, that the Presence of every one of the Accomplices gives Countenance, Encouragement, and Security to all the rest. And consequently the Fact is considered in the Eye of the Law, and of sound Reason too, as the Act of the whole Party, tho' it be perpetrated perhaps by the Hands of one. He is consider'd as the Instrument by which the others act.

And when we say, that the Presence of a Person at the Commission of a Felony, will involve him in the Guilt of the rest, we must not confine ourselves to a strict, actual Presence, such a Presence as would make him an Eye or an Ear Witness of what passes.

For an Accomplice may be involv'd in the Guilt of the rest, tho' he may happen to be so far distant from the Scene of Action, as to be utterly out of sight or hearing of what passes.

For Instance, If several Persons agree to commit a Murder or other Felony, and each Man takes his Part: Some are appointed to commit the Fact, others to watch at a Distance, to prevent a Surprise, or to favour the Escape of those who are more immediately engaged; the Law says, that if the Felony be committed, it is the Act of all of them. For each Man operated in his Station towards the Commission of it, at one and the same Instant.

And so much doth the Law abhor Combinations of this Kind, especially where innocent Blood is shed, that a Man may, in Judgment of Law, be involv'd in the Guilt of Murder, when possibly his Heart abhorred the Thoughts of it.

For if Numbers of People assemble in Prosecution of any unlawful Design, with a Resolution to stand by each other against all Opposers, and a Murder is committed by one of the Party in Prosecution of that Design, every Man so engaged at the Time of the Murder, is, in the Eye of the Law, equally guilty with him that gave the Stroke.

Many Cases might be put which come under this Rule. I will confine myself to a few which the present Solemnity naturally suggests.

For Instance, Numbers of People assemble for the Purpose of running uncustomed Goods, or for any of the Purposes which now go under the general Term of Smuggling, with a Resolution to resist all Opposers (and the riding with Fire-Arms and other offensive Weapons is certainly an Evidence of that Resolution), Numbers of People, I say, assemble in this Manner, and for this Purpose. They are met by the Officers of the Revenue: One of the Party, in Prosecution of this unlawful Design, fires on the King's Officer, and kills him or any of his Assistants: The whole Party is, in the Eye of the Law, guilty of Murder, though their original Intention went no farther than Smuggling. For that Intention being unlawful, the killing, in Prosecution of that Intent, is Murder. And every Man engaged in it, partakes of the Guilt. The Act of one, in Prosecution of their common Engagement, is considered as the Act of all.

I will go one Step further, the Party assembled in the Manner and for the Purposes I have mentioned, is met by the King's Officers, and an Affray happens between them. During the Affray one of the Party fires at the King's Officers, but misses his Aim and kills one of his own Party, perhaps his nearest Relation or Bosom-friend (if People of that Character are capable of true Friendship), this is Murder in him, and in the whole Party too. For if a Man upon Malice against another strikes at him, and by Accident kills a third Person, the Law, as it were, transfers the Circumstance of Malice from him that was aimed at, to him that received the Blow and died by it. And consequently, in the Case I have just put, the Person who discharged the Gun being guilty of Murder; all his Accomplices are involved in his Guilt; because the Gun was discharged in Prosecution of their common Engagement, and it is therefore considered as the Act of the whole Party.

What I have hitherto said regards those who are present in the Scene, I have mentioned, and abetting the Fact at the Time of the Commission of it. But there are others who may be involved in the same Guilt; I mean the Accessories before the Fact.

These are all People who, by Advice, Persuasion, or any other Means, procure the Fact to be done, but cannot be said, in any Sense, to be present at the actual Perpetration of it. See Vol. X. Mat Daniel's Case.

These Persons are involved in the Guilt, and liable in the Case of wilful Murder, to the same Punishment as the principal Offenders are.

I am very sensible, Gentlemen, that I have been something longer than I needed to have been, if I had spoken barely for your Information: But in this Place, and upon this Occasion, I thought it not improper to enlarge on some Points, that People may see, and consider in time, the infinite Hazard they run, by engaging in the wicked Combinations I have mentioned; and how suddenly and fatally they may, being so engaged, be involved in the Guilt of Murder itself, while perhaps their principal View might fall very far short of that Crime.

[After which the Bills being delivered to the Grand Jury, the Court adjourned.]

Tuesday, 17 January, 1748-9.

The Grand Jury returned the Bills found into Court, upon which Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, William Jackson, Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, and William Carter, were set to the Bar, and arraigned upon an Indictment for the Murder of Daniel Chater; the three first named as Principals in the Murder, and the four last as Accessories before the Fact.

The Indictment sets forth in Substance, That Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, and John Hammond, together with Thomas Stringer and Daniel Perryer, not yet taken, not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, upon the 19th Day of February, in the twenty-first Year of his present Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms at the Parish of Harting, in the County of Sussex, in and upon one Daniel Chater, being then and there in the Peace of God and his said Majesty, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that he the said Benjamin Tapner, a certain Cord or Rope made of Hemp, of the Value of Sixpence, which he the said Benjamin Tapner had then and there in his Hands, about the Neck of him the said Daniel Chater, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, did put, bind, and fasten; and that he the said Benjamin Tapner, with the Rope aforesaid by him, about the Neck of the said Chater, so put, bound, and fastened as aforesaid, him the said Chater, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, did choak and strangle, of which said choaking and strangling of him the said Chater, in Manner aforesaid, he the said Chater did then and there instantly die. And that they the said John Cobby, John Hammond, &c. at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by him the said Benjamin Tapner, so feloniously, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, done, perpetrated, and committed, as aforesaid, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting, and maintaining the said Benjamin Tapner, the said Daniel Chater in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, to kill and murder. And so that the said Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, the said Daniel Chater in Manner and Form aforesaid, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, against his Majesty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity. Further sets forth, That Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, William Jackson, and William Carter, together with John Mills, Thomas Willis, and Edmund Richards, not yet taken, before the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by them the said Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, done, perpetrated, and committed, (to wit) upon the said 19th Day of February, in the twenty-first Year aforesaid, at the Parish of Harting aforesaid, in the County of Sussex aforesaid, them the said Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Stringer and Perryer, the Felony and Murder aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, maliciously, and out of their Malice aforethought to do, perpetrate, and commit, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did incite, move, instigate, stir up, counsel, persuade, and procure, against his Majesty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity.

[To which Indictment they severally pleaded Not Guilty.]

William Jackson and William Carter were also arraigned upon another Indictment, as Principals in the Murder of William Gally, otherwise called William Galley.

The Indictment sets forth in Substance, That William Jackson and William Carter, (together with Samuel Downer, alias Heward, alias Little Sam, Edmund Richards and Henry Sheerman, alias Little Harry, not yet taken), not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, upon the 15th of February, in the twenty-first Year of his present Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms, at Rowland's Castle in the County of Southampton, in and upon one William Gally, otherwise called William Galley, being then and there in the Peace of God and his said Majesty, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did make an Assault, and him the said William Gally, upon the Back of a certain Horse, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and fet, and the Legs of him the said William Gally, being so put and set upon the Back of the said Horse as aforesaid, with a certain Rope or Cord made of Hemp, under the Belly of the said Horse, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did bind, tie, and fasten; and him the said William Gally, being so put and set upon Horseback as aforesaid, with his Legs so bound, tied, and fastened under the Horse's Belly as aforesaid, with certain large Whips, which they had then and there in their right Hands, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Shoulders, Arms, Back, Belly, Sides,

Sides, and several other Parts of the Body of him the said William Gally, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of one Mile, did whip, lash, beat, and strike; by reason whereof, the said William Gally was then and there very much wounded, bruised, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Misery, Pain, and Anguish, occasioned by his having been so whipped, lashed, beat, and struck as aforesaid; and by his being so wounded, bruised, and hurt as aforesaid, then and there dropped down the left Side of the said Horse, on which he then and there rode, with his Head under the Horse's Belly, and his Legs and Feet across the Saddle upon the Back of the said Horse, upon which they the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, then and there untied the Legs of the said William Gally, and him the said Gally, in and upon the same Horse, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did again put and set, and the Legs of him the said Gally being again so put and set upon the said Horse as last aforesaid, with the same Rope or Cord under the Belly of the said Horse; they then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, under the Horse's Belly, did again bind, tie, and fasten; and him the said Gally, being again so put and set upon the said Horse as last aforesaid, with his Legs so bound, tied, and fastened under the Horse's Belly, as last aforesaid, with the said Whips which they had then and there in their Right Hands as aforesaid, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Arms, Shoulders, Back, Belly, Sides, and several other Parts of the Body of him the said William Gally, they then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of half a Mile further, did again whip, lash, beat, and strike; by reason whereof he the said William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruised, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Misery, Pain, and Anguish, occasioned by his having been so whipped, lashed, beat, and struck, in Manner as aforesaid; and by his being so wounded, bruised, and hurt, in Manner as aforesaid, did then and there drop a second Time from off the said Horse, with his Head under the Horse's Belly, and his Legs and Feet across the Saddle. Upon which they, the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, then and there again untied the Legs of him the said William Gally, and him, in and upon another Horse, behind a certain other Person, did then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, put and set; and the said William Gally, being so put and set upon Horseback, as last aforesaid, with the same Whips which they had then and there in their Right Hands as aforesaid, in and upon the Head, Face, Neck, Arms, Shoulders, Back, Belly, Sides, and several other Parts of the Body of the said William Gally, did then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, for the Space of two Miles further, until they came into the Parish of Harting, in the County of Sussex aforesaid, again whip, lash, beat, and strike, by reason whereof the said William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruised, and hurt; and not being able to endure or bear the Misery, Pain, and Anguish, occasioned by his having been so wounded, bruised, and hurt, in manner as aforesaid, then and there in the Parish of Harting aforesaid, got off the said Horse; upon which they the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards, and Sheerman, him the said William Gally, in and upon another Horse, whereon the said Edmund Richards then and there rode with the Belly of him the said William Gally across the Pommel of the Saddle, on which the said Richards then and there rode, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and lay; but before they had gone the Space of eighty Yards further, the said William Gally not being able to bear the Motion of the said Horse, on which he was so put and laid as last aforesaid, by reason of his having been so whipped, lashed, beat, and struck as aforesaid; and by reason of his being so wounded, bruised, and hurt, in manner as aforesaid, then and there tumbled off the said Horse, and fell upon the Ground in the common Highway there, by which Fall he the said William Gally was then and there much more wounded, bruised, and hurt; whereupon they the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, him the said William Gally, in and upon another Horse by himself, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did put and set; but the said Gally not being able to sit upright upon the said last-mentioned Horse, he the said Sheerman, otherwise Little Harry, did then and there get up upon the same Horse, behind him the said Gally, in order to hold him on; but after they the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, and the said Gally had rode on a Quarter of a Mile further together, in manner aforesaid, he the said William Gally, not being able to sit upon the said Horse, or ride any further upon the same, through the great Misery, Pain, and Anguish, occasioned by his having been so whipped, lashed, beat, and struck, as aforesaid, and by his being so wounded, bruised and hurt, in manner as aforesaid, then and there tumbled off the said Horse, on which he was so put and set as last aforesaid, and again fell to the Ground; and as he so tumbled and fell, the said Henry Sheerman, otherwise Little Harry, who rode behind the said Gally, and upon the same Horse with him, in manner aforesaid, then and there with Force and Arms, feloniously, wilfully, and out of his Malice aforethought, gave to him the said Gally a most violent Thrust and Push; by Reason whereof, the said Gally then and there fell, with much more Weight and Force to the Ground, than otherwise he would have done; and was thereby then and there much more wounded, bruised, and hurt. And that by reason of the said binding, tying, and fastening, of him the said William Gally, by them the said Jackson, Carter, Downer, Richards and Sheerman, in Manner and Form aforesaid; and of the whipping, lashing, beating, and striking, of him the said Gally, by them, in Manner and Form aforesaid; and of the several Wounds, Bruises, and Hurts, which he the said William Gally received, from such whipping, lashing, beating, and striking, in Manner aforesaid, and other Wounds, Bruises, and Hurts, which he the said William Gally so received from the several Falls, which he so had from off the said several Horses, on which he was so by them put, set, and laid, in Manner and Form aforesaid; and of the said Thrust and Push, which he the said Henry Sheerman, otherwise Little Harry, so as aforesaid, gave him the said Gally, as he the said Gally so tumbled and fell from off the said Horse, as last aforesaid, he the said William Gally, at the Parish of Harting aforesaid, in the County of Sussex aforesaid, did instantly die. And further, That they the said William Jackson, William Carter, Samuel Downer, alias Howard, alias Little Sam, Edmund Richards, and Henry Sheerman, alias Little Harry, him the said William Gally, with Force and Arms, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and out of their Malice aforethought, did Kill and Murder, against his Majesty's Peace, his Crown and Dignity.

Petty Jury.

John Burnard, Foreman, Henry Halsted, John Shutter,
William Faulkner, John Woods, Thomas Sturt,
Richard North, John Hipkin, William Poole,
William Halsted, William Hobbs, Christopher Wilson.

The Counsel for the Crown, were Mr. Banks, Mr. Smith, Mr. Purcell, Mr. Burrell, and Mr. Steele.

Mr. Justice Foster, before the Jury were sworn, acquainted the Prisoners they might each of them challenge twenty of the Pannel, without shewing Cause; but if they challenged more, they must shew a reasonable Cause for so doing; and that if they agreed to join in their Challenges they might be tried together, but if they did not, they would be tried separately; and left them to act in that behalf, as they should see proper.

The Prisoners consulted among themselves, and agreed to join and be tried together. And then the Jury being sworn, and charged by the Clerk of the Arraignments,

Mr. Steele opened the Indictment against the seven Prisoners, for the Murder of Daniel Chater. After which,

Mr. Banks, the King's Counsel, spoke as follows, viz. This is an Indictment against the seven Prisoners at the Bar, for the Murder of Daniel Chater. It is against the three first, viz. Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, and John Hammond, as Principals in that Murder, by being present, aiding, abetting and assisting therein; and against Thomas Stringer, and Daniel Perryer, as Principals also, and who are not yet apprehended. And it is against the four last Prisoners, viz. William Jackson, William Carter, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger, as Accessories before the Murder; and also against three others as Accessories before the Fact, viz. John Mills, another Son of Richard Mills the elder, Thomas Willis, and Edmund Richards, not yet taken and brought to Justice.

Although this Indictment hath made a Distinction between the several Prisoners, and divided them into two Classes, of Principals and Accessories; yet the Law makes no Distinction in the Crime. And in case all the Prisoners are guilty of the Charge in this Indictment, they will be all equally liable to the same Judgment and Punishment.

In the outset of this Trial I shall not enlarge upon the Heinousness of Murder in general; nor shall I dwell upon those many Circumstances of Aggravation, attending this Murder in particular. When I come to mention those aggravating Circumstances of Cruelty and Barbarity, in the course of this Trial, I doubt not but they will have all that Effect upon the Gentlemen of the Jury, which they ought to have; to awaken and fix your Attention to every Part of this bloody Transaction; and to balance that Compassion which you feel for the Prisoners, though they felt none for others. The Effect I mean these Circumstances should and ought to have, is, to clear the way for that Justice, which the Nation expects and calls for from your Determination and Verdict.

To comply with this general Demand of Justice upon the Prisoners, his Majesty (ever attentive to the Good and Welfare of the Kingdom, the Preservation of his Subjects, the Protection of the Innocent, and the Punishment of the Guilty,) in order to give the Prisoners the earliest Opportunity of proving their Innocence, and of wiping off this foul Suspicion of Murder they now lie under; or if guilty of a Breach of the Laws of God and Man, that they may suffer the Punishment due to their Guilt; his Majesty has been pleased by a Special Commission, to appoint this Trial to be before their Lordships, not less knowing in the Laws, than tender and compassionate in the Execution thereof.

I cannot here omit taking notice of the unhappy Cause of this fatal Effect, now under your Consideration. Every one here present, will in his own Thoughts anticipate my Words; and knows, I mean Smuggling. Smuggling is not only highly injurious to Trade, a Violation of the Laws, and the Disturber of the Peace and Quiet of all the Maritime Counties in the Kingdom; But it is a Nursery of all Sorts of Vice and Wickedness; a Temptation to commit Offences at first unthought-of; an Encouragement to perpetrate the blackest of Crimes without Provocation or Remorse; and is in general productive of Cruelty, Robbery, and Murder.

It is greatly to be wished, both for the Sake of the Smugglers themselves, and for the Peace of this County, that the dangerous and armed manner now used of running uncustomed Goods, was less known, and less practised here.

It is a melancholy Consideration to observe, that the best and wisest Measures of Government, calculated to put a Stop to this growing Mischief, have been perverted and abused to the worst of Purposes. And what was intended to be a Cure to this Disorder, has been made the Means to increase and heighten the Disease.

Every Expedient of Lenity and Mercy was at first made use of, to reclaim this abandoned Set of Men. His Majesty, by repeated Proclamations of Pardon, invited them to their Duty and to their own Safety. But instead of laying hold of so gracious an Offer, they have set the Laws at Defiance, have made the Execution of Justice dangerous in the Hands of Magistracy, and have become almost a Terror to Government itself.

The Number of the Prisoners at the Bar, and of others involved in the Suspicion of the same Guilt, the Variety of Circumstances attending this whole Transaction, the Length of Time in the Completion thereof, and the general Expectation of Mankind to be informed of every minute Circumstance leading and tending to finish this Scene of Horror, will necessarily lay me under an Obligation of taking up more Time, than will be either agreeable to the Court, or to myself.

To avoid Confusion in stating such a Variety of Facts, with the Evidence and Proofs thereof; and to fix and guide the Attention of the Gentlemen

Gentlemen of the Jury to the several particular Parts of this bloody Tragedy, at last completed in the Murder of Chater; I shall divide the Facts into four distinct Periods of Time.

1st. What happened precedent to Chater's coming to a publick House, the Sign of the White Hart, at Rowland's Castle, in Hampshire, kept by Elizabeth Paine, Widow, upon Sunday the 14th of February, 1747-8.

And this Period of Time will take in the Occasion and Grounds of the Prisoners wicked Malice to the Deceased, and the Cause and Motive to his Murder.

2^d. What happened after Chater's Arrival at the Widow Paine's, to the Time of his being carried away from thence by some of the Prisoners, to the House of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten in Suffex.

This will disclose a Scene of Cruelty and Barbarity, previous to Chater's Murder; and shew how active and instrumental the Prisoners Jackson and Carter were therein.

3^d. What happened after Chater was brought to the House of Richard Mills the elder, to the Time of his Murder, upon Wednesday Night the 17th of that February.

This will take in that barbarous Usage of Chater at Mills's House; a Consultation of sixteen Smugglers in what Manner to dispose of Chater, and their unanimous Resolution to murder him; and will shew Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, to be Principals therein; and the other four Prisoners to be Accessaries.

4th. And last Period takes in the Discovery of Chater's Body in a Well, where he was hung, with the Proofs that it was the Body of Chater.

In the opening of this Case, it will be impossible for me to avoid the frequent Mention of one William Gally, also suspected to have been murdered; and for whose Murder, two of the Prisoners, viz. Jackson and Carter, are indicted, and are to be tried upon another Indictment.

But the Murder of Gally is not the Object of your present Consideration, nor do I mention his Name, either to aggravate this Crime, by taking Notice of his Murder also; nor to inflame the Jury against the Prisoners at the Bar. But I do it for the Sake of Method, and for the Purpose only of laying the whole Case before the Jury; for the Story of Chater's Murder cannot be told, without disclosing also what happened to Gally, his Companion and Fellow-sufferer.

To begin with the first Period of Time. Some-time in September 1747, a large Quantity of uncustomed Tea had been duly seized by one Captain Jackson, out of a Smuggling Cutter, and by him lodged in the Custom-house of Poole, in the County of Dorset.

In the Night of the sixth of October following, the Custom-house of Poole was broke open by a numerous and armed Gang of Smugglers; and the Tea which had been seized and there lodged, was by them taken and carried away.

This Body of Smugglers, in their Return from Poole, passed through Fordingbridge, in Hants; where Dimer, one of that Company, was seen and known by Chater. Dimer was afterwards taken up, upon Suspicion of being one of those who had broke open the Custom-house of Poole, and was in Custody at Chichester for further Examination, and for further Proof that he was one of that Gang.

And in order to prove the Identity of Dimer, and that he was one of that Gang, Daniel Chater, a Shoemaker at Fordingbridge, (the Person murdered) was sent in Company with, and under the Care of William Gally, a Tidewaiter of Southampton, by Mr. Sheerer, Collector of the Customs there, with a Letter to Major Battine, a Justice of Peace for Suffex, and Surveyor-General of the Customs for that County. Sunday Morning, the 14th of February, 1747-8, Gally and Chater set out from Southampton, with Mr. Sheerer's Letter, on their Journey to Major Battine's House, at East-Marden, in the Neighbourhood of Chichester.

At the New Inn at Leigh, in Havant Parish in Hants, Chater and Gally met with Robert Jenkes, George Austen, and Thomas Austen, and having shewed them the Direction of the Letter to Major Battine, they told them they were going towards Stanstead, where Chater and Gally were informed Major Battine then was; and said they would go with them, and shew them the Road. Their direct Way to Stanstead lay near to Rowland's Castle; but Jenkes and the two Austens carried them to Rowland's Castle, that Sunday about Noon; where this cruel Plot was first contrived, and in part carried into Execution.

The Malice conceived by the Prisoners against Chater, from what I have already mentioned, appears not to have arisen from any Injury or Suspicion of Injury done by the deceased to the Prisoners; but because Chater dared to give Information against a Smuggler, and to do his Duty in assisting to bring a notorious and desperate Offender to Justice, he was to be treated with the utmost Cruelty, his Person was to be tortured, and his Life at last destroyed. What avail the Laws of Society, where no Man dares to carry them into Execution? Where is the Protection of Liberty and Life, if Criminals assume to themselves a Power of restraining the one, and destroying the other?

Having mentioned the Motive of the Prisoners to this Murder, I shall now open to you (what I proposed in the second Period of Time) a Scene of Cruelty and Barbarity, tending to the Murder of Chater, begun at Rowland's Castle, by the two Prisoners Jackson and Carter, in Company with others; and from thence continued, until Chater was brought to the House of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten, upon Monday Morning the 15th of February, before it was light.

And here you will observe, how cruelly and wickedly in general the Gang assembled at Rowland's Castle behaved; and in particular how active Jackson and Carter appeared in every Step of this fatal Conspiracy.

Soon after Chater and Gally, and the three others, had arrived at Rowland's Castle, the Widow Paine suspected Chater and Gally intended some Mischief against the Smugglers; and for that Purpose enquired of George Austen who the two Strangers were, and what their Business was? He privately informed her, they were going to Major Battine with a Letter. She desired he would either direct the two Strangers to go a different Way from Major Battine's, or would detain them a short Time at her House, until she could send for Jackson, Carter, and others. And she immediately sent her Son William for the Prisoner Jackson; and soon afterwards ordered her other Son Edmund to summon the other Prisoners, Carter, Edmund Richards, Samuel Herward, Henry Sheerman, William Steel, and John Raifs, who all lived near Rowland's Castle; and accordingly they all came; as also did Jackson's and Carter's Wives. They were immediately informed by the Widow Paine of what she suspected, and had been informed concerning the two Strangers. Jackson and Carter being very desirous of seeing the Letter to Major Battine, got Chater out of the House, and endeavoured to persuade him to let them see the Letter, and to inform them of the Errand to Major Battine. But upon Gally's coming out to them, and interposing to prevent Chater's making any Discovery, they quarrelled with Gally, and beat him to the Ground; Gally complained of this ill Usage, and said he was the King's Officer, and to convince them, shewed his Deputation.

Chater and Gally were very uneasy at this Treatment, and wanted to be gone; but the Gang insisted upon their staying; and in order to secure and get them entirely into their own Power, they plied them with strong Liquors, and made them drunk, and then carried them into another Room to sleep.

During the two Hours Chater and Gally slept, the Letter was taken out of Chater's Pocket; whereby it appeared that Chater was going to give Information against Dimer. The Secret being thus disclosed to the Gang, the next thing to be considered of by the Smugglers, was how to save their Accomplice Dimer, and to punish Chater and Gally, for daring to give Information against him. For that Purpose, whilst Chater and Gally were asleep, several Consultations were held.

It was first proposed secretly to convey Chater and Gally into France; at that Time at War with England.

The second Scheme was, for all present to contribute Three-Pence a Week for the Maintenance of Chater and Gally, who were to be confined in some private Place, and there subsisted until Dimer should be tried. And as Dimer was done unto, so Chater and Gally were to be dealt with.

The third and last Proposal was, to murder both.

With a View and Intention to execute this last, and the most cruel Proposal, Jackson went into the Room about Seven of that Evening, where Chater and Gally lay asleep, and awaked them. They both came out very bloody, and cut in their Faces; but by what Means, or what Jackson had there done to them, does not appear. They were immediately afterwards forced out of the House by Jackson and Carter; the others present and consenting and assisting: Richards, one of the Company, with a cocked Pistol in his Hand, swore he would shoot any Person through the Head, who should make the least Discovery of what had passed there.

Chater and Gally were put upon one Horse; and, to prevent their Escape, their Legs were tied under the Horse's Belly; and both their Legs tied together; and the Horse was led by William Steel. After they had been thus carried about an hundred Yards from Rowland's Castle, Jackson cried out to Carter and the Company, Lick them, damn them, cut them, slash them, whip them. Upon which they whipped and beat them over their Heads, Faces, Shoulders, and other Parts of their Bodies, for the Space of a Mile. With this cruel Treatment, they both fell down under the Horse's Belly, with their Heads dragging upon the Ground. They were again put upon the Horse, and tied as before, and whipped and beat with the like Severity along the Road for about another Mile. And when they cried out through the Agony of their Pain, Pistols were held to their Heads, and they were threatened to be shot, if they made the least Noise or Cry. Being unable to endure this continued and exquisite Pain, and to sit on Horse-back any longer, they fell a second Time to the Ground. By this inhuman Usage, they were rendered incapable of supporting themselves any longer on Horseback. Gally was afterwards carried behind Steel, and Chater behind Heward. The Prisoners, Jackson and Carter, with the rest of the Company, still continued their merciless Treatment of Chater and Gally; but instead of whipping, they now began to beat them on their Heads and Faces, with the Butt End of their Whips, loaded with Lead. When they came to Lady Holt Park in Suffex, Gally almost expiring with the Torture he had underwent, got down from behind Steel; and it was proposed to throw him alive into a Well adjoining to that Park; in which Well Chater was three Days after hanged by the same Gang. Gally was then thrown across the Pommel of the Saddle, and carried before Richards. He was afterwards laid along alone upon a Horse, and supported by Jackson, who walked by him; and was at last carried before Sheerman, who supported him by a Cord tied round his Breast. When they came to a Lane called Conduit Lane, in Rogate Parish in this County, Gally, in the Extremity of Anguish, cried out, I shall fall, I shall fall. Upon which Sheerman swore, Damn you, if you will fall, do then; and as Gally was falling he gave him a Thrust to the Ground; after which Gally was never seen to move, or heard to speak more.

Jackson, Carter, and the others, in order to prevent a Discovery of the Murder of Gally, went about one of the Clock on the Monday Morning to the Red Lion at Rake, in Suffex, a Publick-house kept by William Scardefield, whither they carried Chater all over Blood, and with his Eyes almost beat out; and also brought the Body of Gally. They obliged Scardefield to shew them a proper Place for the Burial of Gally; and accordingly he went with Carter, Heward, and Steel, to an old Fox Earth, on the Side of a Hill near Rake, at a Place called Harting Combe, where they dug a Hole, and buried Gally.

The same Morning, and long before it was light, whilst some were employed in the Burial of Gally, Jackson and Sheerman carried Chater to the House of Richard Mills the elder, at Trotten.

I am now come to the third Period of Time; from Chater's Arrival at the House of Richard Mills the elder, to his Murder upon Wednesday Night the 17th of February.

And here it is, that Richard Mills the elder, first appears to be privy, and consenting to the intended Murder of Chater. A private House was thought much more proper and safe for the Confinement of Chater, than a Publick-house, at all Times open to every Man; and therefore Chater was to be removed from Scardefield's. The Prisoners and their Companions being no Strangers to old Mills, but his intimate Acquaintance, and Confederates in Smuggling, where could Chater be so secretly imprisoned, as at the Private-house of the elder Mills? And where could he be more securely guarded, than under the Roof of one of their own Gang? With these Hopes and Reliance, and in full Confidence of the Secrecy and Assistance of old Mills, Chater was brought to his House by Jackson and Sheerman;

Sheerman; when they came there, they told old Mills they had got a Prisoner; he must get up, and let them in. Old Mills got up, and received Chater his Prisoner; whose Face was then a Gore of Blood, many of his Teeth beat out, his Eyes swollen, and his almost destroyed. I shall here omit one or two particular Circumstances, which the Witnesses will give an Account of; which shew that old Mills also was void of all Tenderness and Compassion.

Chater was received by him as a Prisoner, and a Criminal; and therefore was to be treated as such. Old Mills's House itself, was thought too good a Prison for him; and therefore he was soon dragged into a Skeeling or Out-house, adjoining to the House; wherein Lumber and Fuel were kept. And though Chater was in so weak and deplorable a Condition, as to be scarce able to stand; yet to prevent all Chance and Possibility of his Escape, he was chained by the Leg with an Iron Chain, fastened to a Beam of the Out-house. He was guarded Night and Day; sometimes by Sheerman, and sometimes by Heward, who came there that Monday Evening. Thus he continued in Chains, until he was loosened for his Execution. But lest he should die for want of Sustenance, and disappoint their wicked Designs; he was to be fed, and just kept alive, until the Time and Manner of his Death was determined. During the whole Time of this Imprisonment, old Mills was at home, and in his Business as usual. He betrayed not the Trust reposed in him; he acquainted nobody with what had happened, nor with whom he was intrusted; but like a Gaoler, took care to produce his Prisoner for Execution.

On Wednesday the 17th of February, there was a general Summons of all the Smugglers then in the Neighbourhood of Scardefield's House, who had been concerned in breaking open the Custom-House at Peole, to meet that Day at Scardefield's. Upon which Notice, all the Prisoners (except old Mills) came that Day to Scardefield's. And there were also present, John Mills, another Son of old Mills, Edmund Richards, Thomas Willis, Thomas Stringer, Daniel Parryer, William Steel and John Ruffs; Heward and Sheerman still continuing at old Mills's, and there guarding Chater. It was at this Consultation at Scardefield's, unanimously agreed by all present, that Chater should be murdered.

This was a deliberate, serious, and determinate Act, of Minors wickedly and cruelly disposed, and executed with all the imaginable Circumstances of Barbarity.

At this Meeting Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond were first concerned in, and became privy and consenting to this Murder. And there also Richard Mills the younger, first became an Accessary to this Murder: But he was so eager in the Pursuit of it, that he particularly advised and recommended it; and said, he would go with them to the Execution, but he had no Horse. And when he was told, that the old Man (meaning Chater) was carried by a steep Place in the Road to Rake, he said—"If I had been there, I should have called a Council of War, and he should have come no farther."

About Eight of the Clock of that Wednesday Evening, all who were present at the Consultation at Scardefield's (except Richard Mills the younger, John Mills, and Thomas Willis) went from Scardefield's to the House of old Mills, where they found Chater chained, and guarded by Heward and Sheerman.

They told him he must die, and ordered him to say his Prayers. And whilst he was upon his Knees, at Prayers, Cobby kicked him; and Tapner, impatient of Chater's Blood, pulled out a large Clasp-knife, and swore he would be his Butcher, and cut him twice or thrice down the Face, and across his Eyes and Nose. But old Mills, in hopes of avoiding the Punishment due to his Guilt, by shifting Chater's Execution to another Place, said,—"Don't murder him here, but carry him somewhere else first."

He was then loosened from his Chains, and was by all the Prisoners (except Mills the Father and the Son), and by all the Gang that came from Scardefield's, carried back to that Well, wherein Gally had before been threatened to be thrown alive. Jackson and Carter left the Company some small Distance before the others came to the Well; but described the Well to be fenced round with Pales, and directed them where to find it; and said, We have done our Parts, meaning, we have murdered Gally. And you shall do your Parts, meaning, you shall murder Chater.

Tapner, in order to make good what he had before said (and happy had it been for him, had he shewn more Regard to his Actions and less to his Words), after Chater had been forced over the Pales which fenced the Well, pulled a Rope out of his Pocket, put it about Chater's Neck, fastened the other End to the Pales, and there he hung Chater in the Well until he was dead.

But soon after the Body was let loose, and had fallen to the Bottom of this Well, which was dry, one of the Accomplices imagined he heard Chater breathe, and that there were still some Remains of Life in him.

To put an End to a Life so miserable and wretched, they threw Pales and Stones upon him. This was the only Act, that had any Appearance of Mercy and Compassion; and it brings to my Remembrance the Saying of the wisest of Men, fully verified in this fatal Instance of Chater's Murder—The Mercies of the Wicked are Cruelty.

I am now come to the fourth and last Period of Time.

And here it is observable, that although Providence had for many Months permitted this Murder to remain undiscovered, yet it was then disclosed and brought to light, when the appointed Time was come, and an Opportunity given, to apprehend and bring to Justice many of the principal Offenders.

Upon the 17th of September last, Search was made in pursuance of Information given, for the Body of Chater. And the Body was found with a Rope about its Neck, covered with Pales, Stones, and Earth, in that Well I before mentioned, close by Lady Holt Park, in a Wood called Harrafs-Wood, belonging to Mr. Carryll.

By the Length of Time, from February to September, the Body was too much emaciated to be known with any Certainty. But by his Boots, Cloaths, and Belt, there also found, it evidently appeared to be the Body of the unfortunate Chater.

I have now opened to you the Substance of all the most material Facts; and should the Proofs support the Truth of those Facts, no Man can doubt the Consequence thereof, that Chater was murdered, and that the Prisoners were his Murderers.

Mr. Smyth, another of the King's Counsel, also spoke as follows, viz. May it please your Lordships and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am likewise of Counsel against the Prisoners at the Bar, three of whom are indicted as Principals for the Murder of Daniel Chater, the other four as Accessaries before the Fact to that Murder.

The Crime they are charged with is one of the greatest that can be committed against the Laws of God and Man; and in this particular Case attended with the most aggravating Circumstances.

It was not done in the Heat of Passion, and on Provocation, but in cold Blood, deliberately, on the fullest Consideration, in the most cruel Manner, and without any Provocation. The Occasion being as you have heard, only because he dared to speak the Truth, he had seen Dimer passing through Fordingbridge, and had made Oath of it before a Magistrate; being required so to do.

This Prosecution therefore is of the utmost Importance to the public Justice of the Nation, and to the Safety and Security of every Person; not only in this County, but in the Kingdom; for if such Offenders should escape with Impunity, the Consequence would be, that no Crime could be punished. It would teach Highwaymen, Housebreakers, and all other Criminals, to imitate in the Manner those Men have done, and whoever received Injuries from them, would not dare complain, or take any Steps towards bringing them to Justice, for fear of exposing themselves to the Resentment and Revenge of their Companions.

Our Constitution, therefore, which must be supported by a regular Administration of Justice, and a due Execution of our Laws, depends in some Measure, on bringing such Offenders to condign Punishment; and 'tis to be hoped a few Examples of this Kind will restore the Peace and Tranquillity of this Country.

In shortly stating the Facts, I shall endeavour to point out to you the Share, which every one of the Persons at the Bar had in this Murder.

In October 1747, the Custom-House at Peole was broke open; the Smugglers who did it, in their Return passed through Fordingbridge, a Town in Hampshire, where Chater saw Dimer among them; and having declared so, was obliged to make Oath of it before a Magistrate; on which Information Dimer was taken up and committed to Chichester Goal for further Examination; and on the 14th of February, Chater was sent by the Collector of Southampton, in Company with Gally, with a Letter to Mr. Battine, Surveyor-General of the Customs, in order that Chater might see if the Man in Chichester Goal was the same Person he saw at Fordingbridge.

These two Men having enquired their Way at the New Inn at Leigh, one Jenkes undertook to direct them, and carried them to the Widow Paine's at Rouland's Castle, who saying she feared they were going to do the Smugglers some Mischief, sent for Carter and Jackson, Steel, Ruffs, Richards, Sheerman, and Heward, who having made Chater and Gally drunk, and seen the Letter to Mr. Battine, consulted what to do with them. Some proposed to murder them, others to send them Prisoners to France, and others to confine them, till they saw what became of Dimer; and to treat them as he was dealt with.

Carter and Jackson having sent Jenkes away, this poor Man and Gally were left absolutely in the Power of them and the other Smugglers; and indeed into worse Hands he could not have fallen: had he been taken Prisoner in Battle by our Enemies, he would have had Quarter, and been treated with Humanity: had he fallen into the Hands of Enemies of those Nations who give no Quarter, his Lot would have been immediate Death: but as it was his hard Fate to fall into the Hands of Smugglers, he was to have neither Quarter or immediate Death, but was referred to suffer the most cruel Usage for several Days, and afterwards murdered.

These poor Wretches, after having been beat and abused at Paine's by Carter and Jackson, and the rest of the Gang, were carried away by Force, both set on one Horse, with their Legs tied under the Horse's Belly, and whipp'd and beat by Direction of Carter and Jackson, till they fell; then were let up again in the same Manner, and whipp'd and beat again till they fell a second time; and were then set on separate Horses, and used in the same Manner, till Gally had the good Fortune to be delivered by Death from their Cruelty; after which they carried Chater, who was bloody and mangled with the blows and Falls he had received, to Scardefield's, at the Red Lion at Raikes, who observed Jackson's Coat and Hands to be bloody; and while Carter and the rest buried Gally, Jackson and Sheerman carried Chater to old Mills's in the Night, between the 14th and 15th of February, where he was chained by the Leg in the Skeeling, or Out-house, till the Wednesday Night following, and Sheerman and Heward guarded him.

Imagine to yourselves the Condition of this unhappy Man, certain to die by their Hands, uncertain only as to the Time, and the cruel Manner of it; suffering for three Days and three Nights, Pain, Cold, and Hunger; and what was infinitely worse, that Terror and Anxiety of Mind, which one in his Situation must continually labour under; he must doubtless envy the Condition of his Companion Gally, who by an early Death was delivered from the Misery he then endured.

On Wednesday following, being the 17th of February, all the Prisoners at the Bar (except old Mills) met at Scardefield's, and there were present also seven more; at which Meeting they consulted what to do with Chater; and it was unanimously agreed by all the Thirteen then present, to murder Chater; and young Mills, the Prisoner at the Bar, particularly advised it; and said, if he had a Horse, he would go with them to do it; and either then, or at another Meeting at Scardefield's, when Carter and Jackson said, that as they came along, they brought Chater by a steep Place thirty Feet deep, young Mills said, If I had been there, I would have called a Council of War, and he should have come no further.

This being determined, the Prisoners Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, Carter, and Jackson, together with five more of that Company, went to old Mills's, where they found Chater chained, and guarded by Sheerman and Heward, and told him he must die; he said he expected no other; Tapner then said he would be his Butcher, and taking out a Knife, cut him twice across the Face; on which old Mills said, Don't murder him here, but take him somewhere else first.

Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, Carter, Jackson, and the rest, who came there together with Sheerman and Heward, then carried him away to murder him; Sheerman, Heward, and Richards, having been concerned in Gally's Murder, said, the rest should kill Chater, and therefore went away at Haring; Carter and Jackson having been likewise concerned in Gally's Murder, when they came to Lady Holt Park-gate, turned in there, and left the others; having first told them, the Well is a little Way off, you can't miss it, 'tis fenced round with Pales, to keep the Cattle from falling in.

Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, and the rest, went then to the Well, where Tapner put a Rope about Chater's Neck to hang him; and some of the Pales being broken down, Chater would have crept through. Tapner would not let him, but made him climb over the Pales, weak as he was, and then hanged him in the Well about a Quarter of an Hour, till they thought him dead; then having drawn him up till they could take hold of his Legs, they threw him headlong into the Well; and fancying they heard him breathe or groan, threw Posts and Stones in upon him, and went their Way.

The Terror this Act of Cruelty had spread through the Country, stopt every Person's Mouth, who had it in their Power to give any Information; so that the Body was not found till September last, when it was so putrified and consumed, as not to be known, but by the Belt which was about it, and which Chater's Wife will prove to be her Husband's. If there was any Doubt as to the Identity of the Man, we could shew likewise, that being examined by the Smugglers just before he was murdered, he said his Name was Daniel Chater.

It appears therefore from this State of the Case, that all the Prisoners are guilty of the Indictment. Tapner was present at the Consultation at Scardefield's, and was the Person who hanged him. Cobby and Hammond were present at the Consultation, helped to carry him to the Well, and were present at the Murder, and therefore equally guilty with Tapner, as Principals. Carter and Jackson took him away by Force from Paine's, and by the Treatment of him there and on the Road, shewed an Intention from the first to murder him, though perhaps the particular Death he was to suffer, was not then agreed on; they were afterwards present at the Consultation at Scardefield's, where it was resolved to murder him, and went almost to the Well with him; and when they parted, gave those who murdered him particular Directions to the Well. Young Mills was also at the Consultation, and particularly advised and directed the Murder, in which he declared he would have joined, if he had a Horse. Old Mills, though he kept no Publick-house, and therefore was not obliged to receive Guests, receives this Man brought in the Night, in a bloody and deplorable Condition; Chater is chained in his Outhouse from Sunday Night till Wednesday; yet Mills never discovers it to any Person, or uses any Means to deliver him, which is a strong Evidence of his Knowledge and Approbation of their Design; and when Tapner declared he would be his Butcher and cut him, old Mills expresses no Disapprobation of the Murder, does not dissuade him from it, but desires him not to do it there, but carry him somewhere else first, which shews his Approbation of the Fact; though to secure himself, as he thought, from Punishment, he would have had it committed at some other Place.

This, Gentlemen, is the Fact, which shews, that securing themselves and their Companions, was not their principal Aim; were it so, they would have murdered this Man as soon as they had him in their Power; but their Motive seems to have been Revenge, and a Disposition to torture one, who should dare to give any Information, which might bring them or their Friends into Danger.

After hearing the whole Evidence, if these Men appear innocent, God forbid they should be found guilty; and I would not have the cruel Circumstances of the Fact incline you to believe any thing we suggest, that is not supported by the strongest Proof: But if the Fact is proved beyond a Possibility of Doubt, to be in the Manner we have stated, I am sure you will do your Duty, and by a just and honest Verdict, deliver your Country from Men so void of Humanity.

The following Witnesses were then called for the Crown.

Mr. Milner, Collector of the Customs at the Port of Poole, deposed, That about the 7th of October 1747, he had Advice that the Custom-house at Poole was broke open; upon which he hasten'd thither, and found the outer Door burst open, and the other Door broke in Pieces; that the Room wherein some Run Tea was lodged, was broke open, and all the Tea carried away, excepting a little Bag, containing about four or five Pounds.

Mr. Shover, Collector of the Customs at Southampton, deposed, That in February last he received a Letter from the Commissioners of the Customs, acquainting him, that one John Dimer was committed to Chichester Jail, for breaking open the Custom-house at Poole, with Directions to send the deceased Daniel Chater, who could give some Information against Dimer, to Mr. Battine the Surveyor-General, and to acquaint Mr. Battine with the Occasion of his sending Chater; that he accordingly sent Chater with a Letter addressed to Mr. Battine, under the Care of one William Galley, a Tidesman in the Port of Southampton; that they set out on Sunday Morning the 14th of February last; he could not take upon him to say how Chater was dress'd, but he remembered he rode upon a dark brown Horse, and had a Great-coat on, with another Coat under it, and upon the under Coat a Belt; he could not recollect how Galley was dress'd, but remembered that he was mounted on a grey Horse.

William Galley, the Son of William Galley, deposed, That he remembered his Father's setting out upon this Journey to Mr. Battine, in February last; that he saw the Letter to Mr. Battine the Night before his Father set out, and saw the Directions; he remembered the Dress his Father had on; it was a blue Great-coat, with Brass Buttons covered with blue, a close-bodied Coat, of a light brown Colour, lined with blue, with a Waistcoat and Breeches of the same, and that he rode on a grey Horse; he remembered that Daniel Chater set out at the same Time with his Father, and had on a light Surtout Coat, with red Breeches and a Belt round him, and rode upon a brown Horse: that this was the last Time he ever saw his Father alive, and that he never saw Chater since.

Edward Holten deposed, That on the 14th of February last he saw Daniel Chater and another Person, whom he took to be Mr. Galley, at his own House, at Havant, in the County of Hants; he knew Chater very well,

* The Short-Hand Writer having omitted to take the several Questions put to the now be supplied.

But we having perused the following Trials do certify, that the Substance of the Evidence given by the several Witnesses is faithfully taken. And that upon the whole, this Account of the Proceedings under the Commissions is in Substance true.

and had some Conversation with him; that Chater told him he was going to Chichester upon a little Business, and then went out to Galley, and brought in a Letter, which was directed to William Battine, Esq. at East-Marden; upon which he (the Witness) told him, he was going out of his Way; that Galley wished he would direct them the Way; that he directed them to go through Stanstead, near Rowland's Castle; and that they said they should be back again the next Day.

George Austen deposed, That on Sunday the 14th of February last he saw two Men, one mounted upon a brown Horse, and the other upon a grey, at the New Inn at Leigh, in the Parish of Havant; that they came to the New Inn when he was there, and inquired the Way to East-Mean; to which Place he was going to direct them, when one of the Men, who had a blue Coat on, pulled a Letter out of his Pocket, which he (the Witness) looked at, and seeing it was directed to East-Marden, he told them they were going Ten Miles out of the Way; and that he and his Brother Thomas Austen, and his Brother-in-law Robert Jenkes, were going Part of their Road, and would conduct them the best they could; that they went no farther together than to a Place called Rowland's Castle, to a Public-house which was kept by the Widow Paine; the two Strangers call'd for Rum at Widow Paine's. This was about the Middle of the Day, or something after. That the Widow Paine asked him if he knew these Men, or whether they belonged to his Company; he told her they were going to Mr. Battine's, and that he was going to shew them the Way; she then said she thought they were going to do Harm to the Smugglers, and desired him to let them out of the Way, which he refused to do; she then seemed uneasy, and she and her Son consulted together; that her Son went out, and the Prisoner Jackson came in in a little Time; that the Prisoner Carter, and several more, came thither soon afterwards. He knew none but Jackson and Carter. That Jackson inquired where the two Men were bound for; and the Man in the light Coat answered, they were going to Mr. Battine's, and from thence to Chichester; but Carter was not by at that Time; that the two Strangers had some Rum, and Jackson called for a Mug of Hot, which was Gin and Beer mixed, or something of that Kind, and to the best of his Knowledge they all drank together; he did not see any ill Treatment, nor either of the Men bloody, whilst he was there; that he went away between one and two, and left the two Men there; the Widow Paine called him out of Doors, and told him his Brother Jenkes wanted to speak to him; when he came out, his Horse was at the Hedge by the back Door, and his Brother said he wondered why the two Men did not go away; upon which he went back again into the House, and his Brother was uneasy because he did so; that the Widow Paine advised him to go home, and said the two Men would be directed the Way; he was uneasy at going without them, because he saw so many Men come in, and imagined they had a Design to do some Harm to them; that when he went away, Jackson and Carter were left with the two Men, to the best of his Knowledge; and Jackson, as well as the Widow Paine, persuaded him to go home. He was positive that Jackson and Carter were there, for he knew them very well.

The Court asked Jackson and Carter, if they would ask this Witness any Questions?

To which they both answered in the Negative.

Thomas Austen was then called: deposed, That he was at the New Inn at Leigh on Valentine's Day last, with his Brother George; he saw two Men there who inquired the Way to Mr. Battine's; he went from thence with them to Rowland's Castle; they went to the Widow Paine's at that Place, and called for a Dram of Rum; the Prisoners were not there at first, but in a little Time Jackson came; and soon afterwards the Prisoner Carter. That the Widow Paine spoke to him at the outer Door before either of the Prisoners came, and asked him if he knew the two Men, and said she was afraid they were come to do the Smugglers some Mischief, and that she would send for William Jackson; her Son went for him, and he soon came, and another little Man and his Servant; he saw one Joseph Southern there and the Prisoner Carter, but Carter did not come so soon as Jackson; he (the Witness) stayed there till seven o'Clock in the Evening, and about that Time William Jackson struck one of the Men in the Face, who to the best of his Remembrance had a blue Coat on; they all drank pretty freely from one o'Clock, and he was drunk and went to Sleep, and the two Men were fuddled and went to Sleep in the little Room; that about seven o'Clock Jackson went into the Room and waked the two Men, and when they came out of the Room, it was that Jackson struck one of them; after they came out, the two Men went away with Jackson and Carter, and one William Steele, and Edmund Richards; he did not remember that they were forced away, and did not see them upon the Horses, nor did he ever see them any more; this was between seven and eight o'Clock.

Being asked, whether he saw either of the Men produce his Deputation, or heard any high Words?

Said he did not; that he was asleep the best Part of the Afternoon; and did not see any ill Treatment, but that one Blow which he had mentioned, and did not observe any Blood about them when they went away.

Being cross-examined at the Request of the Prisoners,

Said, he did not know who the two Strangers were, but they were the same Persons that his Brother George spoke of, and had a Letter for Mr. Battine; that one of them had a blue Coat on, and rode upon a grey Horse, and the other Man rode upon a brownish Horse; he did not see the Direction of the Letter, but he heard it read by Robert Jenkes.

Robert Jenkes deposed, That he saw two Men upon the 14th of February last, at the New Inn at Leigh, one of them upon a blackish Horse, the other upon a grey, and dressed in riding Coats; they were the same Men that the Witnesses George and Thomas Austen had spoke of; they went together to Rowland's Castle, and got there about twelve o'Clock or something after, and went into a House there which was kept by the Widow Paine; he did not hear her give any Directions to send for any body; but the Prisoners Jackson and Carter soon came thither; he said there about an Hour and a half, and whilst he was there he did not see any Abuse, or observe that either of the Men was bloody; he had no Conversation with Jackson, further than that Jackson said he would see the Letter which was going to Major Battine, and Carter he believes might say so too; when he wanted to go away, Jackson would not suffer him to go thro' the Room where the two Men were; that Jackson told him if he had a mind to go, he might go through the Garden to the back Part of the House; he did so, and found his Horse there, and went away; he could not say why Jackson refused to let him go through the Room, but believed it was for fear the two Men should go away with him; that he did not order his Horse to be led round to the Garden himself; that George Austen and he went away together upon his Horse, and that Jackson would see the Letter one of the Men had in his Pocket, and the Witness saw the Direction of it, which was to William Battine, Esq. at East Marden.

Being cross-examined by the Prisoner Carter, whether Carter said he would see the Letter? answered, both Carter and Jackson said so; and that Carter did say he would see the Letter that was going to Mr. Battine; that he (the Witness) did not order his Horse to be carried to the back Part of the House; and that Carter was by when he was told by Jackson, that if he had a mind to go, his Horse should be led to the back Part of the House.

Joseph Southern swore, That on Sunday the 14th of February last, he saw Jenkes, the two Austens, and two other Men on the Road coming from Havant towards Rowland's Castle, one of them had a blue Coat on and rode a grey Horse; that he went to Rowland's Castle himself that Day, and saw Jenkes, Austen, and the same two Men sitting on Horseback drinking at the Widow Paine's Door; he staid there best Part of an Hour, and saw them and several other Persons in the House; that he saw the Prisoners Carter and Jackson in the House whilst he staid there; he sat down and drank a Pint of Beer by the Kitchen Fire, but the other Persons were in another Room; that he saw the two Men come out to the Door and go in again, and one of them had an Handkerchief over his Eye, and there was Blood upon it; that he met this Man as he was going in, and heard him say to Jackson, "I am the King's Officer, and I will take Notice of you that struck me." That Carter was not present when this was said, but was in the House; the Man who spoke thus to Jackson had a Parchment in his Hand when he met him at the Door, he likewise saw a Letter in his Hand, and heard him say he was going to Mr. Battine with it; that he (the Witness) went away between two and three o'Clock, and did not know what became of the Letter, nor had he heard either Jackson or Carter say what became of it.

The Prisoners Jackson and Carter said they would not ask him any Questions.

William Garret swore, he was at the Widow Paine's on the 14th of February last, about four o'Clock in the Afternoon, and saw the Prisoners Jackson and Carter and two Strangers there; that one of them who had a blue Coat on had received a Stroke upon his Cheek, and the Blood ran down it; that just as he came in, this Man was standing up by the Back of a Chair, and Jackson stood by him, and he heard Jackson say, "That for a Quarter of Gin he would serve him so again," by which the Witness understood that Jackson had struck him before; he did not hear the Man say he was the King's Officer, but he heard Jackson say, "You a King's Officer! I'll make you a King's Officer, and that you shall know." That when he went away, he left them all there.

The Prisoners would not ask him any Questions.

William Lamb depofed, That he went to the Widow Paine's, at Rowland's Castle, on the 14th of February last, about four in the Afternoon, and found Jackson and Carter there; that before he went, he saw one of the Widow Paine's Sons call Carter aside, at his House at West-Bourne; that there were several other People there in another Room, amongst whom were Thomas Austen, and two Men that were Strangers to him, one of whom had on a blue Gaberdine; the two Men, he understood, were going with a Letter to Mr. Battine; he saw no ill Treatment during the little Time he staid there; that Edmund Richards, one of the Company, pull'd out a Pistol, and said, "That whoever should discover any thing that passed at that House, he would blow his Brains out." Jackson and Carter were not in the Room when these Words were spoken, as he believes. He saw the Man in the blue Gaberdine pull a Parchment out of his Pocket, and heard him tell the People he was the King's Officer; his Wig was then off, and there was Blood upon his Cheek; that he saw a Letter, which he understood to be going to Mr. Battine; one Kelly, and the Prisoner Carter, had it in their Hands, but he did not know how they came by it; he did not see the Directions of the Letter; he observ'd it was broke open, when he saw it in the Hands of Carter and Kelly; and he understood, by the Discourse of the Company, that it was a Letter which the two Strangers were to carry to Mr. Battine, but he never heard it read.

The Prisoners, Carter and Jackson, would not ask him any Questions.

Richard Kent depofed, That he was at the Widow Paine's on the 14th of February last; and that Edmund Richards told him, that if he spoke a Word of what he had heard or seen there, he would shoot him thro' the Body; but Jackson and Carter were not in the Room when Richards said this.

George Peate depofed, That he was at Rowland's Castle, on Sunday the 14th of February last, about seven o'Clock in the Evening, or after, and saw nine Men there, and that the Prisoners, Jackson and Carter, were two of them; he staid there about half an Hour, and as soon as he came in, he saw four or five Men with great Coats and Boots on, most of them upon their Legs, as if they were just going; he went and warmed himself by the Kitchen Fire, and sat down by Thomas Austen, who was then asleep; he called for a Pint of Beer, and soon after he heard the Stroke of a Whip repeated three or four Times, in a little Room that was at the Corner of the Kitchen, but did not see who gave the Blows, nor who received them; that he afterwards heard a strange Rustling of People, more than before, and saw seven or eight Men come into the Kitchen; that he knew the Prisoners Jackson and Carter, and William Steele, Edmund Richards, and two that went by the Names of Sam and Harry; there were two other Persons there, whom, to his Knowledge, he had never seen before nor since; and could give no Account of them, nor did he observe how they were dress'd; that soon after he thought he heard a Blow, and he saw

Jackson in a moving Posture, as if he had just given a Blow, and was drawing up his Arm in a proper Form, as if he was going to give another; but William Paine stepp'd up, and called him Fool and Blockhead for so doing; upon which he sunk his Arm, and did not behave in the like Manner any more, in his Sight; that just as they were going out of Doors, Jackson turned round, with a Pistol in his Hand, and asked for a Belt, Strap, or String, but Nobody give him either, and he put his Pistol into his Great-coat Pocket, and went away with the rest; that by the trampling of Horses, he supposed they all went on Horseback, but which Way he knew not; it was between seven and eight o'Clock, as high as he could guess, when they went off; he did not hear any Conversation about one of the Strangers being the King's Officer, nor did see the Blow given, nor the Person to whom the other Blow was going to be given.

The Prisoners would not ask him any Questions.

John Raifs depofed, That on Sunday, the 14th of February, he was at Rowland's Castle, between twelve and one o'Clock at Noon; that when he came there he found Edmund Richards, William Steele, the Prisoners Carter and Jackson, and Little Sam, Richard Kelly, Jackson's Wife, and Galley and Chater; he saw Jackson take Chater to the Door, and heard him ask him if he knew any Thing of Dimer; and Chater answer'd he did; and was obliged to go and speak against him; that Galley then went out to keep Chater from talking to Jackson; whereupon Jackson knocked Galley down with his Fist; that Galley came in again, and soon after Jackson and Carter. When they were all come in, he (the Witness) with the Prisoners Jackson and Carter, and Edmund Richards, went into the back Room; that there they enquir'd of Jackson what he had got out of the Shodmaker (meaning Daniel Chater); that Jackson informed them, that Chater said he knew Dimer, and was obliged to come in as a Witness against him; that then they consulted what to do with them (Chater and Galley); this was about three o'Clock in the Afternoon. They first proposed to carry them to some secure Place, where they might be taken care of till they had an Opportunity of carrying them over to France; that when this Proposition was made, the Prisoners, Jackson and Carter, and Richards, and himself were present; and this Resolution was taken to send them out of the way, that Chater should not appear against Dimer; and afterwards it was agreed to fetch a Horse, and carry them away: That Galley and Chater appeared very uneasy, and wanted to be gone; and thereupon Jackson's Wife, to pacify them, told them that she lived at Major Battine's, and her Horse was gone for, and as soon as it came she would shew them the Way to Mr. Battine's; that he (the Witness) then went to Chichester, and saw no more of them that Night.

Being cross-examined, at the Request of the Defendants Counsel, said, At this Consultation there was nothing mentioned but the securing them, in order to carry them to France.

This Witness having gone thus far in his Evidence, was set by for the present; the Counsel for the Crown declaring that they would call him again, to give an Account of what pass'd on the 17th, after they had examined the next Witness.

William Steele depofed, That he was at the Widow Paine's on Sunday the 14th of February; that the Prisoner Jackson, Little Sam, one Kelly, and two Men more, and Jackson's Wife, were there when he came, which was about two o'Clock in the Afternoon, and soon afterwards Little Harry, the Prisoner Carter, Edmund Richards, John Raifs, and Carter's Wife, came thither; he did not know how Carter or Jackson came to be there, but the Widow Paine's Son came and called him (the Witness) out, and said he must go to the Castle, for there were two Men come to swear against the Shepherd, meaning John Dimer; that when he came in they were in general sober, as far as he saw, but they sat drinking together about two Hours; that Jackson took Chater out of the House, to examine him about Dimer, and after they had been out some Time, Galley went out to them, but soon return'd, and said Jackson had knocked him down; the Witness saw he was bloody all down the left Cheek; that Jackson was not in the Room when Galley came in, but came in with Carter a little Time afterwards; that then Galley, addressing himself to Jackson, said he did not know any Occasion Jackson had to use him in that Manner, and that he should remember it, and took down his Name in Jackson's Prefence. Galley likewise said he was an Officer, and shewed his Deputation to the People that were in the Room; the Company continued drinking till Galley and Chater were quite fuddled, and went into a little inner Room to sleep; this was about four or five o'Clock, and they continued in the little Room two or three Hours; the rest of the Company sat drinking all the while, consulting what to do with Galley and Chater. The Prisoners, Jackson and Carter, and Little Sam, Little Harry, Richards, and the Witness, were at this Consultation. It was proposed to put them (Galley and Chater) out of the way, because they should not appear against the Shepherd, meaning Dimer, and it was proposed to throw them into the Well, in the Horse-pasture, about half a Mile from Rowland's Castle, but it was thought not convenient to put them into a Well so near, for fear of a Discovery; it was then proposed to join, and each Man to allow them Three-Pence a Week, and to keep them in some secret Place till they saw what became of Dimer, and as Dimer was served, so these two People (Chater and Galley) were to be served; this was talked of while Chater and Galley were asleep, and there was no other Proposal made, as he heard. But while they were talking these Things, the Wives of Carter and Jackson said it was no Matter what became of them (Galley and Chater), or what was done to them; they ought to be hang'd, for they were come to ruin them, meaning the Smugglers: That about Seven o'Clock Carter and Jackson went into the inner Room, and waked Galley and Chater, and brought them out of the Room, very bloody and very drunk; he did not see what passed in the Room, but was sure they did not go in so bloody; and he believed Jackson and Carter had kicked and spurred them; they set Galley the Officer upon a brown or black Horse, and Chater up behind him; Jackson, Carter, and Richards, put them on Horse-back and tied their Legs under the Horse's Belly, and also tied their Legs together; they then tied a Line to the Bridle, and he (the Witness) got upon a grey Horse and led them along; that just after they turned round the Corner about twenty or thirty Yards from the House, Jackson cried out, Whip them, them, lick them Dogs, cut them; it was then dark, and the Company whipped and lashed them with their Horse-whips, some on one Side and some on the other, with great Violence on the Face and Head and other Parts of the Body, and continued doing so while they rode about half a Mile to a Place called Wood's Alhes; that there they alighted, and Little Sam gave all the Company a Dram or two, but none to Galley and Chater; that as soon as they were mounted again Jackson and Carter cried out, Damn them, lick them, whip them; and they were whipped as before for about a Mile further, and then they fell down under the Horse's Belly with their Heads upon the Ground, and their Legs over the Saddle; they were immediately set up again, and their Legs tied together in the same Posture; and the Company went on whipping them as before, till they came to a Place called Goodbrough Dean, which was about half a Mile further; they were beat very much, and in the Judgment of the Witnesses, it was almost impossible they should sit their Horses; when they came to Dean, somebody of the Company pulled out a Pistol, and said, He would shoot them (Galley and Chater) through the Head if they made any Noise whilst they went through the Village; he could not tell who it was that threatened to shoot them, but apprehends it was done for fear the People in the Village should hear them; they went on but a Foot Pace, and after they got through Dean, they were whipped again as before; and when they came near a Place called Idsworth, they fell down again under the Horse's Belly, and then some of the Company loosed them, and set up the Officer (Galley) behind him (the Witnesses), and Chater behind Little Sam; and in this Manner they proceeded towards Lady Holt Park, which is near three Miles from Idsworth, whipping Galley and Chater as before; but the Lashes of their Whips falling upon the Witnesses, as he sat before Galley, he (the Witnesses) could not bear the Strokes, and therefore they left off whipping Galley in that Manner; Galley sat upon the Horse till they got to Lady Holt Park, and then being faint and tired with riding, he got down, and Carter and Jackson took him one by the Arms and the other by the Legs, and carried him towards a Well by the Side of Lady Holt Park; that Jackson said to Carter, "We'll throw him into the Well;" to which Carter replied, with all his Heart, and Galley seemed indifferent what they did with him; but some of the Company saying it was Pity to throw him into the Well, Jackson and Carter set him up behind the Witnesses again, and Chater was still behind Little Sam; they went on in this Manner till they came to go down a Hill, when Galley was faint and tired, and could not ride any further, and got down there; upon which Carter and Jackson laid him on a Horse before Edmund Richards, with his Belly upon the Pommel of the Saddle, they laid him across the Horse, because he was so bad that they could not contrive to carry him in any other Manner, and they carried him so for about a Mile and a Half from the Well; that then Richards being tired of holding him, let him down by the Side of the Horse; and Carter and Jackson put him upon the grey Horse that he (the Witnesses) was upon, and the Witnesses got off; they set him up, his Legs across the Saddle, and his Body lay over the Horse's Mane; that in this Posture, Jackson held him on; he did not remember that any body else held him at that Time; that they went on for about half a Mile in this Manner, Galley crying out vehemently all the Time, "Barbarous Usage, for God's sake shoot me through the Head or through the Body;" he (the Witnesses) thought Jackson was at this Time pinching him by the privy Parts, for there were no Blows given when he cried so; that Chater was still with the Company behind Little Sam, and they went on for about two Miles and a half further, the Company holding Galley by Turns on the Horse, till they came to a dirty Lane; at this Place, Carter and Jackson rode forwards, and bid the rest of the Company stop at the Swing-gate beyond the Water, till they should return; Jackson and Carter came to them again at the Swing-gate, and told them, that the Man of the House, whither they went, was ill, and that they could not go thither; by which he understood that they had been in the Neighbourhood to get Entertainment. It was then proposed to go forward to the House of one Scarsfield; and Little Harry tied Galley with a Cord, and got up on Horseback behind him, in order to hold him up on the Horse, and they went on till they came to a gravelly Knap in the Road; at this Place Galley cried out, "I shall fall, I shall fall;" whereupon Little Harry said, "D—n you, then fall," and gave him a Push, and Galley fell down and gave a Spirt, and never spoke a Word more; he (the Witnesses) believed his Neck was broke by the Fall; that then they put him upon the Horse again, and went away for Raike, to the Sign of the Red-Lion, which was kept by William Scarsfield; that Chater was behind Little Sam, and was carried to Scarsfield's House, and was very bloody when they came to Scarsfield's; that Jackson and Little Harry went from Scarsfield's with Chater about three o'Clock in the Morning; and Jackson afterwards returned to Scarsfield's, and said he had left Chater at old Mills's House, and that Little Harry was left to look after him that he might not escape; this was Monday the 15th of February, and they remained all that Day at Scarsfield's House; that the Prisoner, Richard Mills the younger, was there on that Day; and upon hearing from Carter and Jackson that they had passed by a Precipice of about thirty Feet deep, when they had Chater with them, he said, "If I had been there, I would have called a Council of War on the Spot, and he (Chater) should have gone no further;" or to that Effect. That two or three Days afterwards the Company met at Scarsfield's again, to consult what to do with Chater; that the Prisoners John Raifs, Carter, and Jackson, the Prisoner Richard Mills the younger, a Son of the Prisoner Richard Mills the elder, Thomas Willis, John Mills, another Son of old Mills, the Prisoners Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, and Thomas Stringer, Edmund Richards, and Daniel Perrier, and he (the Witnesses) were there consulting what to do with Chater; and John Mills proposed to take him out, and load a Gun, and tie a String to the Trigger, and place him (Chater) against the Gun, and that they should all of them pull the String, to involve every one of them in the same Degree of Guilt; but this Proposal was not agreed to. Then Jackson and Carter proposed to carry him back to the Well, and to murder him there, which was agreed to by all the Company; but Richard Mills the younger and John Mills said, they could not go with them to the Well because they had no Horses; and as it was in their (the other Persons) way home, they might do it as well without them; and so it was concluded to murder

Chater, and then to throw him into the Well; that in the Evening they went away from Raike to the House of the Prisoner Richard Mills the elder, and found Chater in a back Skeeling, or Out-house, run up at the Back of Mills's House, a Place they usually put Turf in; he was chained with an Iron Chain, about three Yards long, to a Beam that went across the Skeeling, about as high as his Head; that Chater was bloody about the Head, and had a Cut upon one of his Eyes, but he could see with it; that the Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at home himself, and fetched out Bread and Cheese for them to eat, and gave them Drink, and received them, and made them welcome; that the House is a private House, no Inn or Ale-house; that they all of them went to and again between the House and the Skeeling, and that the Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at home all the while; that the Prisoner Tapner pulled out a clasp Knife and opened it, and swore to Chater "that Knife should be his Butcher," and cut him over both his Eyes, and down his Forehead, so that he bled to a great Degree. He was ordered by some of the Company to say his Prayers, for they were come to kill him, and kill him they would; that Tapner said this, and some of the Company were then in the Skeeling, and the rest of them were in the House, but no one interposed to save his Life; that he (the Witnesses) was in the Skeeling, when Chater was advised to say his Prayers, and was cut, and that Chater was chained by the Leg at that Time. When they had kept him there as long as they thought fit, somebody of the Company unlocked the Chain, and set him on Horseback, and John Raifs, Edmund Richards, Little Harry, Little Sam, the Prisoner Tapner, Thomas Stringer, the Prisoners Cobby and Hammond, Little Daniel, the Prisoners Jackson, Carter, and the Witnesses, set out with him for Lady Holt Park, to carry him down to the Well; that when they came to a Place called Harting, Richards, Little Harry, and Little Sam, went back; and when the rest came to the white Gate by Lady Holt Park, Carter and Jackson left them, but first told them they must keep along a little further, and they could not miss the Well; that it was about two Hundred Yards further, and that there were some Pales on the right Hand of it; that there were Pales round the Well. They went on, found the Well by the Direction Carter and Jackson had given them, and carried Chater with them; that then Tapner, Stringer, and Cobby got off their Horses, and Tapner pulled a Cord out of his Pocket, and put it about Chater's Neck, and led him towards the Well. Chater seeing two or three Pales down, said he could get through, but Tapner said, "No, you shall get over," and he did so, with the Rope about his Neck; they then put him into the Well, and hanged him, winding the Rope round the Rails, and his Body hung down in the Mouth of the Well for about a Quarter of an Hour; and then Stringer took hold of his Legs to pull him aside, and let his Head fall first into the Well, and Tapner let the Rope go, and down fell the Body into the Well head-foremost; that they staid there some Time, and one of the Company said he thought he heard him breathe in the Well; upon which they got a Post or two, and threw them into the Well upon him, and there they left him.

The Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, said, he never heard any Talk about the Man's being to be killed, and that he desired the People would take him away, and said he would not have him murdered.

Steele, the Witnesses, being cross-examined as to this, said, He never heard the Prisoner say he would not have them murder the Man; and added, to be sure he must hear them talk of murdering him, while they were at his House.

John Raifs, being called again, said, That after he had left the Company at the Widow Paine's, on the 14th of February, as mentioned in the former Part of his Evidence, he met some of the same Company, and others, on the Wednesday Evening following, being the 17th of February, at Scarsfield's, at Raike; that the Prisoners, Richard Mills the younger, Carter, Jackson, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, with Steele, Richards, Little Sam, Daniel Perrier, John Mills, and Thomas Willis, were there; and it was proposed at that Meeting to murder Chater. He could not say who first made the Proposal, but, to the best of his Knowledge, it was either Carter or Jackson, and it was agreed to by all the Company; it was not then resolved how it was to be done, but only in general, that he was to be murdered, and thrown into a Well; that they went to the House of the Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, to join Little Harry, who was left there to take Care of Chater, and found Chater chained by the Leg upon some Turf in a Skeeling, at the Backside of the House; that the Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, was at Home, and ordered his Housekeeper to fetch Bread and Cheese, and some Household Beer, for any of them to eat and drink that would, and believes Mills knew that they came for Chater; that Tapner and Cobby were very earnest to go and see Chater; and Tapner having his Knife in his Hand said, "This Knife shall be his Butcher;" that thereupon the Prisoner, Richard Mills the elder, said, "Pray do not murder him here, but carry him somewhere else before you do it;" that old Mills said this, upon seeing that Tapner had his Knife in his Hand, and hearing him declare it should be his (Chater's) Butcher; that they then went out into the Skeeling, and found Chater sitting upon some Heath or Turf, and Tapner ordered him to say his Prayers: While he was repeating the Lord's Prayer, Tapner cut him over the Face with his Knife, and Cobby stood by, kicking him and damning him. This too was whilst the poor Man was saying the Lord's Prayer. That Chater asked them what was become of Galley; and they told him he was murdered, and that they were come to murder him. Upon which Chater earnestly begg'd to live another Day. That Cobby asked him his Name, and whether he had not formerly done Harvest-work at Selsea? To which he answered, That his Name was Daniel Chater, and that he had harvested at Selsea, and there he became acquainted with Dimer. Cobby and Tapner asked him what they had fed him with at old Mills's, and he said Pease Pottage; that Little Harry unlocked the Horse-lock, that was on his (Chater's) Legs, and Tapner, Cobby, and Stringer, brought him out of the Skeeling, and set him upon Tapner's Mare, in order to carry him to the Well, to be there murdered, and thrown in; and that all the Company knew, at that Time, what was to be done with him; that they rid about three Miles towards the Well, and sometimes whipp'd Chater with their Horsewhips; and Tapner observing that he bled, swore, if he blooded his (Tapner's) Saddle, he would whip him again. When they came to Harting, Carter, Jackson, Richards, Little Sam, Little Harry, and Steele, said, "We have done our Parts,

"Parts, and you (meaning the rest of the Company) shall do yours." By which they meant, as he took it, that they had murdered Galley, and that the rest should murder Chater; and Richards, Little Sam, and Little Harry, stopp'd there, and did not accompany them any further; the rest went on towards the Well; but Carter and Jackson stopp'd before they came to it, and told them the Well was a little further off, describing it to them, and told them they could not miss finding it, and there left them; that he (the Witness) and Tapner, Cobby, Stringer, Hammond, Perryer, and Steele, came to the Well, got off their Horses, and took Chater off his Horse, the Witness was not certain which, and either Tapner or Cobby put a Cord round his Neck; that there was a Shord in the Pales about the Well; and he heard Chater say he could get through there; but Cobby said, "Damn you, no, you shall not, you shall get over;" that Tapner wound the Cord round the Pales, and Chater being put into the Mouth of the Well, hung by the Neck for about a Quarter of an Hour, and then they loosened the Rope, and turned the Body, that it fell into the Well head-foremost. They staid there till some of the Company thought they heard him breathe, and then went to get a Rope at Lady Holt Park, to go down into the Well to murder him quite, but met Jackson and Carter at Lady Holt Park, who told them there was a long Ladder; but they could not rear the Ladder, and so got some Posts, and threw them down into the Well.

The Prisoner Hammond desired the Witness might be asked, Whether, when they were at old Mills's, he did not offer to ride away, and make a Discovery; but was prevented by the Company?

Raifs said he never heard him say any Thing about it; but some of the Company did threaten any of the rest who should refuse to go to the Murder of Chater.

Ann Peford deposed, That two Men came to her Father's on the 15th of February, about one or two o'Clock in the Morning, and called for Thomas Peford her Father; that she asked one of them his Name, and he said it was William Jackson: Her Father, who was then very ill, said they might come in if they would; that Jackson did come in, and asked if they could not abide in the House some Time; to which she answered No, because her Father was ill; and thereupon Jackson turned to the other Man, and said, We cannot think of abiding here, as the Man is so ill, and so they went away. She saw that Jackson's Hand was bloody.

William Scarsfield deposed, That he kept the Red Lion at Raife, in the Parish of Regate, and that in the Night, between the 14th and 15th of February last, the Prisoners Jackson and Carter, with Steele and Richards, came to his House, and called out to him, "For God's Sake get up, and let us in!" That he let them in, and lighted a Candle, and saw they were bloody; he asked them how they came to be so, and they said they had had an Engagement with some Officers, and had lost their Goods, and some of their Men they feared were dead, and some were wounded; that they said they would go and call them that were at the other Publick House; and while he was gone down into the Cellar, he heard Horses come to the Door, and some of the Men went into the Kitchen, some into the Brewhouse, and some into the Parlour; that he saw two or three Men in the Brewhouse, and there lay something like a Man before them by the Brewhouse Door, and he heard them say he was dead; that some of them calling for Liquor, he carried a Glass of Gin into the Parlour, and saw a Man standing upright in the Parlour, with his Face bloody, and one Eye swelled very much; that Richards was in the Parlour with the Man, and objected to his coming in; and the Prisoners Carter and Jackson, and three others were then in the Brewhouse, and Steele was with them; after they had drank three Mugs of Hot, they got their Horses out, and sent him down for some Brandy and Rum; but when he came up with it, all the Company were gone twenty Yards below the House, tho' several of them came back to drink, one or two at a time; that he did not know what became of the Man that he saw standing in the Parlour, but he observed they separated into two Companies; that one of the Company, a little Man, asked him if he did not know the Place where they laid up some Goods a Year and an half ago; and the Prisoner Carter came back, and said they must have a Lanthorn; that Richards fell in a Passion because he refused to go along with them; and upon seeing him coming towards them with a Light, the Company parted; that he saw a Horse stand at a little Distance, and there seemed to him to be a Man lying across the Horse, and two Men holding him on, and he believed that the Person he saw lying across the Horse was dead, but he was not nigh enough to see whether he was or not.

That on the Wednesday or Thursday following, about twelve or one at Noon, the Prisoners Jackson and Carter, and all the rest of the Company came again to his House: that the Prisoner Richard Mills the younger, and his Brother John were sent for, and came to them.

Edward Sonus proved, that on the 16th or 17th of September last, he found the Body of a dead Man in a Well in Harras Wood, within 200 Yards of Lady Holt House, and that there were two Pieces of Timber over the Body: that he went immediately to get the Coroner's Inquest; and when he came back, he saw the Man had Boots on, and there was a Rope about his Neck; and that the Well is by Lady Holt Park, in the County of Suffex.

Mr. Brackstone produced the Boots and a Belt that were taken off the Body, and given to him by the Coroner.

Mrs. Chater, the Widow of Daniel Chater, deposed, That she remembered her late Husband set out from Southampton on the 14th of February last, and that she had never seen him since that time; she looked upon the Belt produced by Mr. Brackstone, and said she knew it was the same Belt her Husband had on when he set out from home, by a particular Mark in it; and she believed that the Boots produced were likewise her Husband's.

Mr. Sonus proved also, that the Horse, which Chater set out upon, was found about a Month afterwards, and delivered to the Owner.

The King's Counsel submitted it here.

Mr. Justice Foster acquainted the Prisoners, that the King's Counsel having gone through their Evidence, it was now their Time to offer what they could in their own Defence.

He repeated to each of the Prisoners the particular Facts the Evidence

* Note. The Particulars of the Judge's Charge to the Jury in summing up the Evidence, are omitted, thro' the Mistake of the Short-hand Writer, which is mentioned in the Advertisement in the Note; and the State of the Evidence is now reduced to so narrow a Compass, that the inserting the Judge's Charge, would have been little more than a Repetition of the Evidence, in the same Order as it stands in the Trial.

had charged him with, and asked them severally what they had to say to clear themselves of that Charge.

To which the Prisoner Tapner said, he did not know that they were going to murder the Man; but Jackson and Richards threatened to kill him if he would not go with them, and he received three or four Cuts from Hammond or Daniel Perryer, but he did not know which; that Richards and another Man tied the Rope; and he denied that he drew a Knife, or cut Chater across the Face.

Mr. Justice Foster told him, that supposing he was threatened in the Manner he insisted on, yet that would be no legal Defence in the present Case; and that in every possible View of the Case, it was infinitely more eligible for a Man to die by the Hands of wicked Men, than to go to his Grave with the Guilt of innocent Blood on his own Head.

Cobby said, he did not know what they were going to do with the Man, that he never touched him, and knew nothing of the Murder.

Hammond said, when he understood what they were going to do, he wanted to go off and make a Discovery: But the Company prevented him; and that by the Company he meant all the Prisoners.

Richard Mills the elder said, he did not know what they were at, and did not think they would have hurt the Man, and did not know he was chained till after they were gone away.

Richard Mills the younger said, he knew nothing of the Matter, and never saw either of the Men (Galley and Chater) in his Life; he acknowledged he was at Scarsfield's House, but said he knew nothing of the Murder, and denied the Charge; that Scarsfield was the only Witness he had, for he (Scarsfield) knew when he came, and how long he staid there.

Jackson said, the Man who said he would be Chater's Butcher, was his Butcher, and nobody else; that he (Jackson) was not by when he was murdered, and was not guilty of it.

Mr. Justice Foster cautioned him not to deceive himself, and told him, that with regard to the present Charge, it was not necessary that he should have been present at the Murder; he was not charged with being present, but as an Accessary before the Fact, in advising and procuring the Murder to be done; and that was the Fact he was called upon to answer.

Carter said, when he went to the Widow Paine's, he only thought they were going to carry the Men out of the way till they saw what should become of Dimr, and that he never laid Hands upon them; and went along with the Company to prevent Mischief.

Scarsfield the Witness was then called again, and Richard Mills the younger being asked whether he would ask him any Questions, only desired he might be asked what time he came to his House, and how long he staid there; to which Scarsfield answered, That Mills came to his House about half an Hour after One, staid there about an Hour and an half, and went away on Foot.

The rest of the Prisoners said they had not any Witnesses.

Upon which, Mr. Justice Foster opened to the Jury the Substance of the Indictment, as before set forth; and told them, that whether the Prisoners, or any of them, were guilty in Manner as therein they are severally charged, must be left to their Consideration, upon the Evidence that had been laid before them.

That in order to enable them to apply the Evidence to the several Parts of the Charge, it would be proper for him first to acquaint them how the Law determines in Cases of this Nature; that with regard to the Persons charged as Principals, wherever several Persons agree together to commit a Murder or any other Felony, and the Murder or Felony is actually committed, every Person present, aiding and abetting, is, in the Eye of the Law, guilty in the same Degree, and liable to the same Punishment as he who actually committed the Fact. And the Reason the Law goes upon is this, that the Presence of the Accomplices gives Encouragement, Support, and Protection to the Person who actually commits the Fact; and at the same time contributes to his Security.

That it is not necessary that the Proof of the Fact, in Cases of this Nature, should come up to the precise Form of the Indictment. For if the Indictment charges that A did the Fact, and that B and C were present, aiding and abetting, if it be proved that B did the Fact, and that A and C were present, aiding and abetting, they will be all guilty within the Indictment.

That Accessaries before the Fact, are those who not being present in any Sense of the Law at the time the Fact is committed, have advised or otherwise procured the Fact to be done. These Persons, in the Case of wilful Murder, will be liable to the same Punishment as those who committed the Murder, by their Instigation, Advice or Procurement.

* He then summed up the Evidence very largely, and applied it to the Case of the several Prisoners; and concluded, that if upon the whole, the Jury should be of Opinion that either of the Principals (Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, or the others charged as Principals in the Indictment) did strangle the Deceased, and that the Prisoners, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, were present, aiding and abetting, they will be within this Indictment.

And if they should be of Opinion, that the Prisoners, charged as Accessaries before the Fact, did advise, consent to, or procure the Murder, they likewise will be guilty within this Indictment, tho' they were not present when the Fact was committed.

The Jury, after some little Consideration, gave their Verdict, that Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, were guilty of the Murder, as laid in the Indictment:

And Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, William Jackson, and William Carter, were guilty, as Accessaries before the Fact.

Wednesday, 18 Jan. 1748-9.

William Jackson and William Carter were tried upon the other Indictment, on the which they had been arraigned the Day before, as Principals in the Murder of William Galley, and to which they had pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Steele opened the Indictment to the Jury, and Mr. Bantles, the King's Counsel, spoke to much the same Purport as the Day before.

Mr. Smyth, another of the King's Counsel, spoke as follows, viz. I shall only add a Word or two, to explain to you why these two Men, who were convicted Yesterday as Accessaries before the Fact to the Murder of Chater, and thereby liable to suffer Death, should be tried a second time, as Principals, for the Murder of Galley.

The Reasons for it are; in the first place, it will be necessary to convict them as Principals for the Murder of Galley, otherwise the Accessories to that Murder, either before or after the Fact, cannot be convicted.

Another Reason is, as the Intention of all Prosecutions, as well as Punishments, is not so much to revenge and punish what is past, as to deter others from committing the like Crimes; it may be of Service to the Publick to have every Circumstance of this cruel Transaction disclosed, to shew how dangerous to their Neighbours, and to the Country in general, those Persons are who are concerned in Smuggling, and how much it concerns every Man to use his utmost Endeavours to suppress, and bring them to Justice; and it may have another good Effect, in preventing Persons from engaging in that lawless Practice, when they see it consequentially engages them in Crimes, which at first they might never intend; for I believe, if these unhappy Men had been told, when they first began Smuggling, that the Time would come when they would coolly bathe their Hands in the Blood of two innocent Men, (bad as they now are) they would then have been shocked, and startled at the very Imagination of it; yet Men are so naturally led from one Vice to another, that having once transgressed the Laws of their Country, they have insensibly arrived at such an Height of Wickedness, as to commit this heinous Crime without the least Hesitation or Remorse. [After which the following Witnesses were called for the Crown, viz.

Mr. Milner, Mr. Sheerer, William Galley, and Edward Holton, whose Evidence upon this Trial was to the same Effect as it was upon the former.

Robert Jenkes also proved the same upon this Trial, as he did upon the former, with this Addition:

That when they were at the Widow Paine's, Jackson and Carter both said they would see the Letter for Mr. Battine, because they thought the Men were going to swear against the Smugglers; that both Jackson and Carter hindered him from going thro' the Room where the two Men were; and that one of the Men had on a blue Great-coat.

Being cross-examined, at the Request of Carter, whether he hindered him from going through the Room?

Answered, That both did.

Joseph Southern, William Lamb, William Garnet, and George Poat, proved the same, as upon the former Trial.

John Raife, to the first Part of his Evidence relating to the Transactions at the Widow Paine's, added, that the Blood ran down from Galley's Head and Face, on Jackson's knocking him down; and that Galley and Chater were not fuddled when he went away.

William Steele, to his former Evidence, added, That whilst they were at the Widow Paine's, Jackson said, "That if any of the Gang went away from them, he would shoot them through the Head, or through the Body, or serve them as bad as the two Men should be served." That he supposed Jackson meant by this, that he would murder any of their own Company, or use any of them as ill as they did the Officer and Chater, if they left them; that when the Company left off whipping Galley with their Thongs, and Lashes of their Whips, as mention'd in the former Trial, because the Lashes of the Whip reached this Witness, they beat him with the Butt-end of their Whips, which were very heavy, 'till one of their Whips was beat all to Pieces; that the Gravelly Knap, where Galley was pushed off the Horse, when he died, was in Conduit-Lane, in Rogate Parish; and that Little Harry pushed him in the Back, and shoved him down; and that the Prisoners, Jackson and Carter, Little Sam, and Richards, were in Company when he died; that they laid his Body upon a Horse, and one Man held him on one Side, and another on the other Side, and so they led the Horse along; that Carter and another went before to call Scardefield up; and when they came there, they laid Galley's Body down in the Kitchen at Scardefield's, and carried Chater into another Room; they drank every one a Dram, and Jackson and Carter asked Scardefield if he knew any Place to bury that Man in, and he said No; but they said he must go with them; and they got a Spade, and a Candle and Lanthorn, and they laid Galley on Horseback again, and he (the Witness) Carter, Little Sam, and Scardefield, went back for about a Mile, and he held the Horse whilst Scardefield, Carter, and Little Sam, went to find the Place to bury him in; and when they had found it, Carter and Sam came back to him, and left Scardefield to dig the Grave; they went and buried him there, and returned back to Scardefield's again; that Jackson told them, that whilst they were burying Galley, he and Little Harry went to carry Chater to old Mills's; that they buried Galley two or three Feet deep, in the Heart of a Sand-Pit, about three or four, or five o'Clock in the Morning.

Being cross-examined, and asked by Carter, whether he (Carter) struck Galley? answered, That they all struck him.

Being asked, at the Request of the Prisoners Counsel, what was the Consequence of that Thrust that Little Harry gave Galley, when he fell the last Time? answered, That he thought by the Fall Galley's Neck was broke, because as soon as he was down, he gave himself a Turn, and stretched out his Hands and Legs, and never stirred or spoke afterwards; that Galley was not falling, 'till Little Harry gave him the Push: Said he did not know the Parish of Rogate, or that the Place where Galley died was within that Parish, any otherwise than that he had been there since, and several People said it was the Parish of Rogate.

He was then asked, whether the Gravelly Knap was in the County of Southampton or County of Sussex? answered, That he could not tell; that he had never heard, as he remembered, what County that Place was in, but he was carried thither last Friday, to see the Place, and he shewed to some People, then present, the Spot of Ground where Galley fell off the Horse, and he believed he should know one of the Men that were with him.

John Afllett being called up, Steele said, he was one of the Men that was there.

Afllett was then sworn, and proved that he was with Steele and some Dragoons on Friday last; that Steele pointed down to the Ground with a Stick, and said, "There the Man died!" That he (the Witness) took particular notice of that Place, and is sure it was in Sussex; that he now lives at Harting, and was born and bred just by, and had lived there ever since he was a Lad, and borne the Offices of Surveyor and Constable,

VOL. IX.

Steele, on Cross-examination, said, he knew the Place very well again, by the little gravelly rising of the Ground.

William Scardefield proved the same as in the former Trial, with the following Facts relating to the Burial of Galley; that one of the Gang asked him if he knew the Place where they laid up some Goods about a Year and a half ago, and he told him he did; upon which the Man said, "You must go along with us;" but the Witness told him his Wife was ill, and he could not leave the House; and then Carter came in and asked for a Lanthorn, and Edmund Richards told him he must go with them; to which he replied, If he must go, he must; that when he came down the Hill a little way from his own House, he saw two Companies, one on the right and the other on the left; that Carter, Steele, and a short Man he did not know, went on to the Place, which was about three Quarters of a Mile back again; he found the Place, and one of them came up after him, and he told him where it was; upon which they brought the Horse up to a rough kind of a Dell, and the short Man fell a-digging, and it being a very cold Night, he (the Witness) took the Spitter and dug to keep himself warm; there seemed to him to be a Man upon the Horse, and it fell like a Man into the Pit, and they covered it up; he believed it to be the Body of a Man, but he did not help to put it in, and was about three or four Yards from it; he never went nigh the Ground afterwards, and did not see the Body of a Man upon the Horse afterwards, or any where else; that the Earth was thrown over the Pit, and the short Man did most of the Work; and he did not enquire, or choose to ask any Questions about it.

Edward Sanes proved the finding the Body of a dead Man, about the 15th of September, in a Fox Earth, within three Quarters of a Mile of Raife; that there were Boots upon the Legs, and a Glove upon one Hand; that the Body was very much perished, and had a Waistcoat and Breeches on.

John Greentree produced a Coat, which he took up beyond Harting Pond in the publick Road, on the 15th of February last; and swore that there were some Writings and a Letter-Case in the Pocket, which he said he should know if he was to see them again.

Upon this, a Parchment was delivered into Court by Mr. Battine, a Justice of the Peace, in whose Custody it had been left, and shewn to the Witness, who said it was the same that he found in the Coat Pocket.

It was then read in Court, and appeared to be a Deputation under the Hands of the Commissioners of the Customs, dated the 1st of April 1731, appointing William Galley to be a Tidesman in the Port of Southampton.

William Galley, the Son of the Deceased, looked at the Coat which the other Witness produced, and proved it to be his Father's Coat.

John Greentree said, the Coat was bloody when he found it.

The King's Counsel submitted it here, upon which the Prisoners being called upon to make their Defence,

The Prisoner Carter said, he never intended to hurt the Man, and never struck him, and only intended to carry him away to take Care of him, 'till they knew what became of Dimer; and that he had not any Witnesses.

The Prisoner Jackson had nothing to say.

Mr. Justice Foster opened to the Jury the Substance of the Indictment, as before set forth, and told them, that where several People join to do an Act, in itself unlawful, and Death ensues from any thing done in Prosecution of that unlawful Design, they will be all considered as Principals in Murder, if they were all present, aiding or abetting therein; that it was not necessary that each of the Prisoners at the Bar should be guilty of every single Abuse that was offered to the Deceased, in the long Series of Barbarities the Witnesses for the Crown had laid before them; if all or any of those Abuses contributed to his Death, and the Prisoners at the Bar were engaged in the several Designs against him, and present, aiding and abetting the others, they will be guilty within this Indictment.

He then summed up the Evidence, and applied it to the Case of the Prisoners.

The Jury, after some little Consultation together, gave their Verdict, That William Jackson and William Carter were both Guilty.

The Counsel for the Crown then moved for Judgment; and the Prisoners being set to the Bar, and severally asked what they had to say why Judgment of Death should not pass on them, and none of them offering any thing in Arrest of Judgment, Mr. Justice Foster spoke to them as follows:

Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, William Jackson, William Carter, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger; you have been convicted upon very full and satisfactory Evidence of the Murder of Daniel Chater; three of you as Principals, and the rest as Accessories before the Fact.

And you William Jackson and William Carter stand farther convicted, as Principals in the Murder of William Galley.

Deliberate Murder is most justly ranked among the highest Crimes human Nature is capable of; but those you have respectively been convicted of, have been attended with Circumstances of very high and uncommon Aggravation.

The Persons who have been the Objects of your Fury, were travelling on a very laudable Design, the Advancement of publick Justice. For this they were beset in their Inn, tempted to drink to Excess, and then laid asleep in an inner Room, while a Consultation was held in what Manner to dispose of them; and in the end a Resolution was taken to carry them to some distant Place, and to dispatch them by some Means or other.

In consequence of this Resolution they were set on Horseback, and exercised with various Kinds of Cruelty for five Hours together, 'till one of them sunk under the Hardships he suffered, and died upon the Road.

The other was carried to a Place of safe Custody, there kept chained on a Heap of Turf, expecting his Doom, for three Days. During this dreadful Interval, a second Consultation was held, and a Resolution taken to dispatch him too: Not a single Man, of thirteen who were present, offering one Word in his Behalf.

He was accordingly hurried to his Death; and though he begged earnestly to live but one Day longer, that small Respite was denied him. I will not repeat every Circumstance; but I cannot forbear putting you in mind mind of one. When the poor Man was told he must die that very Night, some of you advised him to say his Prayers, and accordingly he did address himself to Prayer.

One would have hoped that this Circumstance should have softened your Hearts, and turned you from the evil Purpose you were bent upon. Happy had it been for you, if you had then reflected, that God Almighty was Witness to every thing that passed among you, and to all the Intention of your Hearts!

But while the Man, under great Distraction of Thought, was recommending his Soul to Mercy, he was interrupted in his Devotion by two of you, in a Manner I scarce know how to repeat.

I hope your Hearts have been long since softened to a proper Degree of Contrition for these Things; and that you have already made a due Preparation for the Sentence I am now to pass upon you.

If you have not, pray lose not one Moment more. Let not Company, or the Habit of Drinking, or the Hopes of Life, divert you from it; for Christian Charity obliges me to tell you, that your Time in this World will be very short.

Nothing now remains but that I pass the Sentence upon you which the Law of your Country, in Conformity to the Law of God, and to the Practice of all Ages and Nations, has already pronounced upon the Crime you have been guilty of. This Court doth therefore award that you Benjamin Tapner, William Carter, John Hammond, John Cobby, Richard Mills the elder, Richard Mills the younger, and William Jackson, and each of you, shall be conveyed from hence to the Prison from whence you came, and from thence you shall be led to the Place of Execution, where you shall be severally hanged by the Neck, until you shall be dead; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls!

After Sentence the Prisoners were carried back to Chichester Jail. The Court were pleased to order them all for Execution the very next Day, and that the Bodies of Jackson, Carter, Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond, the five Principals, should be hung in Chains. Accordingly they were carried from the Jail, to a Place called the Broyle, near Chichester; where, in the Presence of great Numbers of Spectators on Thursday the 19th Day of January 1748-9, about Two o'Clock in the Afternoon, all of them were executed except Jackson, who died in Jail some few Hours after Sentence of Death was pronounced upon him.

The Heinousness of the Crimes of so notorious Offenders may possibly excite in the Reader a Desire to be informed of their respective Behaviour, whilst under Sentence of Death, and at the Place of Execution; to satisfy which is subjoined the following authentick Account, under the Hands of the several Clergymen who attended them alternately in Jail, and together at the Place of Execution.

"The first Time I went to the Malefactors under Condemnation, being the Evening after Sentence was passed upon them, I prayed with them all; viz. Carter, Tapner, Cobby, Hammond, and the two Mills's (Jackson being dead just before I went to the Jail); but many Persons being present, I had no Opportunity of saying any thing material, and therefore told them I would visit them early the next Morning, which I did accordingly.

"After Prayers, I talked with them about their unhappy Condition, and the heinous Crimes that brought them into it. I asked them, if they desired to receive the Sacrament; they all and each of them begged that I would administer it to them; accordingly I attended them again about Ten o'Clock for that Purpose, and during the whole Time of my performing that Office, they all behaved with great Decency and Devotion, especially Carter and Tapner.

"Afterwards I put the following Questions to them, and desired they would be sincere in their Answers as dying Men; First, Whether they did not acknowledge the Sentence that was passed upon them to be just, and what they highly deserved? Carter, the most sensible and penitent amongst them, first answered, Yes; as did afterwards Tapner, Cobby, and Hammond; but the two Mills's did not.

"2dly, I asked them whether they forgave every Body? They all and each answered, They forgave all the World. Tapner then owned, that Edmund Richards and another were the Cause of his Ruin, but yet he forgave them.

"Carter laid his Ruin to Jackson. "JOHN SMYTH, Curate of St. Pancrass, in Chichester."

"Both Carter and Tapner, a few Hours before their Execution, confest'd to me, that they, with several others, assembled together, with a Design to rescue Dimer out of Chichester Jail; that the only Person amongst them, who had Arms, was Edmund Richards; but that being disappointed by a Number of Persons who had promised to join them from the East, their Scheme was frustrated, and their Purpose carried no farther into Execution; that one Stringer was at the Head of this Confederacy, but not present with them at the Time of their assembling together.

"SIMON HUGHS, Vicar of Donnington in Sussex."

"Benjamin Tapner, of West Stoke in Sussex, Labourer, aged Twenty-seven, before he was turned off, owned the Justice of his Sentence, and desired all young Persons to take Warning by his untimely End, and avoid bad Company, which was his Ruin. When in Jail, before he was brought out for Execution, he said, he did not remember he put the Rope about Cbater's Neck.

"William Carter, of Rowland's Castle, in Hampshire, Thatcher, aged Thirty-nine, both at the Place of Execution, and in the Jail, confest the Justice of the Sentence passed upon him, and in both Places acted more suitably to a Person in such unhappy Circumstances than any of them. He likewise at the Gallows, in the same Manner as Tapner did, cautioned every one against those Courses, that had brought him to so shameful an End. Tapner and Carter, when all the Ropes were "fixed, shook Hands, but what, or whether any Words then passed between them, was not heard.

"Richard Mills the elder, of Trotton in Sussex, Colt-Breaker, aged 63, was unwilling to own himself guilty of the Fact for which he died, and said, he never saw Chater; but being asked whether he never heard him, as he was confined so long, and in so terrible a Condition, in the next Room to that in which he generally sat? made no Answer.

"Richard Mills the younger, of Stebham in Sussex, Colt-Breaker, Son of the aforesaid Richard Mills, aged 37, would willingly have been thought innocent; and it being put to him, whether he made that Speech about the Council of War, &c. and whether he was not at the Consultation? denied both; but in the latter, Tapner confronted him, and said, "Yes, Major, you was there." To which Mills replied, "Ay, for a Quarter of an Hour, or so," or to that Purpose. It so happened that his Rope was first fixed to the Gallows, and a considerable Space of Time was taken up in fixing the rest; which Interim he might have much better employed, than he did, gazing one while at the Spectators, and then at the Hangman (who was on the Gallows, tying the Ropes of the other Malefactors), till the Cart was almost ready to drive away.

"John Cobby, of Sidlesham in Sussex, Labourer, aged 30, appeared to be very much dejected, and said little in Jail, and nothing at the Gallows.

"John Hammond, of Bersfled in Sussex, Labourer, aged 40, seemed likewise very much dejected, and had little to say for himself, excepting his pretending that the Threats of Jackson, Carter, and the rest, were the Occasion of his being concerned in the Murder.

"Cobby's Excuse was much the same.

"They all, except the two Mills's, seemed sensible of the heinous Nature of the Crime for which they died, and behaved as became Men in their unhappy Condition, more particularly Carter; but Mills, the Father and Son, appeared hardened and unaffected, both in the Jail and at the Gallows; especially the Son, who was most insensible, and seemed by his Behaviour, which has been mentioned before, even when his Rope was fixed to the Gallows, to be as little moved at what he was about to suffer, as the most unconcerned Spectator. However, just before the Cart drove away, he and his Father seemed to offer up some Prayers to God.

"R. Sandham, Vicar of Subdeanry in Chichester. "John Smyth, Curate of St. Pancrass."

As Jackson died so soon after Condemnation, no other Account can be given of him, than that he was of Welsworth, near Rowland's Castle, in Hampshire, Labourer, aged about fifty Years; and that being very ill, all the Time of his Trial, as he had been for a considerable Time before, was shocked at the Sentence of Death, and the Apprehension of being hung in Chains, to such a Degree, as hastened and brought on his Death; before he could pay the Forfeit of his Life, in that Ignominy to which he was most deservedly doomed, and more peculiarly due to him as a Ring-leader in these most cruel and horrid Barbarities and Murders.

He professed the Romish Religion some Years before his Death, and that he died a Roman Catholick may very reasonably be presumed from a printed Paper which was found carefully sewed up in a Linnen Purse in his Waistcoat Pocket, immediately after his Death, supposed to be a Popish Relique, and containing the following Words, viz.

Sancti tres Reges
Gaspar, Melchior, Balthasar,
Orate pro Nobis nunc & in Hora
Mortis Nostrae.

Ces Billets ont touché aux Trois Testes de S. S. Rois à Cologne. Ils sont pour Les Voyageurs, contre Les Mal-Heurs de Chemins, Maux de Tête, Mal-caducque, Fievres, Sorcellerie, toute sorte de Malefice, Mort subite.

In English thus:

Ye Three Holy Kings,
Gaspar, Melchior, Balthasar,

Pray for us now, and in the Hour of Death.

These Papers have touch'd the Three Heads of the Holy Kings at Cologne. They are to preserve Travellers from Accidents on the Road, Head-Achs, Falling-Sickness, Fevers, Witch-craft, all Kinds of Mischief, and sudden Death.

The Body of William Carter was hung in Chains, in the Portsmouth Road, near Raikes in Sussex; the Body of Benjamin Tapner, on Rook's Hill, near Chichester; and the Bodies of John Cobby and John Hammond upon the Sea-Coast, near a Place called Selsey Bill, in Sussex, where they are seen at a great Distance, both East and West.

The Bodies of Mills, the Father and Son, having neither Friend or Relation to take them away, were thrown into a Hole, dug for that Purpose, very near the Gallows, into which was likewise thrown the Body of Jackson. Just by is now erected a Stone, having the following Inscription, viz.

"Near this Place was buried the Body of William Jackson, a proscribed Smuggler, who, upon a special Commission of Oyer and Terminer, held at Chichester, on the 16th Day of January 1748-9, was, with William Carter, attainted for the Murder of William Galley, a Custom-house Officer; and who likewise was, together with Benjamin Tapner, John Cobby, John Hammond, Richard Mills the elder, and Richard Mills the younger, his Son, attainted for the Murder of Daniel Chater; but dying in a few Hours after Sentence of Death was pronounced upon him, he thereby escap'd the Punishment which the Heinousness of his complicated Crimes deserved, and which was the next Day most justly inflicted upon his Accomplices.

"As a Memorial to Posterity, and a Warning to this and succeeding Generations,
This Stone is erected,
A. D. 1749."
